Mr. Sullivan rose to move the above resolution, for the adoption of which he trusted he should shew sufficient reason. He had asked on a recent occasion whether any instructions had been forwarded to India, or information received from that country, relating to the case of the rajah. The answer was, none had been forwarded or received. The Court, it was further stated, did not intend to decide till they had the opinion of the Government of India on the subject. On inquiry, he found that the Governor-General had given a positive judgment on it, and therefore the Court had been summoned. This, he must beg them to understand, was not the old Sattara question, but quite a different one. (Hear.) The guilt or innocence of the rajah had nothing to do with the question now before the Court. The question to be decided was, was Government bound to recognise the right of succession of the adopted son of the late rajah? He maintained the affirmative of that question. (Hear.) By treaty, the territory had been assigned to the rajah, his heirs and successors. Now by the word successors was evidently meant adopted heirs, and not heirs at law. This construction was borne out by the Mahratta and Persian translations of the treaty. The right of the rajah to adopt a son was clearly recognised by the framers of the treaty, and it was not only a right but a duty on the part of the rajah to do so, and he (Mr. Sullivan) maintained that no act of the rajah could deprive him of that right. Allusion had been made to the Gaicwar, and other native princes of India, who had refused to recognize adoptions made by some of their jagheerdars; and the inference drawn was, that the rajah could not adopt without our permission; but the rajah was not in the position of a jagheerdar of our Government, and we could not assume the power of a lord paramount over him. That the rajah was quite independent, was proved by the correspondence that took place at the time of the treaty. Lord Hastings wrote, that "he had assented to the proposal to extend the original plan of merely putting the rajah in possession of Sattara into making it a separate government." Both Mr. Elphinstone and Lord Hastings considered him as an independent prince, and the present Government was also bound to consider him so. They were bound by the treaty; beyond which they could not be required to go, but up to which justice compelled them to act. (Hear.) The adoption of the boy by the rajah was, in his opinion, perfectly legal. As the rajah was an independent prince, he was the proper authority to bestow the paramount sanction to the adoption. Perhaps there would be some who would take up the old ground, and say, we have raised the rajah to the throne we had a right to control his movements, and even dethrone him. Various citations had been made from Mr. Prinsep's work to shew the animus of those who gave the territory of Sattara to the rajah, and in addition to those he would only read two short extracts; one from Sir Thomas Munro, and the other from Mountstuart Elphinstone. On the 29th March, 1818, Sir

Thomas Munro wrote thus:—"I am extremely anxious to hear that the ceremony of placing the rajah on the mummah has been completed, as I am of opinion that well-arranged relations between the rajah and the British Government will have the effect of inducing the neighbouring jagheers to renounce their allegiance to the Peishwa." On the 18th June, in the same year, Mr. Elphinstone wrote to the Governor-General, "Your Excellency's orders left me the choice of giving the rajah a jagheer or a small sovereignty. As the Mahrattas did not seem inclined to leave the Peishwa's standard, it seemed to me advisable, in order to remove the grounds of the faith to that prince, to establish a separate native power in the person of the rajah." As well might the powers of 1815 arrogate to themselves the right to depose any of the sovereigns they then raised, as we to depose the rajah. (Hear.) We must be faithful to our treaties. Until the Court could shew any treaty by which the rajah alienated his innate right of adoption, he and every one else would consider the rajah as standing in the plenitude of his father's powers.

Mr. Hume briefly seconded the motion. The Company was in an awkward position. They were both prosecutors and judge in this unfortunate case. It was to be regretted that there was no other authority but their own to whom they could appeal. The India Board might, indeed, have been an umpire, but it had made itself a partisan throughout. He should be content to submit the question to any impartial authority, and abide by their decision; but as it now stood, there was no authority to whom to appeal. He doubted if the Directors who at first decided the question, would have brought in the judgment they did if they had then known all that has been subsequently disclosed.

Mr. Weeding said that the rajah entered into a treaty with the Company on certain conditions. He had violated those conditions, and therefore had forfeited all the advantages to which he would otherwise have been entitled. (Hear.) He had ceased to be the Rajah of Sattara when he appointed the boy whose claim was now set up, and therefore the adoption of the child could not be recognized. The rajah could not appoint a successor to that kingdom, which was no longer his. (Hear.)

Mr. Lewis thought that the suggestion of the late Chairman should be attended to. That gentleman, in 1840, said the punishment of the rajah's alleged crimes ought to be visited on the rajah alone, and not affect his successors. If that were proper to be adopted in 1840, how much more so in 1847. (Hear.) The child had a double claim. He was next in blood, and the adopted son of the rajah. If there were ever a treaty, the terms of which were clear beyond common, a treaty in which the acuteness of human intellect could detect no flaw, it was the treaty with the Rajah of Sattara. The territory of Sattara was not ceded to the rajah for a time, but in perpetuity (hear); and not to him alone, but to his heirs and successors. (Hear.) What could be clearer than this? Just let them suppose they had an estate in fee simple, and were to die to-morrow, would they not think it hard to be told they could not leave that estate to any one? If it was intended by the treaty that the sovereignty should descend to lineal heirs, it ought to have been so expressed, and we could not now amend our former remissions. It was an old maxim of the Roman law, that "he who could not explain himself, it is the worse for him, and he must abide by the consequences. He cannot alter his expressions afterwards." So far as the words of the treaty went, there could be no mistake. As to the eligibility of the adopted son to succeed to the throne, there was no room for doubt. At a recent Court, it was shewn that the first of the words which in the English version of the treaty were rendered "heirs and successors," signified in Persian and Mahratta, an heir-at-law; and the second, the one translated into English by the word "successors," signified an adopted heir; so that in this respect there could be no mistake. (Hear.) The child appointed by the rajah claimed as the adopted son of the rajah, and as the nearest of blood to the rajah and Appa Sahib. Appa Sahib had also appointed a successor, but he was a far more remote relation, and was also adopted when Appa was in articulo mortis. The boy appointed by the rajah was not only the adopted son of the elder of the two brothers, but his mother was present at the time of his adoption, and gave him up, according to the usual custom, which was not the case with the boy appointed by Appa, whose father was absent at the time of his adoption. (Hear.) The only question was, who was the right heir? and he contended that the child adopted by the rajah was. By recognizing his claim, the Court would put a stop to the agitation on the subject. The selection of that boy would be both just and expedient. (Hear.)

Mr. Fielder was clearly of opinion the crimes of the rajah debarred him of the right of adoption. (Hear.) We had raised the rajah to the throne on certain conditions, the violation of which was to be followed by a forfeiture of the advantages conferred by the Court. Those conditions he had violated, and consequently he forfeited his right to adopt an heir. (Hear.)

The Chairman.—In addressing a few words to the Court to-day, I shall first notice a remark that fell from Mr. Sullivan. He said he understood we had received positive information of the course the Governor-General intended to pursue. Now I beg to tell the hon. gentlemen such is not the case. (Hear.) We have not received any communication from India except the one announcing the death of the rajah. (Hear.) Another observation, that fell from Mr. Hume, also deserves notice. The hon. proprietor said there was no authority to which to appeal in this case. Now, I beg to say that there is an authority, an authority that is much superior to any we possess. I allude to Parliament. (Hear, hear.) Let this case be carried there, and by the decision of that body of course we must be bound; but I must say, it seems to me very hard that this Court should be continually summoned to consider a question on which it has decided over and over again (in which decision, I may observe, in passing, I entirely concur), and a question also on which, at this very moment, an adjourned discussion stands on the books of the House of Commons. (Hear, hear.) The quotations made by Mr. Sullivan, so far from supporting his position, in my opinion, do the reverse, and tell directly against him. (Hear.) I shall not detain the Court further, but shall pursue the course that has been followed on the last two or three discussions of this case, by moving that this Court do now adjourn. (Hear, hear.)

The Deputy-Chairman (Major-General Archibald Galloway, c.n.), said, I second that motion, on the same grounds as my hon. friend. It appears to me, that this Court has been summoned for the express purpose of opening the question from the beginning. (No, no.) Why you must do so before you can say whether the adopted son of the late rajah is entitled to succeed to the throne. But I maintain that the rajah, by his own act, has put himself out of Court. He has violated those conditions, on the observance of which alone depended his continuance on the throne. (Hear, hear.) By the terms of the treaty, he was bound to act in subordination to the British Government, and by the advice of the resident at his Court. Now these conditions he did not adhere to. The Deputy-Chairman here read the fifth article of the treaty, by which the rajah undertook to have no intercourse with any one not under his authority, except through the medium of the Resident. Now, he continued, in opposition to that article, the rajah, contrary to the advice of the resident, deputed agents to this country to bring his case before the Directors. Such an act, I hold, was directly opposed to the terms of the treaty. We have the rajah's confession, under his own hand and seal, of sending those agents to England. In Yad, No. 7, 18th June, 1836, the rajah says: "In consequence of a difference of construction put on original documents by the British Government, and which appears to be in opposition to the rights of the Sircar, and to prevent the chance of future misconstruction, this Government proposes to lay its claims before the Government at Calcutta and the Honourable the Court of Directors, with all the circumstances connected therewith; in the event of its not being decided or finally settled by them, to bring the same to the notice of Parliament and his Majesty in Europe; those articles that can be settled, it is well; and those that cannot, to get them settled by such reference. Syed Meer is the person selected for this duty. He has been made acquainted with all the papers, &c., connected with the disputed rights and interests of the sircar." Now is, or is not, that having intercourse contrary to the terms of the treaty, and to the advice of the resident, for Col. Lodwick waited on the rajah, and strongly dissuaded him from the course he was about to adopt. This is a question of demonstration; and is capable of being conclusively and fully proved. Of those who complain that the rajah had not a trial, I ask what fairer trial can be had than that in which a man is witness against himself. (Hear.) Under these circumstances, the right of adoption was alienated from the rajah, and you are now required to recognize the claim of the adopted son of one who had denuded himself of the right of adoption. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. George Thompson thought that, after the speech they had just heard, the friends of the rajah would not be open to censure if they went into the case de novo. (Hear, hear, and Oh, oh.) He held that the conduct of the rajah did not alienate his right of adoption; but as the Deputy-Chairman had spoken on the subject which had been avoided by all other speakers, namely, the question of the criminality of the rajah, there seemed nothing else to do but to go into the merits of the whole case. (No, no.)

The Deputy-Chairman.—I only alluded to a single point.

Mr. George Thompson.—The Deputy-Chairman had taken an entirely new view of the matter. He was the first who had said that sending an agent to England was a crime on the part of the rajah.

The Deputy Chairman said that it was not a crime, but an act contrary to the terms of the treaty.

Mr. George Thompson, the Deputy Chairman, was not aware that Sir Robert Grant, said the act was not illegal. The hon. gentleman had asserted the doctrine that it was illegal for a native prince, in treaty with our Government to send an agent to this country.

The Deputy Chairman.—The hon. proprietor is quite mistaken taking what I said. What I said was, that the rajah was under an engagement to us not to communicate with any not under his authority, except by means of the resident at his court, and that he had broken that engagement. That was all I said.

Mr. George Thompson still asserted that the hon. gentleman had enunciated the monstrous doctrine that a native prince justly forfeited his throne and right of adoption by sending an agent to this country. Why this would preclude all correspondence on the part of such a prince with his friends in England. In considering the case of Syed Meer, they should recollect the extreme provocation that the rajah had received. For a long time previously to the appointment of the agent, the rajah had received no answers from Government to his letters. That single act was scarcely enough to justify the dethronement of the prince. He considered that the boy adopted by the rajah was the rightful heir to the throne, and if they did not place him on it they would do more to convince the world of their injustice than they had yet done. To place that child on the throne would be an act of great justice to the late rajah. Looking to the sufferings that men had endured—thinking the charges made against him to have been false—remembering his high origin, and the infirmities of mind and temper to which we were all, more or less, subject—recollecting, too, that the rajah might have been possessed of large ideas, which proved a source of disquietude within him—remembering all this, were they asking too much of the Court in soliciting them to bestow the territory of Sattara on the boy adopted by the rajah—in asking them to give it to a member of the house of Sivaje, and not to an alien and a stranger, but to the nearest of blood, to the son of a man who was respected and looked up to by all who lived at or ever visited Sattara? (Hear, hear.) By so bestowing the territory they would allay the regret of members of that Court and the agitation on the subject. (Hear.) The divisions and disputes on that case would be stopped by adopting the course he had pointed out, and which he believed to be most judicious. As a benevolent man, he should be rejoiced at the gladness that would be brought by their proceedings to so many hearts. Gladly would he bury in oblivion all sources of past dispute, and the recognition of the adopted son of the late rajah would greatly lead to that end. (Hear.) He regretted the Chairman had not been able to give any positive information, but surely the Court must have their own opinion on the subject, and the proprietors would be grateful for any intimation of it.

Major Oliphant thought that the Chairman had so clearly stated at the last Court that no information had been received, and that the Court could not come to any decision till the opinion of the Governor-General was communicated to them, that he was surprised at the remark that had just fallen from the hon. proprietor. (Hear, hear.) The present resolution, though seemingly but a repetition of the terms of the treaty, was in effect almost a recognition of the claim of the adopted child of the late rajah. (Hear.) Glad as he should be to hear of the innocence of the rajah being acknowledged, he could not give his vote in favour of the resolution. The Court would not expect the Directors to come to a decision till they had grounds on which they could justify that decision to themselves and the world. (Hear.) The speech they had just heard reflected great credit on the hon. proprietor. (Hear.) He had appealed to the feelings of the Court, and not insisted on the claim of the boy as a right.

Mr. Sullivan said, the information on which the Court was summoned was contained in a letter from Benares, which stated that Major Macgregor had acquainted the servants and attendants of the late rajah that their pensions and allowances would be discontinued, sufficient being given to carry them back to Sattara, as the Governor-General could not recognize the claim of the boy adopted by the rajah. An opinion seemed to prevail that it was an advantage to the natives of India to be under our rule. That he denied, and his opinion rested on that of the highest authority. In 1817, Sir Thomas Munro said, "But even if all India should be brought under our rule, it is very questionable whether it would be advantageous to either party. Even if we could succeed in guarding against irruptions by the people, I doubt much if the condition of the natives would be improved.

They would, it is true, live under our laws and institutions, which would afford them more domestic protection, but it would be at the expense of independence." Sir John Malcolm said, "I consider it to be our best policy to support all native states and chiefs, and every means ought to be taken to prevent the whole of India being brought under our power." The Duke of Wellington said, "In my opinion, the extinction of native states will be injurious in the extreme to us. We should consider thousands of natives who had found employment under native governments, added to which would be the great difficulty of defending our boundary. As it is, we have enough to do, if not more than enough." That was in 1800, and since then we had nearly doubled our territory. The hon. proprietor then, in a few remarks, urged the adoption of the resolution.

The Chairman, in moving that the Court do now adjourn, said the speech of Mr. George Thompson was the best that had been made by the hon. proprietor in that Court.

The adjournment was then unanimously carried, no opposition whatever being offered.

RAIL INDIAN RAILWAY.—On the 18th inst. a meeting of this company was held. The report stated the directors had made a call of 2l. per share, to enable them to effect the deposit of 100,000l. with the East-India Company by the 1st of May. This amount had not been raised, and as the Company would not grant further time, application had been made to be allowed to commence with one section only, between Calcutta and the N.W. Provinces. This proposition had been sanctioned by the Court of Directors on condition that 60,000l. be forthwith deposited in the Company's treasury, and satisfactory proof be adduced within four months from July 4th inst., that the railway company will be able to raise one million sterling to be expended on the undertaking now suggested; the East-India Company paying five per cent. on the deposit. This course the railway company's directors recommended to be adopted, and passed a resolution that those shareholders who had responded to the call of 2l. should have that sum refunded to them, and that a new call of 2l. per share be made in lieu of that cancelled, it being understood that the whole of the call thus made be returned unless the contract with the East-India Company be completed to the satisfaction of a general meeting of the shareholders.

CAYLON RAILWAY.—At a meeting of this company, held on the 19th inst., the directors recommended that the scheme should remain in abeyance for the present. A call of five shillings per share was proposed to defray the expenses of the Company, but the opinion of the shareholders was to be taken on this point at a meeting to be held on the 1st August next.

JOHNSON AND COLE.—The 19th inst. was the day appointed for the last examination of Mr. Johnson at the Court of Bankruptcy, he having been absent in India when Mr. Cole obtained his certificate. THIS tragedy was printed for the fancy fair, held on the 21st and 22nd June last, in aid of the Governesses' Benevolent Institution. It bears evidence that the writer is a man of talent; indeed, some portions of it are beautifully expressed; and on the whole it is well worthy of perusal.

MR. SERJEANT STEPHEN'S NEW COMMENTARIES.

SECOND EDITION.—Just published in 4 vols. 8vo. 44 4s. cloth.

(Dedicated, by permission, to her Majesty the Queen.)

NEW COMMENTARIES on the LAWS of ENGLAND, in which are interwoven, under a New and Original Arrangement of the General Subject, all such parts of the Work of BLACKSTONE as are applicable to the present times; together with full but compendious Expositions of the Modern Improvements of the Law up to May, 1848; the Original and adopted Materials being throughout the Work Typographically distinguished from each other. BY HENRY JOHN STEPHEN, Serjeant-at-Law. The second Edition prepared for the press by JAMES STEPHEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Extract from the Author's Advertisement to the present Edition.—"The correction of the Work, in reference to the new Statutes and Cases (which are brought down to May, 1848), and the revision of the Press in general, has been confided by the Author to his Son; his own retirement from professional practice, and the transfer of his attention to official duties, rendering him less competent than formerly to labours of that description. But the sheets have been invariably laid before him during the progress of the printing, and he feels himself able to vouch for their accuracy."

HENRY BUTTERWORTH, Law Bookseller and Publisher, 7, Fleet-street.

H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS,

&c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that patronage which it has ever been their anxious wish to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the utmost despatch will be used in the shipments from London.

H. and T. PEAT feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are not of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior qualities. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12 lb. saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9 lbs., at present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. P. cannot be accountable for any damage the same may receive after shipment.

WORTHY OF PUBLIC ATTENTION!!!

CHAPMAN'S UNIVERSAL PILLS, a combination of the most approved virtues of the Vegetable Kingdom, blended together in such due and just proportions, as to form at length an article which, they confidently venture to affirm, will be found superior to any thing of the kind hitherto made known; they contain not a particle of Mercury, or any other pernicious ingredients, but act almost imperceptibly, but none the less surely, as a gentle purifier of the blood and invigorator of the system. Their private use has been for many years co-extensive with that of the Universal Salve, to which they will be found most valuable agents.

The Proprietors might say much in their favour, and would enlarge upon their merits, were they not anxious that they should stand upon their own, and not have the appearance of being (as is too commonly the case) pushed into notice. They will, therefore, content themselves by saying that, in all cases of Bilious Attacks, Indigestion, Constipation of the Bowels, Sick Head-ache, frequent Nausea, Chronic Rheumatism, Lumbago, violent Cough or Croup, Jaundice, and in short all Internal Diseases, their sale will be found to be invaluable.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each. Wholesale Depot, 6, Swallow Place, Regent Street.
Be particular in asking for CHAPMAN'S UNIVERSAL PILLS.
Agents:—Messrs. HANWAY and Co., SAWYER and Co., Oxford Street; and by most of the respectable Chemists in the United Kingdom.

CURED by HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS,
WOUNDS in a LEG after more than THREE YEARS' SUFFERING.—The wife of Mr. James P. Springale, schoolmaster, of the town of St. Patrick, Grenada, had been suffering with an ulcerated leg for more than three years, which was so bad that it baffled the skill of all the professional practitioners in the island, who could not possibly heal it. After every other remedy had failed, Holloway's Ointment and Pills were resorted to, and by their powerful efficacy the wounds were soon healed, and a perfectly sound cure effected. These medicines cured all other ills in the cure of scrofula or king's evil, glandular or other natural swellings.
Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 12th May, 1847, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits :—

LADIES TRAVELLING, or otherwise exposed to the scorching rays of the sun and heated particles of dust, will find ROWLANDS' KALYDON a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity of the Skin. The numerous varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions, Sunburn, Freckles, Tan, and Discolorations, are pleasingly eradicated by the Kalydon, and the Skin rendered delicately soft and clear. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by the Queen, the Court and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and the several Courts of Europe; together with the "élite" of the Aristocracy, from the sultry climes of India and the drawing-rooms of Calcutta and Madras to the frozen realms of the Czar and the saloons of St. Petersburg and Moscow.—Price 4s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. per bottle. Beware of spurious "KALYDONS," containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and which, by their repellent action, endanger health.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

ALTHOUGH but a few days have elapsed since the arrival of the last Indian mail, the intelligence brought by that from Bombay is neither short in its quantity, nor destitute of interest. It has another feature still more pleasing; namely, that its complexion, so far as politics are concerned, is decidedly favourable.

At Lahore, whence the last advices are dated the 4th of June, the utmost tranquillity prevailed. The recent plot, if it may be so termed, turns out, as we expected, a trumpety affair. A few sepoys, of bad character, out of a force of 7,000 native troops, had been successfully tampered with; meetings were held, and a wild and impracticable scheme was talked of, in which the massacre of the British officers, and the capture of the city, by the secret introduction of an insurgent army (which had to be raised), were assumed to be matters of course. There seems now to be no doubt of the complicity of Rani Chunda, the queen-mother, in this plot; that she had contributed money, and that the Moolshi Gunga Ram, one of the chief conspirators, was her confidant and secret agent. This man had been implicated in all the intrigues since the deposition of Lal Sing, and his co-conspirator, Khan Sing, had been dismissed from the Sikh service for misconduct. They were convicted upon the clearest evidence of having intrigued with Meoolraj, of Mooltan, and held out promises to certain persons, if they would engage in the project. The conspirators had met nearly every night for some weeks; the man Gidaba had acted as principal agent in the corruption of our men, of whom not more than twenty-two had been seduced. A promise of sixty rupees per month, with cash in hand, might have acted more powerfully upon sordid minds, and tempted a greater number to become traitors.

Some disturbance had been created in the neighbourhood of Lahore, by the proceedings of a man named Maharaj Sing, a gooroo, or priest, enjoying a reputation for sanctity amongst the Sikhs, who had raised the standard of revolt near Pathankote, and collected about 5,000 followers. Three separate corps were instantly despatched against him; but, owing to the treachery (it is said) of certain khardana and others, our troops were misled, and the gooroo crossed the Ravee, and proceeded to Sealkote, afterwards to Shaikhoopra. The latest intelligence reports that one of the moveable columns, pushing on their cavalry and artillery, were within twenty miles of the insurgents, who evidently meant to fight.

The accounts of and from Mooltan afford reason to believe that the force of the Dewan has been much exaggerated. All his professions of non-participation in the attack upon the two unfortunate gentlemen, Lieut. Anderson and Mr. Van Agnew, are ascertained to be hypocritical; it appears to have been a premature commencement of a scheme for overpowering the British and expelling them from the country, in conjunction with other parties in the capital and elsewhere. Immediately upon intelligence of the assassination reaching Lahore, a Sikh force of 3,000 horse and foot was sent to the frontier of the operations of this detachment no accounts have appeared. At this time Lieutenant Edwardes was upon the Indus, with a small force of the regiment of infantry and 300 sowars, with two guns), engaged in settling the country and collecting the land-tax due to Moolraj, and occupying the town of Leiah, on the left bank of the Indus, midway between Mahomed Rojan and Zeman Shah. Hearing of the affair at Mooltan, and finding himself exposed to risk, many of his Sikh soldiers deserting him on hearing the rumour of a general rising, he crossed the river into the Deerajat, whence he wrote to the Khan of Bhawalpore (on the Scinde side of Mooltan), to make a demonstration which should prevent Moolraj from executing any design against him (Lieutenant Edwardes), or against Colonel Cortlandt, who commanded the garrison of Dhera Ismael Khan; and the Khan lost no time in making preparations to act. A party of 300 horse had been left by Lieutenant Edwardes to complete the collection of the revenue at Leiah, where they were attacked, on the 18th of May, by 400 Mooltan horse, with ten zumbooraks (light field-guns), who were completely defeated, with the loss of their guns. Meanwhile, Colonel Cortlandt, with his force, amounting to about 4,000 men, quitted Dhera Ismael Khan, and proceeded to the southward, by the base of the mountains, being joined on his way by a Belooche chief named Melah Khan, with 100 of his tribe, who were sent to take the fortress of Sunghur,—a place to the west of Attock,—which surrendered after six hours' fighting, the garrison retreating upon Mooltan. Another Belooche chief, named Kora Khan, Khosa, soon after joined the Colonel, who despatched him with 800 of his tribe, horse and foot, against the fort of Dhera Ghazee Khan, the second city in the province. The Belooche chief seems to have executed his orders with great zeal, expedition, and success. He marched his men along the skirt of the hills, sending forward a messenger to the commandant of the fort with a summons to give it up. The Sikhs, however, resolved to have a fight for the place. They went out to give battle, and were defeated; the fort was surrendered, and the kardar slain. Colonel Cortlandt (who appears to have expected that the Belooches would have only amused the garrison) found the business over when he came up; and he occupied the town, where Lieutenant Edwardes joined him on the 20th of May, and on the morning of that day (according to a letter from Ferozepore in the Delhi Gazette of June 8) another engagement took place between the British forces and the Mooltanee insurgents, who were routed with great slaughter, their chief, Chatur Mull, being killed, and another chief, Lunga Mull, taken prisoner. The British officers had augmented their forces by the Patans and Belooches in the districts they marched through (who fought bravely); and whilst the troops of Moolraj are estimated at not more than 9,000, half of whom are not to be relied on, the loyal forces in the Deerajat amounted, by the latest advices, to about 7,000.

Whilst these operations were going on, our ally the Khan of Bhawalpore (whose conduct is said to be above praise), having received instructions from Sir F. Currië, early in May, to cross the river in force, and endeavour to collect the revenue of various districts, had made extensive preparations, so that by the 30th he was in a condition to cross the Indus and co-operate with Colonel Cortlandt. He had occupied Jalalpoor, Ghoreepoor, Shahapoor, and Salpoor, the kardar of the latter place having been taken prisoner. The Khan, whose own troops had been augmented by the Daoodputra jagheerdars, making a force of 5,000 horse and foot, was in such spirits that he had proposed to Colonel Cortlandt to make a conjoint march upon Mooltan and decide the affair at once. The troops on the Attock were also said to be moving down the line of the Indus from Peshawur and Bunnoo; so that three armies, each nearly as strong as that of Moolraj, were pressing towards his capital. The subjects of the Dewan on our side of the Indus, when summoned to his standard, refused, and proceeded to pay their respects to Major Jacob, commanding on the frontier. The Bombay Times anticipates that, whilst the Governor-General is meditating a journey to the frontier, and the Commander-in-Chief taking the field, as soon as the season permitted, with an army of 30,000 men, the Khan of Bhawalpore and Colonel Cortlandt would have settled the whole question, by subduing the province and seizing the refractory dewan.

The utmost tranquillity continued to prevail in both Upper and Lower Scinde, where the people were quietly pursuing their avocations; the only parties who evinced an inclination, at the commencement of the Mooltan outbreak, to take service with Moolraj, were some mercenaries in the pay of our ally, Meer Ali Moorad. Major Jacob had withdrawn the main body of the Scinde horse to his headquarters at Khanghur, leaving a detachment at Kusmere, on the verge of our territory. The troops were in the highest health and spirits.

Time had been afforded for observing the effects of the Mooltan affair in Affghanistan; and they appear slight. The news reached Cabul on the 6th of May, and produced no excitement; on the contrary, the Dost proposed to reduce his forces, because "there was no war, nor any chance of war." Parties inimical to the rule of Dost Mahomed are said to be forming at Cabul. The Delhi Gazette says:—

"Parties seem certainly forming, with a change in contemplation, it being asserted that the Kuzulbashos are looking towards the Kajar, while the Ghilzais, Khalberies, and Kabulees are thinking of a restoration of the Soodozale family, or the placing of Waseer Yar Mahomed of Herat, who is said to be an Ahkoonie, on the throne; but all uniting, more or less openly, in their growing dislike of the Barukzale rule."

The Candahar Sirdars are quarrelling amongst themselves. One of the Sirdars, Kohun Dil Khan, had assumed a superiority over the others, Meher and Rehem Dil Khan, who, with their nephews, called upon Kohun Dil Khan to arrange a partition of lands, men, and property. The latter was willing to let the other two have land in contract, but would not allow any division of the sovereignty. An open quarrel soon arose, and Kohun Dil Khan marched off in the direction of Giriskh, while the other two went off towards Cabul. Subsequently Kohun Dil Khan returned, and obtained possession of Candahar, of which Meher and Rehem Dil-Khan no sooner had advice than they marched against him, and blockaded the town, several skirmishes having previously occurred, in one of which some 700 men had fallen. According to the latest advices, the two brothers were pressing the siege of Candahar.

In the Trans- and Cis-Sutlej ceded states the disturbances on the other side of the Beas have met with no corresponding movement: every thing was tranquil and promised to continue so.

In Gwalior there was a little excitement, and a force had been despatched to reduce a refractory thakoor in the Paharghur district, thirty miles west, near the banks of the Chumbul. It consists of a wing of the 4th infantry, under Major Parker, 4 guns under Capt. Eyre, and a squadron of cavalry under Capt. Raikes. There is a report that the fort of Gwalior is about to be abolished.

Oude appears to be in its usual condition. The king still lavishes his money on low-born favourites, while the people suffer from the most grievous oppressions which tax-gathering ingenuity can devise. Fighting still continues in the districts betwixt the cultivators and the royal troops. A force had been sent against a recusant Rajah zemindar, who fled into the fort of Daoodpoor: this was assaulted and captured, the assailing party having two killed and nine wounded; the besieged thirty-five killed and wounded. The fort was then razed to the ground.

The letters from Hyderabad afford but a little better picture of the Nizam's dominions: one talookdar is turned out and replaced by another, the poor ryots suffering, instead of gaining, by the change.

The few additions to the local intelligence from Calcutta comprise one event of considerable importance—namely, the suspension of Mr. W. P. Grant from the office of Master in Equity, in consequence of his connection, as Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Union Bank, with certain transactions in that establishment. The judgment of the Chief Justice is given in extenso elsewhere. The step is said to be generally approved of. Mr. McPherson, of the Calcutta Bar, has been appointed to act as Master in Equity for the present. There have been some more meetings of the creditors and shareholders of the Union Bank; but, notwithstanding the efforts made by both parties, there appears little prospect of matters being amicably adjusted.

The monsoon has set in with unusual violence in Western India. It commenced on the evening of the 26th of May, nearly a week earlier than usual, when a furious thunderstorm raged over a surface of 600 miles from north to south, being simultaneous in its appearance, and nearly equal in its violence, all along the line and for a breadth of about fifty miles. An earthquake, extending over ten degrees of latitude and nearly as much of longitude, occurred at the same time with the thunderstorm, and was felt all along the line from Cambay to Simla, being most violent at Mount Aboo. Since then about thirty-five inches of rain had fallen, or nearly half the average amount of fall for the year. It continued to blow violently on the 19th of June, and to rain in torrents, all the low grounds being flooded. The Indus was said to be rapidly swelling; the rise commenced eighteen days earlier than usual. This unexpected rise of the river has suggested a plan for taking the Mooltanees by surprise, instead of waiting for the subsidence of the water:—"The flooded stream," says a writer, "alone gives us the full advantage of our steamers; and a flying enemy in the forks of such a river has no escape."

The markets at the different Presidencies had undergone but little change; the operations in that of Bombay were suspended by the monsoon. The money-market there is reported to be in a healthy condition; supplies of specie had arrived from China, and Government securities had improved in value.

BENGAL.

MEETING OF THE CREDITORS OF THE UNION BANK.

Pursuant to the terms of a resolution passed by the shareholders at their meeting on Saturday last, a meeting of the creditors was convened on Thursday afternoon, for the purpose of a scheme being submitted to them for consideration. The meeting was not very numerously attended. Mr. J. RICHARDS was voted to take the chair.

Mr. Morton, chairman of the Executive Committee, rose to explain to the creditors the object for which the meeting had been called. He informed them that, with a view to expedite the winding up of the affairs of the bank, and to save themselves from ruinous loss, the shareholders had been discussing a scheme for some time, and one having been prepared according to the terms of a resolution passed at their last meeting, would be now brought forward, and he hoped would receive the general assent of the creditors. Other schemes had been framed, but they had proved failures, in consequence of a distrust which was felt on the subject, and the question was asked whether those who made full payment of all they were called upon, would be more secure from liability than if they did not pay at all. Nor was this distrust removed by what had occurred in the case of a particular shareholder who, after he had paid both the call and the contribution, was still proceeded against at law. As was known, this happened from inadvertence, but it certainly had not produced the effect of allaying the doubts and alarm of the shareholders. The scheme that would be brought forward for consideration was framed on the principle that the shareholders should have a certain and absolute release as to all future liability, and only contingent on their paying the sums in which they might be severally assessed, at the same time holding out a proper guarantee to the creditors that the same would be paid by a given date. It was understood that the creditors would consent to give release to such proprietors who would come forward and pay 20 lacs; and the shareholders, as stated, were anxious to join in any plan of settlement which would tend to absolve them from further responsibility. He thought, however, that if the conditions of the plan were made very stringent, the native portion of the proprietors might probably be unwilling to join, and thereby occasion the failure of one more project for liquidation. It would consequently be a point of importance that any scheme adopted should be moderate in its terms, to insure the assent and co-operation of all classes. Mr. Morton then proceeded to allude to the plan which would be submitted to the meeting, and the leading points which it contained. It proposed an assessment to the extent of 35 lacs, of which 10 lacs should be at once paid in course of a month before the plan came into operation. This, he thought, would be an earnest of larger sums coming in from shareholders both in this country and at home. But the plan went still farther, and required another payment of a second ten lacs within a given period. The scheme which the legal gentleman had framed contained a clause, by which any contributions paid prior to the scheme coming into actual operation would be returned in the event of its being abandoned; but this, in his opinion, was insufficient to remove the repugnance of many of the general body of proprietors to contribute for meeting the claims of the creditors. But the scheme to be brought forward embodied two points essential to success—it held out a reasonable promise to creditors that their claims would be discharged, and to the proprietors the strongest inducement to come forward with their contributions. Mr. Morton here also mentioned that the assessment made by the executive committee in communication with the creditors' committee, was calculated to yield a sum of 40 lacs, being only 14 lacs below the amount of liabilities. He moreover mentioned that it was intended to make payments of the contributions to the creditors' committee, or to a committee to be appointed by the two existing committees. As for himself, he would much rather the executive committee had not the task devolved upon them of making collections. Mr. Morton, before sitting down, likewise stated that Mr. Hogg, who represented Glyn, Halifax, and Co., the largest creditors of the bank, had expressed his approval of the scheme to be produced.

Mr. Hogg rose and observed, that, after the explanation which had been given by Mr. Morton, it would not be necessary for him to say much. Mr. Morton had been in communication with him from time to time, with reference to the affairs of the bank since they had been in the hands of the executive committee; and it was only due to him to say that, but for the ability and judgment he had evinced, the shareholders might generally now have been involved in ruin. As all were aware, several schemes had been submitted for adoption, but they had all hitherto proved failures.

The first scheme had fallen to the ground for the want of unanimity, especially in reference to a condition that 40 lacs should be actually paid before a release was granted. This had been modified, and it was required that a definite sum should be assessed, but that it was indispensable to the scheme coming into operation, that the whole of that amount so assessed should be paid up. Since this proposal, he had suggested that the sum of 40 lacs was too large an amount to be forthcoming immediately, and that 25 lacs ought to be the aggregate of the assessment. Upon this again a modification was proposed, that 20 lacs should be the extent of the contribution to precede the operation of the scheme. Whatever might be the individual feeling on the point, as he acted only as an agent, he was not willing a determination should be come to on the question without its being submitted to the counsel of his principals, Messrs. Glyn, Haflinger, Mills, and Co., Mr. Prinsep, and Mr. Ritchie. Accordingly the last scheme was submitted to those gentlemen. At their consultation he himself had been present, and both the learned gentlemen disapproved of that plan, it being their opinion that no arrangement was advisable which comprehended a release being executed without the actual payment in the first instance of a portion of the contribution. The learned counsel had prepared a scheme which he would propose to the meeting; but before doing so, he offered some explanatory remarks as to the leading points contained in it; which need not be repeated, since that scheme was not adopted, and the modified one is given below. It was, he added, generally approved of by Mr. Morton, except as to one particular. The alteration he suggested was that if, on the first instalment being paid down, there appeared to the creditors' committee reasonable expectation of the second instalment of 10 lacs being forthcoming within a definite time, a certificate or undertaking from the consenting shareholders should be held to be sufficient to entitle them to receive an equivalent release. He (Mr. H.) did not quite agree to this amendment, but he was ready to relinquish any views of his own so far as it was consistent with the discharge of his duty; rather than further impediment should occur to retard the winding up of the concern. If, therefore, the creditors generally agreed to Mr. Morton's amendment, he would not make any opposition to it. Mr. Hogg then proceeded to read the scheme as it originally stood.

Mr. Richards remarked, that a large number of creditors might not give their assent, as there was an appearance of waiving their rights, though he was sure such was not intended.

Mr. Ritchie replied, that the scheme read was free from Mr. Richards's objection. It would not be in operation till certain conditions were complied with: but unless these were so complied with, it would have no effect; and therefore there could be no waiving of their rights by the creditors.

Some little conversation here followed.

Mr. Ritchie then said, that it had been suggested by Mr. Hogg, that in lieu of fixing the amount of assessment at 20 lacs, of which 10 should be paid at once, and for the moiety certificates given by the shareholders, it would be better to make a payment of 10 lacs in one month, and 5 in two months more. This he (Mr. Ritchie) entirely approved of, and he was sure would receive general concurrence, while it could not fail to have the effect of lightening the burthen on resident shareholders, relieving the executive committee to a great extent of a disagreeable task, and by the sure and speedy immunity promised, induce ready and willing contributions.

Mr. Richards inquired what would become of such of the bank's assets as were under seizure.

Mr. Hogg replied, they would, of course, be proceeded against in the usual way.

Mr. Richards then asked if the contributing shareholders were to have immunity after paying fifteen lacs, how the creditors were to obtain payment of the remaining forty lacs?

Mr. Hogg answered, that they must be content to take their chance as to that; though the reasonable probability was, that those who were now in suspense and alarm, with a naked sword as it were hanging over their heads, would prefer to be relieved from this state, by paying their amount of contribution, and thereby purchase complete immunity.

A few observations were here made by several gentlemen, in which were blended both the serious and facetious. It was then finally arranged that the scheme should be modified according to the last suggestion made by Mr. Hogg, that 10 lacs be paid in one month and 5 in two months after. Mr. Hogg then proposed the adoption of this modified scheme, and formally moved.

That the scheme read to the meeting be approved and adopted.

Mr. Ritchie seconded the motion, and in doing so made a few remarks of an explanatory nature. He said that according to the terms and conditions of the scheme, no single individual would be entitled to a discharge, until the full sum of 15 lacs was paid up.

As to the nature of the discharge, he ought to explain, that it would not be in the technical sense of a release under seal, which it was not possible to grant, for if given to one proprietor of the bank, it would have the effect to discharge the remaining 799; but the covenant not to sue, whether at law or equity, would be ipso facto a release, and would insure the same security to contributing shareholders. On the whole, he thought that the plan was the only feasible means of bringing to a termination the liquidation of the bank, and as it would subserve the interests of both shareholders and creditors, he hoped all would give their ready assent to the scheme being carried out.

The resolution was put and unanimously carried. The scheme thus adopted we published yesterday, but we subjoin it here, to render this report complete.

"We, the undersigned creditors of the Union Bank of Calcutta, hereby undertake and promise, subject to the conditions hereinafter mentioned, not to sue, but any writ of scire facies against, or otherwise to molest the person or property of any present or former shareholder of the said bank, who shall contribute towards the liquidation of the debts of the said bank, such sum as shall be assessed to be paid by the said shareholders respectively, and shall be set against their respective names in the schedule herewith annexed, or such schedule with any additions, alterations, or amendments to be made and sanctioned in writing by Charles Hogg, C. J. Richards, T. S. Kelsall, H. Cowie, and J. S. D. Campbell, Esquires, as a committee of the said creditors. Provided, nevertheless, that the sum total of assessment contained in the schedule so added to, altered, or amended, shall not be less than the sum of Co.'s Rs. 40,00,000 (40 lacs). But we expressly save and reserve to ourselves all our rights, powers, privileges, and remedies whatsoever, against the assets of the said bank, legal and equitable, and against all and every such shareholders as shall not contribute as aforesaid.

Provided further, that these presents shall have no operation or effect whatsoever, unless bond vide creditors of the said Union Bank for sums amounting in the aggregate to 85 lacs of Co.'s Rs. at the least, shall on or before the 15th day of June instant, sign and become parties to these presents; provided also, that if the full sum of Co.'s Rs. fifteen lacs shall not on or before the 1st day of August next, have been contributed and actually paid to the said creditors' committee, and the executive committee of the said bank jointly, then these presents shall be void to all intents and purposes, and of no effect whatsoever.

Provided further, that in the event of these presents becoming void and of no effect under the last mentioned proviso, or of the same failing of effect by reason of such proportion of creditors not becoming parties hereto, all such sums as shall have been contributed as aforesaid, shall be returned to such contributors respectively, or their lawful representative.

And as the undersigned hereby give full discretion to the creditors' committee as to the calling for, or enforcement of, payment of the residue of the said assessment over and above the said 15 lacs, and it is hereby further declared and agreed that the said sum of Co.'s Rs. 15,00,000 if and when the same shall be so paid and realised as aforesaid, shall be divided ratably among those creditors only who shall have signed and become parties to this agreement in proportion to their own proper claims, and that all sums which shall and may be realised by and from such contributions over and above such sum of 15 lacs of rupees, shall also be in like manner so divided amongst such creditors; and it is hereby lastly declared and understood, that we the undersigned do not in any manner give title to the said Union Bank, or to any of the shareholders thereof, by executing and becoming parties to these presents.

In addition to the adoption of the scheme, the two following resolutions were passed by the meeting:

It was proposed by Mr. Hogg, and seconded by Mr. Morton, and carried, that the executive committee be requested not to make any transfer of property, or to take any steps in the management of the affairs of the bank, without referring to, and obtaining the sanction of, the creditors' committee.

In moving the foregoing, Mr. Hogg remarked that it was desirable the executive committee should be placed under the surveillance of the creditors' committee, a remark which was seconded in by Mr. Morton, who seconded the motion.

Proposed by Mr. Macpherson, and seconded by Mr. Burthoung, and carried, that Mr. Charles Hogg be requested to sit as member of the creditors' committee.

The meeting separated with the usual vote of thanks to the chairman.—Calcutta Extra June 3.

We take the following from the Bengal Hurkaru, without vouching for its accuracy:—

Sundry Debtors.

Henry Hill and Co.	Co.'s Rs.	1,08,000	Compromised for sum mentioned, not yet due, secured by indigo factories in Tirhoot	This debt stood at a much larger amount on the books, but in the estimate made by the Sp. Com., in Jan. last, it was not considered of any value.
Samuel Smith	1,00,000	Compromised for sum mentioned, not yet due, secured by house and landed property, in course of adjustment	This debt was originally larger; the security being of very inadequate amount, the Com. compounded the claim under the authority vested in them.
W. P. Grant and others' share account		4,20,000	Disputed by the parties, amount is undjusted, and existence of debt wholly denied by some	No specific security except a letter signed by the parties interested, viz.: W. P. Grant, H. Holroyd, Rustomjee Cowasjee, John Storm, J. Lyall, and W. R. Lackersteen.
A. A. Dunlop, of Cossimpore	36,500	Secured by a lien on 6-16th of Cossimpore concern.
James Hume	67,500	In course of adjustment	Partly secured by life insurance.
John Storm	8,000	Secured by deposit of 10 Bengal Coal Co.'s shares.
W. P. Grant and W. H. L. Frith		25,000	Secured by deposit of 5 Bengal Indigo Co.'s shares, originally a loan upon 10 shares for Rs. 50,000 (Rs. 25,000 paid off by Mr. Frith).
W. P. Grant, floating account	2,08,000	Disputed by Mr. Grant.
Henry Holroyd	14,500	Secured by 7 Docking Co.'s shares, 50 Assam Co.'s ditto, 20 bonded warehouse ditto.
Mothooranath Tagore	1,800	Secured by 4 steam-tug shares.
Dr. Alexander Smith	6,700	Originally secured by Madras Bank shares, which realized less than the advance.
Eastern Steam Navigation Company		52,400	Advanced originally to the parties who ordered out the Precursor , a considerable further amount will be claimable for interest	A joint and several promissory note was signed by Messrs. Cockerell and Co., W. P. Grant, Lyall, Matheson and Co., Fergusson, Brothers, and Co., and Mackillop, Stewart, and Co., for 150,000 Co.'s rupees. This remains undischarged, and consequently there is a claim on those parties to the note who are solvent for the balance and interest.
Doorgakinkur Chuckerbutty	3,000	Overdrawn account since June 30, 1839
Maddumchun Chatterjee	2,000	Ditto
Colin Campbell	7,500	On security of 10 Bengal Coal Co.'s shares.

Claims on Estates Insolvent and under Trust.

	Amount at debit on Books, 31st Dec. 1847.	Securities.	Remarks.
Cockerell and Co.	Cq.'s Rs. 23,00,000	An arrangement has been made with the assignees to take over various securities in reduction of this balance; and to estimate the value of last season's indigo for the same purpose: the result is, that the Bank will receive the undermentioned properties, &c., viz.—Chowleah, arranged to be sold for Rs. 60,000, payable in acknowledged post bills; 10-16th of Bogla, carried on till end of season by a third party; Barrobarree, carried on by the Bank, and 60 Bengal indigo Co.'s shares	The Bank will still rank on Cockerell and Co.'s estate for 13 lacs of rupees, independent of returned bills of exchange noticed hereafter.
Colville, Gilmore, and Co. ..	23,74,000	Calna, Joradah, 6-16th of Meerungunge, Colgong, and Hizlabut (2nd mortgage) carried on by third parties, and Mundortollah, carried on by the Bank. Those factories are of considerable value; but any others belonging to this estate are worth but little. After accounting for the indigo of the last season, and if arrangements can be made to take over the factories, this claim will be reduced to probably less than one-fourth of the amount due Dec. 31, 1847	Arrangements are in progress with the assignees of C. G. and Co. for an adjustment of this account on the same principle as with Messrs. Cockerell and Co.'s assignees.
Carr, Tagore, and Co.	18,00,000	Indigo factories:—4ths Docracole and Soojanuggur, Hatoory, and Noodah—Bunhar—Moisdah—Hy-rampore, Hurriadah, and Bispore. These factories are carried on by third parties, and are of considerable value.—Mundulghat Talook and 2nd mortgage of Patkarah; 71 Shares of Calcutta Docking Company; 75 Shares of New Fort Gloster Mills Company; 5 Shares Bengal Indigo Company; 94 Shares Steam Tug Association, and various bills and promissory notes with other parties, as particularised in bills discounted	Arrangements are in progress with the trustees of C. T. and Co. for an adjustment of this account on the same principle as with Messrs. Cockerell and Co.'s assignees.
Lyall, Matheson, and Co.	73,000	Represented by the Besarutpore, Dhurrumberpore, and Zamaneah indigo factories	The greater part, if not the whole of this balance, will probably be extinguished at the end of the indigo season.
Hickey, Bailey, and Co.	10,02,500	Represented in part by a moiety of the Big Union—post bills at their debit, for which third parties hold proceeds of indigo; commissions paid by them on account of the Bank, and commissions due to them by the Bank with Cockerell and Co.'s acceptance	In course of adjustment; will probably eventually be about 3 lacs of rupees at debit after adjustment and taking over securities.
A. Rogers	20,10,000	The Big Union, Bowsing and Cassipore, 60 Bengal Indigo Co.'s shares, 160 Assam Co.'s shares	Exact claim on Mr. Roger's estate not ascertained, but will probably amount to about 11 lacs.
Gilmore and Co.	6,67,320	A dividend of $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. is expected from the estate very shortly.
Fergusson, Brothers, and Co. ..	1,76,378	}	There is little expectation of further dividends from these estates.

UNION BANK.

Weary as the public in general, and our subscribers in particular, must be of the continuous discussion of the affairs of this unfortunate establishment, we still feel ourselves constrained to comment on the proposal made last week by the creditors' committee. The proposal now made is to the effect that the creditors shall assess the Calcutta shareholders to the extent of 40 lacs of rupees, and for the remaining 14 lacs of their claims, proceed against absent shareholders, and the assets of the bank. Of this sum of 40 lacs, the shareholders are required to lay down 15 lacs on or before the 1st of August next. The creditors of the bank engage, on their part, not to sue out any writ of scire facias against, or otherwise to molest the person or property of any shareholder who shall contribute the sum set down against his name; but this arrangement is to have no operation, or effect whatever, unless creditors for sums amounting in the aggregate to 35 lacs, at the least, shall sign and become parties to these presents, and unless the contribution of 15 lacs of rupees is made good by the proprietors before the 1st of August next.

The arrangement is certainly advantageous to the creditors. They will lose nothing and risk nothing. They will obtain the full amount of the sum set down against the shareholders,—from some willingly, from all others by compulsion. While collecting the forty lacs of rupees from the Indian shareholders, they will continue to realize the assets of the bank, and to pursue absent shareholders. They obtain the first instalment of 30 per cent. of their claims in two months without trouble, anxiety, or odium, and without at all endangering the receipt of the remainder, or exhausting the resources from which it is to be realized. But the question is, how will the shareholder stand after he has agreed to the present arrangement and paid down the full amount of the contribution at which he was assessed, and surrendered the largest portion of his property? Will he obtain a final discharge from all farther liability? Can he still venture to call a farthing his own, either at the present or at any future time? Can he bequeath any sum he may subsequently acquire for the support of his family? We fear not. After the majority of creditors of thirty five lacs have obtained their wishes out of him, and given him a discharge from all further liability to them, then comes the turn of the minority, or the nineteen lacs of rupees' creditors, who will come down on the shareholder for the remainder of his property. We see not how the acceptance of the proposal now made by the creditors can bring any advantage to the shareholders, or relieve them from those anxieties which now oppress them. We believe it originates in feelings of kindness and consideration on the part of the creditors, inasmuch as they are armed by the law with authority to sell "out of house and home" any shareholder whom they may select; but the shareholder himself cannot fail to perceive, that while, on the one hand, it does not afford him any security whatsoever against the surrender of his whole property,—because the minority must necessarily seize what the majority leave, or go unpaid,—it will place him in a worse position than if he had allowed the law to take its course against him and his property. In that case it would of course be his wisest plan to take the benefit of the Insolvent Act. There, at least, he will find the blessing of finality, whereas under the arrangement now proposed, all the property he may now possess will be divided among the two classes of creditors, the 35 lacs, and the 19 lacs; and any property he may subsequently acquire will be at the mercy of any creditor who may not have been paid in full. Nor must it be forgotten that the voluntary surrender of his property to the creditors will deprive him of the advantage conferred on him by the Act, of suing his co-proprietors for repayment of the sum he has contributed, which he would be able to do if constrained by the arm of the law to pay it. If, however, creditors possessing claims to the amount of fifty lacs will agree to assess the shareholders, and on the payment by each individual of the sum affixed to his name, grant him a final discharge, we believe that there are few, if any, who would hesitate for a moment to close with the offer.—Friend of India.

ACTIONS AT LAW AGAINST THE OFFICERS OF GOVERNMENT.

From the Secretary to the Government of Bengal to the Superintendent of Police, L. P., dated Fort William, 12th of April, 1848.

I am directed by the Right Honourable the Governor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 593, on the 17th ult., in which you draw his lordship's attention to the position in which magistrates and other officers of government are placed, when actions are brought against them in courts of law, for acts done in the discharge of their official duties in consequence of the system at present pursued of leaving them to defend themselves at their own expense in every case, and only reimbursing them after the conclusion of the trial, if, from facts then developed, it should appear that they have conducted themselves legally and properly in the matters which occasioned the action.

2nd. After carefully considering the subject, his lordship has come to the conclusion that it will be right that the officers of government, so situated, should be relieved from the necessity, which must often press heavily upon their means, of advancing the funds required for defending themselves against actions which may often be prompted by malice or litigiousness.

3rd. With this view his lordship has determined, as the course to be pursued in such cases in future, that on the institution of any action against any officer of the government for acts done in the discharge of his public duty, he should communicate the fact through the usual official channel, reporting all circumstances which may be necessary to enable the government to arrive at a decision on the real merits of the case. If, on full examination into the case, and on a fair and reasonable interpretation of his proceedings, the officer shall appear to have acted rightly, he will be directed to take the necessary steps to defend himself, the government advancing the funds necessary for that purpose, to be refunded after the issue of the action is known, in case the circumstances then brought to light should prove the officer to have acted improperly. If, on the other hand, upon examination of his case by the government his conduct shall appear to have been clearly wrong, he will be informed that the government will not interfere, and that he must defend himself at his own charge.

4th. Under such a rule as this, his lordship believes that public officers will not be led to feel that they can fall back on the government for defence in every case, when their conduct have been right or wrong. They will be sensible that they can look for assistance only when they may appear to have entirely deserved it, and therefore their sense of responsibility will remain as keen as heretofore.

5th. Regarding Mr. Trotter's case, which gave rise to your communication, his lordship has been informed that the action against that officer has been non-suited.—Friend of India, May 25.

LAW REPORT.

SUPREME COURT.—TUESDAY, JUNE 6.

SUSPENSION OF MR. W. P. GRANT, MASTER IN EQUITY.

The Chief Justice—Our attention having been directed to the conduct of Mr. Grant, the Master in Equity, as one of the directors of the Union Bank, and it appearing to Sir H. Seton and myself that that conduct was utterly inconsistent with the character which the Master in Equity in this Court ought to possess, I caused a citation to be sent to Mr. Grant, requiring his attendance before me in Court this morning, to answer certain questions which it appeared to Sir H. Seton and myself it was our duty to put to him, respecting his conduct as such director. Mr. Grant denying my jurisdiction to proceed in this manner, declines to appear. The course I have therefore resolved to pursue will be best explained by the statement which I will now read to the Court:—

Soon after the stoppage of the Union Bank, it became known to me, though not judicially, that great misconduct of its affairs was imputed to the directors of the bank, and to Mr. Grant as one of them. The matter occasioned the greatest anxiety both to Mr. Justice Seton and to myself. We were both of opinion, considering the nature of the matters imputed, and that Mr. Grant was a principal officer of this Court, and the peculiar character of his office, that some inquiry would be necessary; but we ultimately thought that it would be improper to call on that gentleman for an explanation of his conduct as a director, until after the decision of the causes pending in the Supreme Court against the Union Bank. Upon the trial of those causes, to which Mr. Grant was himself a party, as a shareholder of the Union Bank, though not named as a party on the record, the action being in form against the public officer of the bank, evidence was given relative to the conduct of the affairs of the bank for some years past by its directors. The bank post-bills, on which the action was brought, were most of them signed by Mr. Grant as a director, and it appeared that he was an acting and active director of the concern. The partnership deed was given in evidence—the original deed—and is still an exhibit in the records of the Court in those causes.

Violations of the deed by the directors were much insisted on in support of the case of the defendants, as exonerating, by reason of those violations, the bank from liability on these bank post bills. The great increase of the issue within a few years was much insisted on as a proof of abuse on their issue. The increase was proved, and it was even asserted that many were issued without consideration.

This line of observation was stopped by the Court, as the consideration for the bills was not in issue in the cause. The two half-yearly reports of January and July, 1847, which purport on the face of them to be the reports of the directors, and which reports were regularly put forth each half year to the proprietary body and the public, were put in evidence by the plaintiffs to shew a ratification by implication of the issue of bank post bills which are mentioned in those reports and in some others. These reports were read by the Court at the time, and Mr. Justice Seton and myself were both much struck by the allusions they contain, in the introductory part, to the increasing prosperity of the bank, on which the shareholders were congratulated, as also by the declaration of a dividend of seven per cent. out of profits. There were classes of cases involving different points of law, some bills were originally issued to shareholders, and it became necessary for the counsel and the Court to arrange the cases into certain classifications, with a view to future argument. It was proved, partly with a view to this, who were the directors in certain years, and the Court became judicially apprised of that fact. It is also to be observed, that, as the names of the directors from time to time are by the act directed to be filed in the Supreme Court, and entered in a memorial there, a knowledge of who the directors are at all times within the reach of the Court. That Mr. Grant and other directors were deeply indebted to the bank, and that many of the debts were unsecured was known to the judges, though not judicially, even before the trials; and it was indeed impossible to remain uninformed on a subject which excited such general attention and comment. The amount of those debts, and the state of them as to security, became subsequently known to the Court judicially, in the progress of those causes, by the sheriff's return of the debts when seized in execution under the charter. After the trial of these causes, the judges considered that it would be their duty to proceed to an inquiry into Mr. Grant's conduct, if he did not resign his office. They had no longer any confidence in Mr. Grant, and intimated this to him in a letter bearing date April 11, 1848, which letter stated in substance that the disclosures which had lately taken place regarding his connection with the Union Bank were such as necessarily to destroy that confidence which, both for the sake of the public and the Court, ought to subsist between the Court and a person holding the office of master; and that they made this communication to him in order to give him an opportunity of avoiding proceedings of a more painful nature. To this letter Mr. Grant replied by a letter of the same date, addressed to the judges, in which he stated that he was not aware of any thing in his conduct which could justify the withdrawal of the confidence of the judges from him, and asked to be made acquainted with the specific circumstances, in order that he might know with what he was charged, and have an opportunity of answering it. The information required by Mr. Grant was given to him by the judges in a letter of the same date, addressed to him in reply to his, in which they stated that the gross mismanagement of the affairs of the Union Bank, which had ended in the destruction of the interests confided to him, involving as it did, in addition to reports of a deceptive nature, breaches of trust of the most serious description, justified the withdrawal of their confidence, and they added that they needed to refer only to two of the more prominent instances, viz., the lending the funds of the partnership on unauthorised securities, and becoming himself a debtor to the bank to a large amount, contrary to the most obvious principles of his duty, of which they regretted to observe on his part such apparent unconsciousness. In answer to this letter Mr. Grant wrote on the 12th April, 1848, a letter containing a denial of any breach of trust whatever, and in which he expressed his intention of submitting to the judges a detailed refutation of those charges; he asked them in the meantime to suspend their judgment, and claimed the right which he undoubtedly possessed to be made acquainted with any other instances of misconduct which the judges might impute to him, with reference to this matter. Some time having elapsed without Mr. Grant's statement coming in, the judges requested the registrar, through whom it is customary for the Court to correspond on official business, to write to Mr. Grant to ask him when his statement would be ready. The judges continued to transmit their communications to Mr. Grant through the registrar. Mr. Grant continued to address his to the judges directly. The registrar, in compliance with request of the judges, wrote to Mr. Grant, on the 26th April, 1848, and Mr. Grant in reply to that letter, after accounting for the statement not being ready, expressed his surprise at that mode of communication having been resorted to, upon a matter which, in its present stage, he could not but consider as strictly private between the judges and himself. The judges considered that any official communication on the subject was in their character as judges, and resolved to adhere to this mode of communication. They were not desirous of giving any unnecessary publicity to the matter. If they had understood that Mr. Grant considered it not a judicial investigation, they would have taken care that he should be informed of his mistake. On the 5th May, 1848, Mr. Grant forwarded his statement to the judges, with a letter to them, in which he stated that he trusted the judges would do him the justice to attribute the readiness with which he had given them that detail of transactions no ways connected or interfering with his official duties, to the respect which he felt for their high stations in the court of justice in which he had the honour of holding an office; that that respect had induced him to do his best to correct misapprehensions which he had been told had lowered him in their opinion, and that he had not suffered his desire to act openly, and in obedience to the declaration of right feeling, to be impeded, by considering on that occasion the legal right with which the nature of his office and its tenure might invest him.

The judges understood this as a protest against their exercise of jurisdiction; but as a protest does not preempt or intermit proceedings, and they thought the protest ill-founded; they paid no regard to it; Mr. Grant will have the benefit of it if they were in error in that opinion. The judges, after a careful perusal and consideration of Mr. Grant's statements, directed the registrar to procure for them from the executive committee of the Union Bank a detailed statement of Mr. Grant's account with the bank, in order that they might compare it with Mr. Grant's statements. It was sent to them, and by them submitted through the registrar to Mr. Grant, who, in a statement subsequently forwarded to the judges, made some explanatory observations upon it, showing that it was substantially accordant with his own. One other explanation was subsequently required by the judges, in consequence of an imputed misapplication of certain funds remitted by the Bank of Bombay to the Union Bank, to the use of the former, in violation of written instructions directing a specific appropriation of them. Mr. Grant's answer to that denied all privacy to the misappropriation or knowledge of it before it was concluded, and that transaction forms no part of the grounds on which I now proceed. Mr. Justice Seton having soon after this been disabled by severe illness from further attention to business, the further consideration of this most painful case rested with me. I accordingly directed the registrar to inform Mr. Grant that I should sit in chambers on Wednesday, the 31st May, to hear anything which Mr. Grant might desire to urge before I decided on the case. To this communication Mr. Grant replied by a letter addressed to the judges, stating in substance that the case then for the first time assumed the air of a judicial inquiry, and that he had submitted no case to the judges or to the Chief Justice for their or his decision; that he neither knew the charges nor the evidence on which they were founded, and he protested against the justice and legality of the proceeding. The Chief Justice replied to this communication by forwarding through the registrar some observations stating that an inquiry by judges into the conduct of an officer of the Court being in its nature visitatorial, the judges were not tied down to the observance of the regular form of a proceeding in Court, of which it was in its nature little susceptible; that the officer was entitled to receive notice of the matter imputed, and to have every reasonable opportunity afforded him of answering it. The Chief Justice expressed his surprise that Mr. Grant considered the inquiry to have been other than judicial, and he stated his reasons for having supposed that no error existed on that point. As Mr. Grant stated that he was not aware of the charges or of the evidence, the Chief Justice directed particulars of both to be given to him. To these observations of the Chief Justice, Mr. Grant replied by a letter addressed to the Chief Justice, which was received by him late in the evening of the day preceding that appointed for the hearing, and as it was long and required consideration, the Chief Justice adjourned the hearing until Tuesday, the 6th June, and sent through the registrar a communication to Mr. Grant, apprising him of the hearing having been deferred till that day, and in which the Chief Justice explained a misapprehension of his meaning as to the use of the word "visitatorial" on a former communication. Mr. Grant replied to this by a letter of the 5th June, 1848, addressed to the Chief Justice, repeating his objections to the jurisdiction and procedure, and repeating his protest and declining to appear. I have given thus a detailed history of the progress and present form of this most painful proceeding, and I must now examine into the objections urged against the justice and legality of the proceeding. The responsibility of the decision on the merits rests entirely with me. As to the mode of procedure and the propriety of instituting any inquiry I share it with Mr. Justice Seton, who was anxious that his responsibility should be avowed, and indeed the preliminary proceedings shew necessarily his concurrence in those stages of the inquiry.

Mr. Grant, in his communication of the 30th May, declining to appear, on the alleged ground of the want of jurisdiction in the Court, and the irregularity of its procedure, protests against, and severely censures their proceedings, to which he imputes illegality, injustice, and cruelty. It is the duty of a Court to proceed ex officio to inquire into the conduct of an officer of the Court when a proper case for inquiry exists. A Court cannot reasonably be censured for blending the functions of prosecutor and judge, in such a case wherein such union is unavoidable, and unless it can reasonably be urged that it is at once the duty of a Court to institute such a proceeding, and at the same time to render it abortive, the Court cannot reasonably be censured for directing its officer to procure such evidence as it may consider proper to be procured, whether to support or disprove the charge. If a Court, entertaining on adequate grounds an unfavourable opinion of an officer, suggest to him privately, though officially, the propriety of a resignation of his office, a cause must necessarily be stated to the officer why the confidence previously entertained is withdrawn. Such an intimation, and such a proceeding, cannot reasonably be deemed unjust or cruel in their own nature. It might be urged with more justice, that this proceeding erred rather on the side of leniency than of cruelty, by giving the officer an opportunity of closing his connection with the Court, without receiving its public censure. The cruelty of it would depend on the spirit and motives of the parties originating it, not on the pain inflicted by it, which its authors might be most sorry to be under the necessity of inflicting. The injustice would depend on the absence of any reasonable grounds for entertaining the opinion. It is not to be concluded that an opinion will be obstinately adhered to, after and in despite of a satisfactory explanation, merely because it has been previously entertained and expressed. The fact of the Union Bank having failed, and of several of its directors having been found most largely indebted to it, some insolvent, and some unable to pay, was so notorious, and that alone raised so strong a prima facie case, at least of misconduct, in directors, that the ignorance professed by Mr. Grant of the existence of any cause whatever for the judges having withdrawn their confidence from him, appeared to them to indicate that unconsciousness to which their rebuke was applied. The original letter of the judges to Mr. Grant expressly alluded to the disclosures relating to this connection with the Union Bank; and it was written after the termination of the trials in the Union Bank cases. The conduct of the Directors had been directly before the judges, judicially in those cases, and it is not correct to assert that they had not ample grounds for instituting an inquiry, and for the withdrawal of their confidence in their officer. A full vindication satisfactory to the judges would have revived it. Mr. Grant thinks that he observes in what he terms the modified charges, and the more courteous tone of the subsequent communications to him, proof of an alteration of opinion in my mind in his favour, and he considers this charge a condemnation in substance of the imputed precipitancy in forming a judgment unfavourable to him. The premises, however, I cannot grant. The charges have been in no way modified, and I regret to state that the unfavourable opinion of his conduct which I entertained has not been removed or lessened in any degree. Mr. Grant says, that one of the charges, viz., that of misconduct, is dropped. It seems to me far otherwise, and that it is necessarily included in the others. I never expect that any sentence of mine will be approved, or my motives appreciated, by any one who suffers by it. But disinterested persons must surely conclude that nothing but a most imperious sense of duty, and a firm determination to uphold as far as I can the character of the Court in which I have the honour to preside, and which I grieve to say has lately suffered by the conduct of some who were connected with it in important situations of trust, could have compelled me to institute such a proceeding against one with whom I have lived on terms of the most friendly intercourse, and who has those closely connected with him whom it is in every way most painful to me to afflict. I shall now consider the objections made to the jurisdiction of the Court. Mr. Grant alleges that the tenure by which he holds his office is freehold; he states it to be the same as that of a Master in Chancery, and that he holds it for life, or rather, that the tenure, as I presume, is quandiu si bene gesserit, and that the Court can appoint for no other term. I cannot at all subscribe to this opinion of the nature of the tenure of the office. The nature of the tenure of the ancient offices in the superior courts at Westminster is dependent on usage or prescription,—originally the officers of the Court were clerks. This is stated by Lord Coke in his Second Institute.

By usage or prescription they became what they are; the charter of this Court must be examined to ascertain the tenure by which the offices of the Court are held. The enjoyment I have no desire to render precarious. The 16th section is in these words—“And we do further authorise and empower the said Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William, in Bengal, from time to time, as occasion may require, to appoint so many and such clerks and other ministered officers as shall be found necessary for the administration of justice, and the due execution of all the powers and authorities which are and shall be granted and committed to the said Supreme Court of Judicature, at Fort William, in Bengal, by these our letters patent.” There is nothing to indicate any intention that the officers to be appointed shall have as high a tenure of office as those who might perform analogous duties in the Courts at Westminster. Similarity of duties does not necessarily import similarity of tenure, nor importance of duties fixity of tenure. The judges of the Supreme Court hold office durante bene placito, there is nothing to indicate that the Crown intended that the officers of the Court should have a higher tenure of office than the judges of it, the different circumstances of the two countries forbid any argument from mere similarity of duties. At the time when these Courts were established, and even now, it was and is most desirable that an efficient check on misconduct should exist, and it would, in my opinion, be a mischievous decision which should declare that the officers of the Supreme Court, though their conduct be such as to impair the credit of the institution to which they belong, are irremovable so long as they do not offend actually in the very office which they hold, nor commit some act having a direct and immediate reference to their office.

The words before quoted from the charter seem to me to be quite inconsistent with the tenure insisted on. If the Master in Equity has a freehold tenure in his office, then it appears to me that all the superior officers, at least, must have the same tenure, for there is no ground for saying that the tenure can depend on a name which there was no obligation on the judges to impose, or on the mere performance of analogous duties; the case of Smyth v. Latham, 9 Bingham 692, though not the case of an officer of a court of justice, seems to me in point and an authority for holding the tenure not to be of the quality insisted on. But even if it be conceded that the tenure of the office is freehold, still it appears to me that, if a Master in Equity, who holds his office quandiu si bene gesserit, so conduct himself with reference to some fiduciary arrangements as that upon a bill filed, the Court would be bound to dismiss him with strong condemnation of his conduct, he disqualifies himself for his office, and a ground of a motion is given by his unfitness for it. It is much too narrow a limitation of the words quandiu si bene gesserit, to limit them to acts actually done in the office, or immediately relating to it.

The duties of that office are closely connected with matters of trust: with what moral propriety could this Court or any Court of Equity, upon a bill filed complaining of gross misconduct in directors of a joint-stock bank, and praying their removal, decree their removal, and refer it to the Master of the Court to approve of proper persons to be named trustees in their stead, if the Master himself had been removed from the direction in another suit for exactly the same grounds of complaint,—what grounds for confidence in a good selection would the Court delegating such an inquiry, or one as to a guardian of the property of an infant or the like, or the parties to be affected by it have? The selection of proper parties is often a matter of contest; in either view, therefore, of the nature of the tenure of the office, I think the power of removal established. It remains to consider the objection to the mode of procedure. The Court does not act as a visitor, in which sense Mr. Grant seems still to understand my words, but it institutes a proceeding ex officio, without the complaint of any suitor, against its officer. The proceeding is one strictly analogous to the exercise of visitatorial power ex officio. To prove the right of a Court thus to proceed, I need only refer to these cases,—a case on Dyer 114, c. p. 64. The case of Goodwin v. Gorrell, 2 Colyer's cases in Chancery; and the case of Daugaz v. Agari, there referred to. The case in Dyer is cited in Webb's case, 3rd Reports, and is found in Bacon's Abridgment, title officer, p. 43, seventh edition, and also in Viner's Abridgment, title officer. The case is of importance, not merely as shewing the right to proceed ex officio, but that the Court is not tied to the ordinary forms of procedure, such as it would be irregular to depart from in a suit between parties. The office was in that case a freehold office, and an assize was brought for it. It is thus stated:—A filazer of the common bench being absent two years, and having farmed out his office from year to year without the licence of the Court, was discharged by the Chief Justice cum assensu sociorum suorum by words spoken openly in the court; and though there was no record made of the discharge, nor any legal summons for him to answer to any accusation, yet the discharge was held good.

In the case against Mr. Minchin at Madras, the Privy Council intimated no opinion that the Court had not the power of proceeding ex-officio against their officer. The proceedings there were by order nisi; and the answer of Mr. Minchin was taken on oath. But an order nisi is not essential, and the distinction between charges contained in an order nisi, and charges contained in a letter forwarded by an officer of the Court by the direction of the Court; or contained in a letter forwarded by the judges themselves, is merely technical. The proceeding is equally judicial in either case. Though the Court may remove an officer appointed by the Court, and holding office durante bene placito, yet it is an act of the Court, and its pleasure must be exercised under the control of a sound judgment and judicial discretion; it is the subject of appeal, as an order of the Court. The case before referred to, of the Filazer, and that of Mr. Minchin, both related to misconduct in office strictly. The case in Collyer, is that of misconduct by an attorney out of Court, and not in any cause, though in his character of attorney, which misconduct appeared to the Court in a cause to which he was a party. In like manner, in this case, the Court had judicial knowledge in the course of the proceedings in the Union Bank cases of a portion of the matter of inculpation now apparent, as will appear by reference to the narrative of the proceeding in those causes before given. The usual course of proceeding, in such cases of ex-officio inquiry, is to put the party to answer; the exception is, that he must not be called upon to answer indictable matter. I am quite at a loss to understand how a proceeding of this kind is to be carried on unless in some such mode as the present. When Mr. Grant declined the alternative, as he had an undoubted right to do, and was right in doing with the view which he entertains of his own case, the Court would have given Mr. Grant notice of the matters imputed to him, though he had not asked for it. It was not necessary to do this otherwise than by the letter which in answer to Mr. Grant's demand of the specific circumstances stated therein.

As Mr. Grant volunteered a refutation, it was unnecessary to send a formal demand of an answer; but, in fact, the judges, through the registrar, did urge its delivery. The inquiry was always one instituted by them as judges into matters which, if not satisfactorily explained, must bring either censure, suspension, or deprivation in the officer. Private censure is worthless as an example, Mr. Grant's answer was not necessary for purposes of crimination.

The case against Mr. Grant might have been established in the reports on the state of his accounts, on the contents of the partnership deed, and on the other matters already on the files of the court; and there would not have been the slightest difficulty in procuring, in the form of an affidavit, any corroborative facts in addition to those which the evidence on the files of the Supreme Court already supplied. The withholding an answer, though it might have prejudiced Mr. Grant, could not have materially affected the progress of the inquiry.

The Court might certainly have proceeded by order nisi, and have taken Mr. Grant's answer upon oath, as was done in the Madras case. But there was no necessity for the step, and, in my opinion, it would have implied an insulting distrust of his veracity, for which there was no ground. Having adverted to these preliminary objections, I now proceed to the most important subject of the charges themselves. Mr. Grant states that the gist of them is fraud, and he dwells on that word. The judges have not used that term, and it must not be put upon the Court now in its decision of the case. I see no ground for supposing that Mr. Grant intended to wrong the Union Bank of a rupee. There was no intentional or conscious fraud, there may have been full confidence that all would be right, but there was, in my opinion, notwithstanding, most gross misconduct as a Director.

The high office which Mr. Grant held in the Supreme Court, when he became a Director of the Union Bank, furnished more than an ordinary pledge that he would not violate the partnership deed, nor suffer it to be violated by others. I may observe that I have always entertained a strong objection to the officers of this Court engaging in transactions of business,—in my opinion tending to divert their thoughts and attention from the proper business of their offices. Of the extent and nature of the operations actually entered into I had no suspicion. The first clause of the partnership deed of the Union Bank provides, that the business and concern of the said Company shall consist in issuing promissory notes, payable to bearer on demand, at their office in Calcutta, for any sum of not less than 8 Company's rupees, and not exceeding 1,000 Company's rupees, and bills of exchange, payable at such time after date or sight as the directors for the time being shall fix, to parties who shall require the same, and deposit the amount of such bills in the said bank, which deposits shall bear interest at such rate as the directors shall fix; and also in discounting bills and promissory notes, not having a longer period to run than four months from the time of discounting the same respectively; and also for lending money on the security of personal property, for any period not exceeding four months, or on cash accounts to persons depositing undoubted security, such accounts to be settled at the end of every three months; and in all other branches of business usually transacted by bankers in Calcutta.

2nd.—That no promissory notes shall be issued to an extent exceeding twenty-five lakhs of Company's rupees, or exceeding twenty-five per cent. of the paid-up capital of the bank, in case the capital shall hereafter be increased beyond one hundred lakhs of Company's rupees, that no promissory notes or bills of exchange shall be issued, nor bills or notes discounted, nor money lent, otherwise than of the description, and in the manner above mentioned, &c. These are the plain directions of the partnership deed; there is no ground whatever for alleging any ratification by the great body of the shareholders, and by the absent shareholders more especially, of any relaxation in practice of these salutary provisions against abuse of the funds which were intended to avert the very risks to which, by their violation, the partnership has been ruinously exposed. Whatever may be said as to ratification of the issue of bank post bills, no ground for implying ratification exists here. No mere usage or practice of a bank can be alleged as a justification of a violation of such provisions. If so, directors interested in obtaining accommodation might readily exercise for their convenience a dispensing power.

Mr. Grant's liabilities to the Bank were in my estimation excessive. And a great part of the debt was unsecured. One unsecured loan, viz., that on the share account, amounting to a very large sum, was for a speculation in shares which might and did turn out unfortunately. More money was raised by borrowing on the pledge of those shares, and new shares were bought and pledged, and fresh shares purchased with the money. The total amount of Mr. Grant's liabilities on these transactions is not known to me. Mr. Grant states that the advantage of the bank was his primary object on embarking in these speculations, that he sought to prevent an undue depreciation of the value of the shares, which a sort of panic was occasioning. Allowing that gain was only a secondary object, still the transaction, carried on as it was by use of funds of the bank, borrowed in defiance of the provisions of the partnership deed, amounts to a most serious breach of duty and of trust in a director. The original loan was so great that if shares fell materially the repayment of the loan was periled.

The security was merely personal. A director, in violation of the deed of partnership, was borrowing on merely personal security, and his copartners in the speculation were, with his privity and concurrence, doing the same. It is futile to urge that Mr. Grant was sanguine of success. A trustee is wholly inexcusable who perils trust-funds on unauthorized risks, and such is the real character of this transaction. The larger part of the debts due by Mr. Grant to the Union Bank is described as unsecured on the return of the executive committee which has been submitted to Mr. Grant. He explains that two negotiable instruments, to which he is party and which prima facie import discounts obtained at the bank on 31st December, 1847, were given by him on the application of the secretary at that time as representing sums due on former accounts, and which must, therefore, have been previously, without even so much security as those promissory notes at that time afforded. The observations of Mr. Grant, in his communication of the 30th May, upon the advances made to him and others on the share account shew, as the other evidence shews, the general prevalence at the Union Bank of a system of lavish accommodation, in violation both of the spirit and letter of the partnership deed. He says, in justification of his conduct as a director, being concerned in taking up with others so very large a sum as four lakhs of rupees, or thereabouts, on security merely personal, that it was the fault of the secretary not to take a promissory note from the parties, and if such a note had been given the transaction would have been strictly correct, as a cash credit, and that cash credits were allowed. The mere promissory note of a party taking an otherwise secured loan, is not a deposit of undoubted security within the meaning of the partnership deed, nor consistent with any of the above provisions. It would be a mere evasion of the provision to adopt in practice such an unsubstantial addition to the security. Good and approved bills or notes, with other names upon them, might fulfil the condition; but the party's own promissory note gives the bank no additional dependence on the credit and means of any one. The nature of the transaction is not much altered when each of two simultaneous or nearly simultaneous borrowers give his promissory note for the loan granted to the other, the apparent discount transactions of the 31st December, though in that case they covered no new advance, but had reference to former accounts unsecured, shew, when taken in conjunction with the returns of the Executive Committee, the existence of this practice. Mr. Grant's liabilities unsecured are not treated as any special or peculiar case, but they are justified as reasonable and proper, and not excessive for unsecured accounts, the evidence compels me to conclude that the directors of the Union Bank both borrowed and lent the funds of the bank on unauthorized securities on merely personal credit. For the general acts of the direction, Mr. Grant, an acting-director, is responsible; his case cannot be separated from that of his co-directors, the censure justly applicable to the acting directors is applicable to each, except when exception from responsibility on special grounds may be made out. It cannot be said Mr. Grant was in ignorance of this system of dealing with the funds. On the contrary, it is established most clearly that Mr. Grant was cognizant of, and personally and largely engaged in such dealings. It is wholly inadmissible to urge as a justification that he did not vote on loans to himself, but that other directors sanctioned them, a director becoming a borrower does not therefore divest himself of his duty to the proprietary body; he is as responsible as the sanctioning directors for unauthorized loans. To hold otherwise would be to encourage collusion; nor can this responsibility be shifted on the secretary, whom it is the duty of a director to watch, and of whose conduct in not taking a promissory note whether it were blameable or not, Mr. Grant was cognizant. For conduct such as is shewn by the evidence before me, it would have been the duty of the Court, if judicially appealed to, to have removed Mr. Grant from the direction of the bank, and I consider that it would be inconsistent with my duty to the public to retain in an office of higher trust, one whom I should not have judicially hesitated to pronounce disqualified for an inferior one. Mr. Grant states that he and his co-partners in the share transaction were in good credit at the time; and that he could have had no difficulty in obtaining the same extent of accommodation elsewhere. But the question is not whether he was then solvent, or reputed so, but whether he did or did not as a director violate the partnership deed. A director who borrows on unauthorized securities disables himself from objecting to the like accommodation being afforded to others. The ruin of this bank may be considered a public calamity. I have no right to say that any director meant to defraud the bank; but no director had a right to expose its funds to forbidden risks on his own appreciation of their harmlessness. These institutions are in the state of the law applicable to them, and in the supineness of those interested, and their habitual apathy, so exposed to abuse, that it behoves a court of justice to visit misconduct in the directors of them with its severest censures. The two half-yearly reports before referred to, which are annexed also to Mr. Grant's statement, are, in my opinion, of a deceptive character. The declining condition of the bank is sufficiently shewn by Mr. Grant's statement, and the very stoppage under the painful circumstances now known establishes it; these reports are given out to the world on the credit of the directors, they run in their name, they are their reports. The consequences of misrepresentation in them may be absolutely ruinous; many who may become unsuspecting purchasers of shares in a bank on the very eve of its failure. Mr. Grant may have deceived himself as to the future prospects of the bank; he may have been so sanguine as to hope for the rise of the shares, and the future well doing of the bank; he is himself a great sufferer by its fall; but this will not justify statements as to the then state of the bank so utterly at variance with its real position or difficulty of which the director could not be ignorant. As there is an absence of authority as to the power of removal and the tenure of the office, and I am acting in the exercise of a discretionary power in some degree, and as it is just to save Mr. Grant all avoidable injury by my decision, if erroneous,—I shall suspend him from office until further order, instead of an absolute removal; so that if the Privy Council, upon appeal, should reverse my decision, he will not be prejudiced by the form of my order in any claim that he may prefer for the intermediate profits of his office. Mr. Grant has stated that arrangements have been made by him for a composition of the debt due to the Union Bank, on fair terms. To that communication I observed, that the seizure of the debts rendered that arrangement impracticable. Mr. Grant sent me yesterday a communication, which apprised me that it was practicable, though the mode is not pointed out in which it can be effected. I do not understand how it can legally be effected, so as not to injure the application about to be made against the shareholders by the creditors, except on the supposition of Mr. Grant's inability to meet his engagements. But the question of Mr. Grant's conduct as a director not being affected materially by this arrangement, subsequent to the stoppage of the bank, I do not think it necessary to pursue the subject further.

The Chief Justice then suspended Mr. Grant from his office of Master in Equity, and concluded his statement with an avowal of the deep regret which the necessity of resorting to this painful proceeding had caused him. The conduct of certain officers of the Supreme Court had been to him, he said, a source of the deepest affliction; he disclaimed "all personal motives," and declared that, in suspending Mr. Grant, he was actuated only by his sense of his "public duty."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Messrs. Bruce, Shand, & Co.—A further dividend of 1 per cent. (aggregating 21 per cent.) on all registered claims upon this estate is now payable by the assignees at the office of Messrs. Smith, Hufnagle, & Co., Calcutta.

—THE HARE PRIZE of Rs. 100 for the best Bengali Essay on the Evils of Early Marriage has been allotted to Baboo Seeta Nath Ghose, a student of the Hindoo College.

WRECKS.—Three vessels have been wrecked on the west coast of the bay recently; the Montefiores and a native vessel at Ganjam on the 15th, and the John Fleming near Point Gorderware on the 21st. No lives are spoken of as lost.

H.M.'s 32nd foot were to march into Ferozepoor on the morning of the 27th instant, and we regret much to hear that they had suffered severely from the march. The number of sick is stated to be from 200 to 300. Six men are reported to have died from the effects of coup-de-soleil, and also one officer, Capt. Gardner. We much fear that due precaution cannot have been taken for preventing unnecessary exposure to the sun.—Delhi Gazette.

CHLOROFORM A CURE FOR SCORPION BITES.—Hitherto no remedy was known that possessed any efficacy for the relief of the agony caused by the sting of a scorpion; I was, in consequence, lately induced to try chloroform locally applied, and I am glad to say that it acted like a charm. A small quantity of the liquid was rubbed over the part stung, and the relief was instantaneous and complete. If you will kindly mention this in the Delhi Gazette, pro bono publico, I shall feel much obliged. I have tried the remedy in two cases only as yet, not sufficient, however, to enable me to speak very positively, but in the two cases above alluded to the chloroform removed the pain instantaneously.—Ibid.

JULLUNDUR.—A letter, dated May 30, states:—"At present there are H. M.'s 61st, the 3rd, 7th, and 53rd N.I., the 7th cavalry, Swinley's troop of horse artillery, and a company of foot artillery, here, all on the qui vive, not knowing whether they are to move or stand fast."

GWALIOR.—A force consisting of a wing of the 4th N.I., four guns, and a squadron of cavalry, commanded respectively by Major Parker and Captains Eyre and Raikes, was, by latest accounts from Gwalior, about to proceed against a refractory thackoor some thirty miles off.

TWENTY-TWO OFFICERS, on leave of absence on private affairs at Simlah, were, on the evening of the 9th June, directed to proceed to the plains, orders having, it is believed, been received direct from the Governor-General to send all officers belonging to corps stationed at Umballah and to the westward of it to join their regiments at once, and many more were similarly instructed the two following days, the number ordered down exceeding forty.

THE EXPRESS DAK.—By the Bentinck steamer that lately left Calcutta a serang has taken a passage for Madras. He has been long known in town, and had just drawn a sum of Rs. 6,000 from an agency house as an advance for a number of seamen he had shipped. It was just discovered in time by the gentlemen of the firm that the men had not been paid, and an intimation being given to them that he had left by the steamer, an express horse dak was laid to proceed after the fugitive, which came up with the steamer a few hours before putting out to sea. The serang was taken out of the vessel and brought up to town a prisoner.

ACCIDENT FROM LIGHTNING.—One of the Narainpore Government golahs was struck by lightning on Thursday, the 1st of June, and would, no doubt, have been burnt to the ground, had not there fortunately been some rain before the accident took place. Salt weightings were taking place at the time at the distance of a few yards from the spot, but no life was injured.

EARTHQUAKE.—We have just heard that a shock of an earthquake was felt at Simla, about 11 p.m. yesterday (26th). There was a violent storm, and the rain fell in torrents. The appearance of the place this morning was in the highest degree delightful, and the atmosphere so cool and pleasant that we forgot, at once, the hot days we had experienced. It was cool every where, and every one seemed to enjoy the scene presented by the mountains clad in their robes of green.—Mountain Monitor.

KYOKU PHYOO.—A letter received from Kyoku Phyo by the steamer Enterprise states that the island has been visited by an earthquake, which caused considerable damage. Freeman's sluice, built by the late Dr. Freeman, has been rendered entirely useless in consequence, and the sluice at the salt golahs has been much injured. This is likely to occasion considerable inconvenience to the native residents, owing to the circumstance of the sluice being the only means of communication with the bazar, unless they are content to visit it by a long circuitous route. The Civil Magazine of the station has had its walls cracked in a great many places. The same letter also makes mention of the house of the commanding officer of the province having been burnt to the ground, which endangered the safety of the curchery, the treasury, and the circuit house, which, however, all fortunately escaped.—Hurkaru.

DR. JAMESON, the zealous superintendent of botanical gardens, has been at Simla, and we hope to see operations commenced in Annadale should the place suit, or present a large enough tract for cultivation; at all events, we trust, the valley will now be secured as an eligible locality for a public garden should it not answer for a tea plantation.—Mountain Monitor, May 22.

A PORTRAIT of Mr. Cockburn, the magistrate of Hourah, has recently been executed by Mr. Grant. We notice this fact because the portrait has been taken at the request of the native gentleman interested in the Ootparrah or Ball School, an institution which has met with zealous and effectual encouragement at Mr. Cockburn's hands. As this testimonial was not got up at a town hall meeting, and as there is no prospect of the names of the contributors being advertised in the papers, it seems worthy of notice as a spontaneous and unobtrusive tribute of esteem which does honour alike to both parties. We wish these private expressions of gratitude were more common among our native friends.—Hurkaru.

ALLAHABAD.—Letters from Allahabad of the 2nd June state that, on the night of the 1st, that station was visited, as the phrase runs, by one of the heaviest and most continuous storms of wind, rain, lightning and thunder that had ever been remembered even by Mr. Berrill, of the hotel, who, after a residence of more than twenty years, is looked upon, it seems, as "the oldest inhabitant."

—MR. W. P. GRANT, master in equity and examiner of the Supreme Court, was suspended from office by the Chief Justice on the 7th of June. His lordship made known the reasons for this step in a judgment of great length (which appears in another part), during the reading of which he was frequently so overcome with emotion as to be unable to proceed. Mr. Macpherson has been appointed to act in the room of Mr. Grant, and in the meanwhile the case of this officer is to be referred to the Privy Council.

THE UNION BANK.—SHERIFF'S SALE.—According to advertisement, such of the properties of the Union Bank as had been seized by the sheriff were brought to the hammer yesterday. The result most sadly belied the expectations of the executive committee, moderate as they were. The notice that has appeared for the last week in the public prints, by a Mr. Babar, cautioning parties against purchasing the house in Tank Square, as being a property of his own, had the effect of keeping back bidders, and the house was "bought in at Rs. 4,000." It was estimated, in January last, that the thirty-three factories belonging to the bank would yield, at the least, Rs. 23,38,000. The Dulsing Serai and the Bowarah concerns, in Tirhoot, with the Coorah in Moorsabadabad, the Bowsing in Burdwan, the Mundertoloh in Jessore, and the Cossipore in Nuddeah, which are considered to be among the best, were put up for sale, and they would not have fetched Rs. 20,000 had they been knocked down at the prices that were offered. The bids were not accepted, however, except in the case of the Dulsing Serai, an offer of Rs. 1,250 for which is still under consideration. The "right, title, and interest" of the bank to Rs. 56,000 due from the Bank of Bengal were not sold, for want of a reasonable bid; but the claim of Rs. 6,67,320 against the insolvent estate of the defunct firm of Gilmore and Co. was parted with for Rs. 1,700, and the claim of Rs. 1,76,378 against that of the defunct firm of Ferguson Brothers and Co. for Rs. 220. The debt of Rs. 67,075, due from the late firm of MacLeod, Fagan, and Co., now insolvents, was sold for Rs. 6, and that of Rs. 1,952 against that of W. Rushton and Co., now insolvents also, for one rupee; and the claim of Rs. 50,083 against the estate of W. C. Hurry, and a second one of Rs. 1,659 against that of W. Rushton and Co., were sold off for the same price respectively. The debt of Rs. 18,024, due upon a promissory note drawn by the late firm of Tulloch and Co., and endorsed by Carr, Tagore and Co., was disposed of for Rs. 3,400.—Ibid., June 9.

UNION BANK—SUPREME COURT.—The application for a scire facias against Mr. Willis, and certain native shareholders of the Union Bank, was granted in the Supreme Court on the 7th of June. This is, however, only preliminary to the arguing of the case. A report is in circulation that two of the wealthiest native shareholders have taken refuge at Chandernagore.

UMBALLAH.—The division orders published at Umballah of the 2nd June directed H. M.'s 3rd light dragoons, and two troops of horse artillery, to hold themselves in readiness to march at the shortest notice, and the officers of the artillery stationed at Meerut, as also those of H. M.'s lancers, have received instructions to take up their private carriage, though it is not thought likely that either the troops at Umballah or Meerut will be called on to move before the end of September. An on d'ix from Meerut is to the effect that Col. Farrington has been directed to proceed to Benarespoor, to superintend the equipment of the siege train, which is to consist of sixty heavy guns, besides mortars, &c.—Delhi Gazette, June 7.

BAHWULPOOR.—A letter from Bahwulpoor, dated the 23rd May, says that the troops of the Nawab were preparing to cross that frontier on the following day, and that one regiment only would be left in the capital. The passage was to be effected at Bakkur, or Bakkree, the place formerly mentioned, situated nearly opposite the embouchure of the Chenab.—Ibid., May 31.

DR. BOSE AND SEAL.—The Poornachandrodya (5th June) is very indignant with the Court of Directors for not having permitted his friends Drs. Bose and Seal admittance into the regular service, and ascribes the refusal to a narrow-minded decline on the part of the worthies of Leadenhall-street to serve their own countrymen. The editor dwells long, and with a good deal of pathos, on the nature of the sacrifices these youths have been obliged to make in order to enable Government to make an experiment of the extraordinary capabilities of Indian students, and doubts very much if there is one amongst the European members of the profession that can in point of intellect stand a comparison with his client. There is the usual, though in the present instance, an unusually short digression touching the manifold evils flowing from the existing monopoly of all high office by the nephews of the Directors; and then the leader concludes with severe strictures on the conduct of all Indigo Planters without exception.—Hurkaru.

SIR HENRY SETON'S DONATION.—The Poornachandrodya, though ever ready boldly and fearlessly to denounce every man who bears an party-spirited principles, and to award merited censure quite regardless of the birth and nativity of the unfortunate object, is not, it appears from his issue above referred to, at all backward in giving praise where praise is due. Adverting to the munificent donation of Sir Henry Seton in aid of the Oriental Seminary, the editor conveys, in respectful and appropriate terms, his sense of gratitude to the worthy donor, and exhorts the natives to imitate his noble example. What, it is said, greatly adds to the value of the assistance is the peculiar nature of the circumstances under which it has been received. Sir H. on the very eve of his departure to England on account of impaired health, responds with alacrity to a call for the support of an Institution conducted by a native, and, on purely orthodox principles, and not satisfied with the grant of Rs. 500, recommends the Seminary to the patronage of the Council of Education. This the Poornachandrodoy triumphantly points out to his countrymen as an instance of disinterested benevolence.—Ibid.

THE BENGAL SECRETARIAT.—The newly installed register of the Bengal Secretariat does not appear to be in very good odour with the subordinates of his office. Now that the affair of the ferashes has blown over, the peons have risen in rebellion against him, and sought for redress of what they consider to be a wrong from the secretary. It is said that, after the work which they are bound to perform during office hours, he used to take two of them to his house in the evening, and there employ them upon business of his own until after candle-light. The peons could not brook this, and, we are told, they have forwarded a memorial to Mr. Halliday, praying that the register should be permitted to have the command of their services only for the business of the office, and during office hours. The fate of the memorial is not yet known.—Ibid.

THE BENARES MAGAZINE.—We have seen the prospectus of a new religious periodical, about to be started at the holy city, under the style and title of The Benares Magazine. It appears, however, not to be the intention of the proprietors to confine themselves entirely to questions of religion; papers on classical and modern literature, matters of high Indian or general interest, translations, tales, essays, are to be admitted into its pages, as also reviews of new publications, notices of public events, &c. &c. The first No. is to issue from the Benares Recorder press, on the 1st of August, and the undertaking has our cordial good wishes.—Delhi Gazette, May 17.

A VISITOR FROM NEPAL.—Since the 1st of June there has been an accession to the pupils of the Parental Academic Institution in the person of a Nepalese student. This young man is the son of one of the principal sirdars of Nepal, and is a lieutenant in the army of that nation. He came to Calcutta with a view of studying the English language, and has preferred the Parental Academy to the Hindoo College, which was recommended to him by the authorities, in the expectation of more speedily attaining a colloquial knowledge of English in the first-mentioned seminary.

DEATH OF A MILLIONAIRE.—Within these three or four days past the demise of Baboo Sarroop Chunder Mullick has been announced. It is currently reported that the deceased has left an estate valued at twenty-five lacs of rupees, which has fallen to the possession of his two sons.

SCENE IN THE SUDDER ADALUT.—A curious case of "contempt of court" occurred at the Sudder Adawlut, Bombay. A woman of the Coonbee caste, belonging to the Coonan districts, went to the Sudder Court, with a petition, praying for redress on behalf of her brother, who, she said, was a convict in the Tannah jail. The judges told her in reply, that they could not receive petitions from third parties, but that if her brother, whom she represented as the victim of persecution, would send in his statement, they would have no objection to consider it. The woman retired; and again made her appearance in Court with two coco-nut shells filled with oil, and with wicks burning in them, held in the palms of her hands! The Court ordered her to throw away the lamps, and asked her for what purpose she had brought them. She stated in answer that she saw the Court was in darkness, and that she had provided herself with lamps in order to enlighten it, and enable it to see things distinctly; the Court, irritated at the reflection thus attempted to be cast upon it, inflicted a fine upon the woman for "contempt"—ordering that in default of payment she should be imprisoned for ten days.

CIVIL SERVICE BONUS FUND.—Meerut.—At a meeting of members of the civil service present at Meerut, held on the 25th of May, to consider the prospectus of this fund circulated by the desire of a meeting at Agra, A. W. Begbie, Esq. in the chair, it was resolved—

1st. That the meeting do approve generally of the establishment of a bonus fund, such as described in the introduction of the prospectus of the Agra committee.

2nd. That the amount of bonus and the method of raising it proposed by the Agra committee be approved of as an experiment.

3rd. That every contributor to the fund who is entitled to his full annuity be also entitled to claim the bonus, provided that, at the time of his retirement, he hold an appointment to which a member of the civil service attached to the N. W. Provinces must of necessity succeed.

4th. That it be suggested to the Agra committee to consider whether it would not be advisable, the bonus being claimable, to fix some limit of time within which only the bonus shall continue claimable to a contributor to the fund, and after which he shall forfeit his rights in the fund.

5th. That a committee be formed to extend the benefits of the fund as it may seem to them expedient to such persons, now members of the civil service, as before the time of their retirement may have had no opportunity of contributing to the fund.

6th. That the details of the fund be left to the decision of the said committee, but that the rules drawn up by them be referred to the ultimate decision of the service at large, through the medium of the Mofussilite and Delhi Gazette newspapers.

7th. That the thanks of the meeting be voted to the chairman.—Mofussilite, June 2.

—Landour, 1st June.—Resolutions passed at a meeting of Civilians at Landour on the 1st June, 1848, assembled to consider the proposed Civil Service Bonus Fund:—

1st. That this meeting approve the general principle of the bonus fund, as proposed at Agra.

2nd. That the bonus should be made claimable by all who have contributed to the fund, on their retiring upon full annuities, provided they at that time hold appointments which must be filled up by civilians of the N. W. Provinces.

3rd. That the bonus be offered or not, at the discretion of the Agra committee, to those civilians who may express an intention of retiring on full annuities, without having had an opportunity of contributing to the fund.

4th. That the committee be elected from the service at large, whether resident at Agra or not, and that it consist of members who are not entitled to annuities.

(Signed by six civilians.)

HARAREN AND BUNGO.—Everything is reported quiet in both these once wild and untractable districts, though at one time fears were entertained that they might follow the bad example set at Mooltan.

JUDGES OF THE SUDDER COURTS.—A Calcutta correspondent informs us that peremptory orders have been received from the Court of Directors to reduce the salaries of the judges of the Sudder Courts to Rs. 42,000; the order to have effect from the day Sir R. Barlow was appointed. It is added that the order is also to be made retrospective in regard to Mr. Cartwright, a judge in the N. W. P.; but this must, we presume, be an error.—Delhi Gazette.

FIRST BENGAL FUSILIERS.—It is with extreme regret we learn that cholera has broken out in that fine corps, the 1st Bengal Fusiliers, at Cawnpore. Up to the date of our communication's letter, nine men had fallen victims to this dreadful scourge. The most energetic steps were being taken to place the men beyond the supposed influence of the disease.—Ibid.

DELHI BANK.—Proceedings of an extraordinary general meeting of shareholders of the Delhi Bank, held at the Bank House on Tuesday the 9th of May, 1848, pursuant to notice. Present, 19 shareholders.

Mr. J. Smith having been unanimously voted to the chair, read the notice published in the Delhi Gazette and Mofussilite for an extraordinary general meeting to be held at the Bank House at 6 A.M. on the 9th of May, 1848, for the purpose of confirming the proceedings of the meeting held on the 23rd of March, 1848, and to decide finally on the proposed increase of 3 lacs of rupees to the capital of the bank, viz.:—

That the capital be increased by 3 lacs of rupees, to be effected by the creation of 600 new shares of Rs. 500 each, thereby raising the stock from 21 to 24 lacs of rupees.

That the said shares be all distributed to present shareholders, in the proportion of one new to every seven old shares, at a premium of 5 per cent. Fractional parts of shares accruing to shareholders whose number of shares are not divisible by 7, to be sold for the benefit of the parties respectively.

That the increase be paid for in five instalments of Rs. 100 each per share, to be called for as may be deemed expedient with reference to circumstances, notice of not less than six weeks being given by public advertisement to parties in India, and not less than four months to parties in Europe.

That the full amount of premium be paid with the first instalment, and the total sum carried to the Reserve Fund.

That parties wishing it may be allowed the option of paying up in full at once, receiving dividend from the 1st of the month following that in which the payment may be made.

That shareholders who fail to pay their instalments as they fall due, be charged 12 per cent. per annum interest on the balance due until such balance be paid in full.

That in consideration of the proposed increase to the capital of the bank, and of the zeal and ability of the accountant, Mr. G. Copping, an addition of Rs. 50 per month be made to his salary.

The proceedings of the previous meeting having been read as above, and put to the vote, were unanimously confirmed.

The thanks of the meeting having been passed to the chair, the meeting dissolved.

(Signed) J. SMITH, Chairman.

SERGEANT MAJOR KIRBY, of the Allahabad depot, destroyed himself with a pistol on the 11th May. He was a widower, but leaves behind two young children, whom he had placed under the care of Messrs. Ford, at Meerut. It was some unpleasant intelligence concerning them which is said to have been the cause of his committing the sanguinary act.

BENARES, May 22.—“There is great sickness in the town, and it is said that within the last two days upwards of 200 persons have died of cholera. The Mission school is fearfully thinned; almost half the boys out of 400 sick. The natives attribute the increase of sickness, during the last two or three days, to the crowds of pilgrims coming up from Calcutta.”

THE MONUMENT erected to the memory of Sir Wm. Macnaghten, by his widow, is reported to be complete, and one of the handsomest in the Circular Road Protestant burying-ground.

NEW INSURANCE OFFICE.—Mr. Curnin notifies in a circular his intention to found a new insurance office, to which he proposes to give the name of the Reliance. According to his calculations, the present rates are much too high. He says that if an officer aged 40 wished to insure his life in one of the existing societies, for one year, for Co.'s Rs. 10,000, he would have to pay Co.'s Rs. 470, whereas the same advantage would be obtained in the proposed office for Co.'s Rs. 282½. If the insurance were for life, the premium now charged would be Co.'s Rs. 630, in the proposed office Co.'s Rs. 466½. This is certainly holding out a great temptation to the insured, and, as Mr. Curnin's skill in such calculations is well known, we conclude that he is prepared to put them to the test of a close examination. The first object in all such institutions is security, the next economy; if the one can be satisfactorily proved, the other will be a sufficient inducement, and he will have little difficulty in forming his projected office. We have heard so much of late of the enormous profits derived by some of the insurance companies established in the Upper Province, that we entertain no doubt Mr. Curnin's proposition is founded on excellent grounds. We may take an opportunity of offering a few remarks on the subject of these insurance companies in a short time.

CALCUTTA LLOYD'S.—Rules and regulations have been passed for the new Calcutta Lloyd's, a general committee of twenty-one members elected, and Messrs. Rose & Co. appointed secretaries.

ATLAS MARINE INSURANCE OFFICE.—The Englishman understands that a call of Rs. 6,000 per share has been made on the unfortunate members of the Atlas Marine Insurance Office. This is not to be attributed to the failures of Cockerell and Co., of Calcutta, and Cockerell, Larpent, and Co. of Calcutta, but to the unusually severe losses sustained by the office. Our contemporary concludes the concern will now be wound up.

H. M. 98TH FOOT, marched from Meerut on the 23rd May, en route to Umballa.

LOODHEERANAH, 16th May.—A circular letter has been received at this station from the Adjutant General, directing all officers on leave on private affairs to be recalled to their corps forthwith. There was a rumour all over Loodheeranah yesterday (a specimen of what is abroad in the way of rumours), that the troop of horse artillery which left this the other day was prevented by a superior force from crossing the Beas, and that the 70th would march to their assistance immediately, and be joined by the 23rd N. I., from Phulloor, the duties of the latter place being, in the interim, taken by a wing of the 56th N. I.

—“26th May.—The gallantry of the 4th, or Captain Colin Mackenzie's Regiment of Sikh Local Infantry, who have this morning unanimously come forward and volunteered their service for Mooltan to their commanding officer, being an act of such rare occurrence with young locals, I fancy no apology is necessary for my bringing it thus to notice. The exemplary conduct of this young regiment in cantonments; the prompt and cheerful obedience of the men to their superiors; the exact precision with which they perform the battalion evolutions, is truly admirable. And last, but not least, I think you will coincide with me in saying, that their fidelity to the British Government can only be equalled by their indefatigable industry, when I inform you, that they have built themselves thirty barracks of a very commodious size, divided into fifteen rooms each, and of very neat architecture; that they made their own bricks, were their own

LAHORE, June 1.—“I was about to pen you a line yesterday morning, when all of a sudden a report, shaking the very bungalows at Anarkulle, was heard, and on looking out I saw in the direction of the artillery bazaar a cloud of smoke of an enormous height. I immediately concluded that some of ‘the dangerous gun cotton’ had exploded in one of the too frequented merchants' shops here, but such was not the case; it came from Meean Meer. No ‘legs’ or ‘arms’ came flying over our quiet station; so I retired to my mansion, and, throwing myself on a couch, hoped that I should hear that a few conspirators had been blown up in their own wily laid plots; but no such luck. The following version is as nearly the true one as it is possible to obtain in these stirring times:—A portion of powder, which was said by the Mofussile to have been exploded long ago, had at last gone off. A great quantity of it, said to have been destroyed by Major M'Nair, 73rd N. I., by throwing it down a well, and pouring water upon it, had, in these excitable times, exploded, and I am very sorry to say that three coolies and four bullocks have met with premature deaths in consequence; two hackeries are also said to have taken a slight turn in the air. The cause of the explosion was a small quantity of lighted charcoal from a cooley's hookah dropping down the well, and falling on a portion of the powder that had not been soaked. Pray, Mr. Editor, why are not officers, in whose lines it is, employed to destroy powder, when it is required to be done? We all know it is a very nasty thing to have anything to do with; and I could have thought that the late actions would have convinced the people of it. Ever since this grand explosion we have had one continued set of small ones, and I almost begin to think we are living on a ‘mine,’ for report has it, which I should say would do for one of your fictions, that whenever a man digs in the city, or removes a brick from a tomb at Meean Meer, becomes upon powder. No doubt there is a great deal too much of it about, and the sooner it is destroyed in a scientific manner the better. Last night, at driving time, Major Wheeler's corps received orders to go after the Gooroo that haunts the Punjab, and after whom Skinner's corps is with the two guns. This individual is supposed to be about 30 miles from hence. In about 20 minutes after Major W. received the order, you saw his smart corps on the march with lighted matchlocks, &c. ready to knock over 1,000 Gooroos if they could only be seen. They reached the Ravee, and with the crossing of that mighty stream came the tug of war, for boats were scarce, I hear, but rain abundant, and this morning I believe saw the last of them over. A squadron of dragoons was also ordered to go at twelve last night. Cocks and Lumsden are with them. By this time the Gooroo is off of course; and by the time the dragoons are over, I imagine he will be some sixty miles off. Why is there not a regular fleet of boats kept ready at the ghāt? Supposing an army had to be crossed over, what a nice steady march the first would be! The expense to Government would be nothing. I hear that this Gooroo's head is worth Rs. 5,000. A court of inquiry assembled at the artillery mess-house this morning, I believe, to investigate a theft committed in the residency compound of a portion of the silver state howdah.” “P. S. I have only just time to say that the squadron of 14th Dragoons (which could not be crossed over the river, and consequently came back), the remainder of the 4th troop 1st brigade H. A. 73rd regt. N. I., and Craigie's pioneers have this minute left Anarkulle for Shadra on the other side of the Ravee. Nothing more known.”—Ibid.

—CAPT. HUNTER, of the 53rd N. I. appears shortly before a medical committee, with the view of invaliding; and Major Hunter, of the 15th N. I., has expressed his intention of retiring from the service in September or October next. We understand further, that Captain and Brevet-major Watson, of the 59th N. I., will retire about the same time.—Delhi Gazette.

ODDH.—The following is the extract of a letter, dated Lucknow, the 29th May:—“Perhaps a short account of the fighting which has been going on in the interior of Ouddh may be interesting to you. Captain ———y was ordered to march against a certain rajah, a wealthy zemindar, who had shut himself up in a very strong kutchah-built fort, after refusing to pay the governor or chuckladar the exorbitant taxes he demanded. The rajah had sometime previously sent his own and his men's wives to some secure place in the jungle, and taken good care that his treasure should be safe. Captain ———y immediately laid siege to the fort, which is called Daoodnugger or Daodpoor, and during the assault, in which I hear he was personally engaged, lost two men, and nine wounded, while of the rajah's party more than thirty-five were killed and wounded. After nineteen days' siege, the zemindar, being closely pressed, and rather badly off for provisions, made, one dark night, a successful sally, and bolted as fast as he could into the jungle;

Captain —y then entered the fort, and ordered it to be razed to the ground. I think he arrived at Lucknow the day before yesterday. The king has now taken it into his head to have a regiment of 700 body guards, the very model of those he saw attending the Governor-General when he was here. He sent some one or another to Cawnpore with a good deal of money to buy new saddles, pistols, guns, swords, &c. &c. for his intended guardsmen. On the 25th, in honour of the Queen's birthday, there was a very small private party at the Residency, and a ball and supper was given.—Calcutta Englishman, June 5.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

ESTATES OF DECEASED OFFICERS.

Fort William, May 20, 1848.—Many instances of irregular and unauthorized payment on the part of committees of adjustment on the estates of deceased officers having recently occurred, the Rt. Hon. the Gov. Gen. in Council is pleased to direct the republication of the general order, No. 110, of May 5, 1841, and to intimate to the army that officers composing such committees will, in future, be held personally responsible for all disbursements made by them at variance with the instructions therein laid down for their guidance.

The Governor General in Council is pleased to lay down the following rules of procedure to be observed on the decease of officers and soldiers. Such parts of the G. O. mentioned in the margin* as are not consistent with the rules now laid down are accordingly cancelled.

Immediately upon the decease of an officer present with his regt., the maj. of the regt., or the officer who may be second in command at the time with the regt., having secured the effects or equipage of the deceased, a committee of adjustment shall be assembled without delay, whose duty it will be, in all cases, to search for a will, to make an inventory of effects, and an account of the debts and credits, and, in all practicable cases, to settle the regimental debts of the deceased.

The inventory, together with the accounts of debts and credits, and any sum which may remain after satisfying the regimental debts, will be transmitted by the committee, through the officer comm. the regt. to the mil. sec. to Gov., to be by him paid to the exec. or legal representative of the deceased.

In all cases where a will is not found, or when a will is found, and the estate is not solvent, or when no exec. is appointed, or when the exec. named in the will is at too great a distance to be communicated with within one month, it will be the duty of the committee to cause the live stock and other property of the estate to be sold by public auction without delay; but in the event of the exec. being on the spot, or within the distance above indicated, the estate appearing to be solvent, the committee will communicate with him, and reserve or dispose of the live stock and other property of the estate as he may desire; the proceeds of sale and the property reserved being subject, however, to the orders of the military secretary to Government, without whose authority no effects, or proceeds, or surplus of effects, are to be made over to the executor.

The committee will, in all cases, draw the arrears of pay, &c., which may be due to the deceased, and accounts of estates are not to be closed until such pay, &c., shall have been received. To relieve the committee, however, from the charge and responsibility of keeping proceeds of estates in their hands, pending the close of accounts, remittances on accounts are to be made to the military secretary to Government.

It will be the duty of the mil. aud. gen., immediately on receiving notice from the mil. sec. to gov., or other certain information, of the decease of an officer, to cause all bills in the office connected with the deceased in any way to be examined and checked, in order to their early settlement.

The committee will record and sign their proceedings, entering with all other necessary particulars, the date, places, and object of their assembly, as well as the names of the convening officer, and of the president and members.

When any delay appears likely to occur in bringing the proceedings to a close, a special report of the circumstance is to be made to the mil. sec. to gov. by the committee, with a statement of the progress made up to the date of such report.

All proceedings and papers connected with estates transmitted to the mil. sec. to gov., and all references for instructions made to him, are to be forwarded through the convening officer, who is considered responsible for the regularity of the procedure of the committee. All correspondence with the registrar of the Supreme Court, relative to his taking out administration to estates, is restricted to the mil. dep.; and committees of adjustment will neither communicate their proceedings direct to the registrar, nor will they make remittances on account of estates direct to the general treasury, but only through the mil. sec. to gov.

In the case of the demise of an officer possessed of instruments, field-books, or maps, or other articles, the property of government, it will be the duty of the committee of adjustment to report specially upon such public property to the convening officer, who will be held responsible that the same be not sold with the private effects of the deceased, and that proper measures be taken for its custody. A copy of such special report will be inserted in the proceedings of the committee.

It is hereby notified that all sums due to the military orphan fund, the military fund, the medical fund, are of the nature of regimental debts; but claims or demands of the undermentioned descriptions are not regimental debts, and therefore will not be settled by committees of adjustment:

Bills of tradesmen of every class, without exception; private accounts of agents, merchants, shop-keepers, money-lenders, and dealers.

Claims for money borrowed, for the purpose of building or purchasing quarters, to distinguish it from money due for the hire of quarters, or for their purchase from the former proprietor, which is a regimental debt.

Mess bills for any period in arrears beyond the month in which an officer dies and the immediately preceding month.

Bills for liquors supplied from the mess stores to unmarried officers separate from their charges at mess.

Bills on account of subscriptions of regimental bands, book clubs, and similar private institutions.

When an officer separated from his regt. by employ. on the gen. staff, or by having obtained leave of ab., or by any other circumstance, or an officer of the inv. estab., shall die at any station, it will be the duty of the officer com. at such station to order a committee of adjustment to assemble without delay, consisting of a president, being either an officer not under the rank of major or the next senior officer available at the station, and of two members, who shall, in all practicable cases, be officers of eight years' standing in the service; and such committee shall proceed in every particular in the mode laid down in the foregoing rules for the guidance of regt. committee of adjustment. In the case, however, of an officer temporarily detached from his regiment, dying at a station other than that to which he properly belongs, it will likewise be the duty of the officer comm. the regt. on receiving intimation of his decease, to convene a regt. committee in the usual manner; and in such a case, the regt. committee, and not that assembled where the individual died, will draw the arrears of pay; and the proceedings of the latter committee will be forwarded to the officer comm. the regt. to which the deceased belonged, in order to their communication to the regt. committee of adjustment, and to their transmission simultaneously with the proceedings of the regt. committee to the mil. sec. to gov.

Officers com. at stations where detached officers die will consider all the foregoing rules relating to the duties and responsibilities of regt. com. officers, to be equally applicable to themselves.

On the decease of warrant officers, and of non-commissioned officers and soldiers in detached employ, committees of adjustment, composed of three commissioned officers, will be assembled by order of the officer commanding at the station, and will proceed in the mode hereinbefore prescribed.

It is the duty of the town major to convene committees of adjustment on the effects of officers dying at the presidency; such committees to consist of any three officers who may be available, the president being not under the rank of major, and the members of at least eight years' standing in the service. The proceedings of such committees will be forwarded direct to the mil. sec. to gov., to whom application is to be made, when necessary, for instructions.

Such parts of the foregoing rules as are applicable to the cases of soldiers dying in the service, and are in conformity with the Mutiny Act and the Articles of War relating thereto, are hereby extended to such cases.

The Government General Orders No. 260, dated 17th December, 1827, prescribing rules for the guidance of the sub-treasurer, in regard to deposits in the general treasury, is hereby declared to be in full force.

ANNUAL INSPECTION OF IRREGULAR CAVALRY.

Head-Quarters, Simla, May 23, 1848.—The Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief having reason to believe that the instructions contained in the 3rd paragraph of general orders by the Governor-General in Council, of the 13th of September, 1822, have not been generally observed, considers it expedient to republish the same, and to request the attention of officers commanding divisions and field forces, to the necessity of requiring the horses of corps of irregular cavalry to be inspected annually, on the 1st of January.

Extract Gov. G. O. Sept. 13, 1892.—“His Lordship in Council is further pleased to direct, that henceforth there shall be an annual inspection by committees of the corps of irregular cavalry on the 1st of January of each year. The committees will be formed under the orders of the officer commanding the division in which the corps may be serving, and their duty will be to direct the discharge of all such horses as may be considered unfit to perform the services required from irregular corps.”

The officer commanding the station at which the corps may be serving will inspect the horses considered by the committee unfit for the service, and having satisfied himself that they are so, he will countersign the proceedings, and transmit them in duplicate to the officer commanding the division, under whose authority the horses are to be discharged. One copy of the proceedings will be retained for record in the office of the assistant adjutant-general of the division, the other forwarded to the adjutant-general of the army, for submission to the Commander-in-Chief.

In all cases, when practicable, the committee are to be composed of officers of the mounted branches of the service; but at those stations where no other mounted corps may be serving, they are to be formed of officers from the infantry, specially selected for the duty by the officer commanding the station.

COMMITTEES FOR REPORTING STATE OF BARRACKS, ETC.

The Right Hon. the Governor General in Council is pleased to direct that one, and in all practicable cases, two, experienced medical officers shall be appointed members of committees, assembled at military stations, for the purpose of reporting on the state of barracks, or other buildings occupied by troops, whether with the view of condemning the buildings, or of offering suggestions for improving their salubrity.

In like manner two medical officers are required to associate with military officers on committees appointed to select sites for new buildings for the accommodation of troops.

WRECK OF THE SHIP "JOHN FLEMING."

To the Editor of the Madras Circulator and General Chronicle.

Mr. Editor,—The following intelligence from Cocanada not only shews that the ship John Fleming is a total wreck, but leaves no hope whatever of saving any portion of her stores or cargo. Capt. Newman, H.C.'s steamer Hugh Lindsay had started before the arrival of this report; but he is directed to haul in to the coast on his way from Masulipatam to Coringa, and render any assistance in his power. Under the circumstances in which he would find the wreck totally abandoned, he has (by written instructions forwarded this evening) been directed, on his arrival at Coringa, to receive on board the captain, officers, and crew of the John Fleming, and bring them here.

The first report of this sad disaster stated that Capt. Hamlin had proceeded up the Godavery, and thence to Coringa, for the purpose of obtaining all possible assistance with boats, and thereby save all he could from the ship. This accounts for his absence, but he had not the slightest idea that the John Fleming would have settled down, and thus unexpectedly precluded all chance of success in his efforts to serve the underwriters. The John Fleming had taken in a cargo of rice at Coringa, and was bound from that port to the Mauritius, when she unfortunately struck on the coast about 20 miles south of Coringa.—I am, Mr. Editor, your obedient servant, CHRIS. BIDEN.

Madras, 29th May, 1848.

Extract from a letter from J. J. Knox, Esq., dated Cocanada, 24th May, 1848.

"Capt. Towle writes from the wreck of the John Fleming, 3 miles south of Magantippa.—'I found the vessel last evening, 23rd, on her larboard beam ends, with all masts standing, the hull nearly all under water. The masts were cut away. This morning, 24th, nothing is to be seen above water but the jib boom, and occasionally a little of the upper part of the stern. Nothing but boats and chronometer are saved—the vessel sunk so fast after the captain left her, that the crew had only time to put their baggage into the long boat, but not being able to get her away from the ship for want of oars, &c., they left her along side and proceeded to Coringa in the two small boats. The long boat broke adrift, having evidently been plundered by the natives. The captain, officers, and crew have saved nothing more than what they stand in. This is indeed a bad job, though by God's mercy there are no lives lost.'"—Madras Circulator, May 31.

HYDERABAD RESIDENCY POST OFFICE.—We have letters from Hyderabad (Decan) to the 22nd instant. Our correspondent writes that an investigation is still in progress in the matter of the lately suspended deputy post master at the Hyderabad residency. During its course, bribery has been laid to his charge to the amount of Rs. 7,000, of which, it is said 3,000 were actually paid. It appeared that a superintendent of, or contractor for, Dawk runners and bearers had been dismissed some time ago, and another appointed. To recover his lucrative post, the former came forward with the bribe above mentioned, which coming to the knowledge of the latter, was forthwith disclosed. Another version of the story is, that a moonshee of the post office of that place was the agent between the briber and bribee, and that he has been detected and sent to the residency authorities, who propose, if there be sufficient proof, to hand him over to the City Adawlut. That this fate attends the deputy post master is nearly certain, and it is supposed that this resolution has been taken, from the difficulty of legally convicting him in an English Court, and perhaps with the view of getting rid of a troublesome and unpleasant enquiry, which might result in odious and dangerous disclosures. His offence, as an uncovenanted servant of his honourable employers, has been one of omission, neglecting to answer the letters of his superior, the P.M.G. of Madras, for about a year. Assured that this would lead to complaints against him to the resident, the minor offence led of course, to a greater, inducing him to suppress all letters from the P.M.G. of Madras to the resident; and it is to be presumed that he opened, read, and destroyed all such letters. A very simple "dodge," as we have before mentioned, caused his detection; viz. the transmission of a letter through a neighbouring post-office not under his control. The poor man, we hear, attributes his conduct to infatuation, the usual ready plea of those who cannot otherwise defend misconduct. For about forty years, much suspicion has existed in the Hyderabad European and native community, regarding the proceedings at the post-office, of which many instances, if necessary, might be adduced. How to fix these suspicions legally was the difficulty. We have heard complaints of letters dispatched from Lingsoogoor to Worungul, reaching their destination under very suspicious circumstances, which caused a correspondence, the result of which has not reached us. Natives have lost articles dispatched by dawk banghees. Their timidity has suppressed all complaints. Mr. Wray's situation has, we hear, been given by the acting resident to a Mr. Charles, one of the clerks of the residency, a person spoken most highly of by his immediate employers and superiors; those, in fact, who know him best, and are most competent to appreciate his character. Still, distrust has been so strongly implanted in this community relative to the post-office, that its proceedings will be narrowly watched and strictly investigated. The late deputy postmaster's heavy pecuniary involvements were not considered as barring the propriety of his acquisition or retention of office for so long a period. About two years ago, a post-office moonshee, named Balmokund, was detected in extracting hooodees from letters. The same objection, we presume, that exist against the trial of Mr. Wray by British officials, occasioned the transference of this moonshee's case to the City Adawlut, where he was tried and convicted.—Bombay Telegraph, May 30,

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE AJDAH, having on board the London Mail of May 8, arrived at Bombay on June 5, the passage having been accomplished in twenty seven days and eight hours.

H. E. GOLDSMID, Esq.—We regret to hear that the continued indisposition of Mr. Goldsmid, secretary to government in the financial and revenue departments, compels him to leave for the Cape with as little delay as possible. He will probably proceed with the Childe Harold, which sails about the middle of August.—Bombay Times.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, accompanied by his military secretary, Major Brooke, left the presidency for Poona on the 1st June.

MAJOR-GENERAL S. B. AUCHMUTY, C.B., reached Poona on the 17th May, and immediately assumed the command of the division from Brigadier Manson, who has arrived at the presidency en route to take up his appointment as commander of the northern division of the army.

SANITARY CONDITION OF BOMBAY.—A Bengal contemporary notices the unusual and gratifying healthiness of the hot season this year in Calcutta, and states that while few cholera cases have occurred among the European population, the fever which has prevailed (as customary in April and May) has been of a type unusually mild. "During the past two years," he continues, "the mortality in Calcutta has certainly not been very great; we imagine that few large intertropical cities have enjoyed an equal freedom from sickness and pestilence." We are happy to say that we can report quite as favourably of the "sanitary condition" of Bombay. For two years past there has scarcely been an ascertained case of cholera amongst the native community, though deaths have more than once been reported to have occurred from that disease. The European community has not had to lament the loss of a single member from cholera. Fever, smallpox, and other maladies have occasionally prevailed, but their ravages have not been extensive. On the whole, we think Bombay has of late been considerably healthier than England; and a comparison of our mortality tables with those of the large towns at home would, no doubt, prove the fact. Considering that our little island was at one time deemed the grave of Europeans, to be able to state this much in its favour is no mean source of gratulation.—Telegraph, May 17.

H.M. BRIG "JUMNA."—It is with much regret we learn that H.M. new brig Jumna, which left Bombay last month for England, under command of Lieut. Rodney, R.N., has met with a terrific hurricane, and been compelled to put into Trincomalee, under jury-masts, where she will have to remain for some time for repair. The hurricane was encountered in lat. 10 deg. 26 min. S., and it proved so violent that it tore out the vessel's masts, threw her on her beam-ends, and nearly caused her to founder. The officers and crew had a most narrow escape from destruction. It was thought, when the Jumna quitted Bombay harbour that she was very light, and that her lower masts were too taut. But a short time elapsed, alas! ere her strength was tried by the fury of the storm. The Jumna had on board a splendid collection of carved alabaster and marble antiquities from ancient Nineveh, and as these are easily affected by water, it is feared many of them will have been defaced or destroyed. When in Bombay, every exertion was made to have plaster casts taken of them, to meet all risks at sea; casts from a single block were all that were allowed to be taken, the rest were not even exhibited to the public. The following extract from a private letter from an officer of the Jumna gives a full and interesting account of the disaster. We are glad to observe that all behaved so well, and that the exertions of Lieut. Rodney were so admirable:—

H.M.S. Jumna, at Sea, 1st May, 1848.

You will, no doubt, regret to hear of the sad catastrophe that has befallen this ship, and compelled us to bear up for Trincomalee, after having made such a prosperous passage of only ten days from Bombay to the vicinity (10 deg. 26 min.) where we experienced one of the most terrific hurricanes that ever blew. It began on Sunday morning (Easter Sunday), and gradually increased to a heavy gale, and then suddenly fell calm for an hour, but only to commence with redoubled fury. At 7h. 30m. p.m. it blew so heavily, that the ship was hoisted, but finding she would not bear the pressure of the wind, the only alternative left us was to scud before it, which we did with the rapidity of lightning. Unfortunately, however, for us, at 10h. 45m. p.m. the wind suddenly shifted, and blew, if possible, with still greater violence, until the ship was thrown on her beam ends, where she remained five minutes, when, the mainmast being cut away, she righted as if by some magical power. Still death was facing us in all its horror, from the heavy sea continually forcing the broken mast against the ship's side, and striking it with such force, that we at every blow expected to have found the vessel sinking. But the Almighty preserved us from this awful calamity. The wreck, after very severe labour, was, to our infinite joy, cut away, and we appeared to jump from the top of one sea to another, going for four hours at the rate of sixteen knots, when the hurricane abated, as if its powers had been exhausted. When the mast went, it carried with it the following spars: main-yard, main-topsail-yard, main-topmast and top-gallant-mast (housed), fore-topmast and topsail-yard, fore-top-gallant-mast, jib-boom and flying-boom, life-buoy, sails, booms, &c., and stove every boat in the ship (our cutter is in pieces). The slings of the fore-yard were all but gone, a little piece of iron of about half an inch was all that kept the yard up. The foremast is very seriously sprung. This you will say is a very good day's expenditure. Too much credit cannot be given to Lieut. Rodney for his exertions, nor to the men for the readiness with which every order was obeyed. They all appeared as if impelled by the same motive to do their utmost; otherwise, no one would now be alive to tell the tale of the disaster that had befallen the unfortunate Junna, her crew of seventy seven souls, the national antiquities, and the plants for her Majesty. I was ill at the time of the disaster, but I suddenly felt my cot fixed to the ship's beam, and although dark I instantly knew our position, and weak as I was, I got out, and endeavoured to scramble up the deck to the cabin door, and from thence to the upper deck, quite prepared to meet my fate, as I supposed, of being launched into a watery grave. The sight I beheld was terrific in the extreme; the wind was thundering, rain and spray beating against us like so much hail, rigging flying away like pieces of silk, spars tumbling from aloft, the mainmast every minute coming on board, with such power that it seemed as if it would cut the vessel in two! The most miraculous thing is that not a soul was lost, and very few hurt—none dangerously. Our friends in England will be a little surprised to hear of our detention in this country for another three months. We shall arrive in England in the beginning of November, instead of the end of July, as anticipated.—Telegraph, M. y. 30.

THE ASIATIC SOCIETY OF BOMBAY, at its meeting, had laid before it an account, with plaster-castings, of a beautiful marble obelisk from Nimroud, of the time of Darius Hystaspes (700 B.C.), with very interesting notices of the microscopic shells to be seen in the nummulate or oolite limestones which extend from Goozerat to Grand Cairo. Specimens of snow white anhydrite from Scinde, and a variety of other minerals have been presented to them. The Geographical Society have had before them a large array of specimens of salt, coal, jet, and limestone, from the banks of the Indus, with accounts of these from Dr. Fleming of the Bengal army, and Capt. Christopher of the Indian Navy; an account of the geology and topography of the country from Vizadrog to Kolapore, by Capt. Del Hoste, deputy-assistant quarter master-general, Bombay army; of a meteoric stone which fell near Dharwar, by Capt. Wingate, of the Bombay army, who presented the stone itself.

SIR JAMSETJEE JEJEEBHAY.—At the opening of the Grand Medical College, the munificent Parsee Knight, Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, intimated that he had lodged with Government the sum of 1,000l., on which interest at six per cent. would be allowed, or 60l. or so, for the purpose of assisting the alumni who had distinguished themselves in the purchase of books and instruments; and 500l. besides, which, at a 1 per cent. interest, would afford 30l. a year, for the purchase of prizes for the pupils while at college. It is curious that while Sir Jamsetjee has built an hospital, and the public have constructed a college—which Government has endowed,—at an aggregate cost of some 20,000l., and annual outlay of some 5,000l., the Board of Education decline the expense of 20l. a year for keeping the grounds—a large expanse, admirably suited for a Botanic Garden, remaining in the state of swamp, disgusting to the eye, and injurious to the health of all in the neighbourhood!

THE STEAM SHIP "POTTINGER."—The Bombay Times states, the Peninsular and Oriental Company's magnificent steam-ship Pottinger is, it will be observed, about to proceed in September for England by the Cape. This vessel is said to be found too large and too expensive for the China line. She will on coming into dock have her funnels taken out, and be fitted up as a sailing vessel.

ASSISTANT SURGEON ANDERSON, M. D., H. M.'s 22nd regiment, arrived at Belgaum on the 30th May, and assumed medical charge of the Highlanders on the 1st June.

THE LATE MR. YOUNG.—In our obituary will be found a notice of the demise of Mr. Young, late of the firm of Martin, Young, and Co., which took place at Poona on the 3rd instant. Mr. Young had been for some time suffering under chronic dysentery, and left Bombay as the monsoon approached, for the benefit of change of air. It speedily appeared that his sickness was such that no human relief could avail the sufferer. Mr. Young was generally known, and much esteemed and respected. He was a man of weak constitution, and sedate and serious turn of mind, mingling but little with the world at large, though far from averse to society. His loss will be deeply felt and sincerely regretted by all who knew him.

THE GRANT BUILDINGS.—A noble range of counting-houses, dwelling-houses, and ware rooms, built a few years since on a piece of ground on Colaba reclaimed from the sea on purpose, having proved unsuitable, by reason of their remoteness from the market, for the ends intended to be served by them, have been abandoned by all the occupants, and are on sale. A fine pier, extensive warehouses, large and commodious cotton-screws, and an extensive cotton-green, were established in connection with the buildings. The loss on the speculation must be immense.

H.M.'s FRIGATE VERNON is still in port: it is said she will leave for England in the course of the month of July. Her hull is so rotten that she will neither sail nor steer, and barely swims, at her anchors, making about a foot of water daily.

MR. JOHNSTONE, head pattern-maker in the dockyard, who was six months since sent to survey the coal-fields in Malwa, has returned from his duties: he gives a favourable account of the mineral products of the country.

SCINDE.—We have letters of the 3rd instant from Shikarpore, from which it appears that everything was tranquil at this date and auspicious in Upper Scinde. The people were quietly pursuing their avocations, taking no interest whatever apparently in the discontents or disturbances in their neighbourhood. The weather had once more become cool, and the troops were everywhere in the highest health and spirits. There have, we believe, been a couple of boats within these ten days from Kurachee, but nothing has been heard of that in which Dr. Barrington, and Lieutenant Blair, of the 19th N.I. embarked on the 31st ult. It is supposed likely that they might have sought shelter at Mandavie, or perhaps at Sonmeanee, had heavy weather overtaken them.—Bombay Times.

Messrs. RICHMOND AND Co.—The affairs of this firm are to be wound up under trust, the trustees being Messrs. W. W. Carrigill, T. F. Gray, and Merwanjee Jejeebhoy. The suspension of payment by the house has been occasioned chiefly we believe by losses in money locked up in Ceylon; no imputation whatever rests on the character of any of its members. Mr. T. R. Richmond, the head of the late firm, is, we believe, one of the oldest resident merchants at Bombay; having been nearly twenty years amongst us. He retired from the firm of Dirom, Carter, & Co., in 1844. He has taken at all times a large share in the concerns of all our public boards and joint-stock companies: he was long a leading member of the Chamber of Commerce—a director of the Oriental Bank, of the Colaba Screws and Building Company, and Bombay Steam Navigation Company; and has always borne the character of an able, warm-hearted, upright, and honourable man. We understand it to have been arranged that he was to go to Calcutta as agent for the Oriental Bank; and we believe a more suitable appointment could scarcely have been made. Irrespectively of his qualifications, the admirable manner in which he managed his embassy on the bank's affairs in London gives him claims on their confidence such as few possess.—Ibid.

MALWA, June 9.—The weather here is delightful now: we have had several heavy showers of rain, but no regular fall yet, although there appears to have been a good deal round about; high winds, and delightfully cool of a morning and evening. Ploughing and harrowing has commenced, consequently the price of cattle has risen at all the markets, and the natives say that grain will be very cheap: gram is now selling at from forty to forty-five pukka seers for a rupee, and wheat from thirty to thirty-five. By the bye, there is one thing before I give you a little journal of what has occurred in these parts, which I wish to ask you:—how is it that the Bombay troops who served with General England, who relieved the army of General Nott, and who occupied the city of Candahar on the 29th of May, 1842, have not as yet received the Candahar Medal? General England himself has got it, and so have her Majesty's 41st, and I think it is a hard case on the remainder of the brigade: either it ought to be taken away from the general and the 41st, or given to all. Colonel Woodburn sent in a memorial about it, but I never heard the answer until I saw a remark stating something about it in your paper some time ago. I am frequently asked by sepoy who belonged to the force, and who are returning from their homes, when they are to receive it, as the Bengal sepoy have all received theirs, and they could not get their friends in the Bengal army to believe that they had been at Candahar in 1842, because they could not show the medal. This is not the way to treat our honest jacks. If such a thing occurred in the Bengal army, it would cause a mutiny: the 21st had a company in the light battalion, and I trust that this has nothing to do with what has lately occurred in that corps. The earthquake was felt here on the night of the 25th, about one o'clock. A fearful murder took place here a short time ago, caused entirely by the deficient system of justice.—Ibid.

MURDER.—An atrocious murder was committed on Monday, the 5th instant, by a seaman named Hearn, belonging to the American merchant ship Andia, now lying in our harbour. It appears that the chief officer of the ship had occasion to reprimand Hearn for not performing in a proper manner the duties allotted to him. The latter, not at all relishing the idea of being spoken to on the subject, deliberately drew his knife and stabbed the officer. The murderer is now in custody awaiting his trial. The unfortunate mate we believe expired shortly after the infliction of the fatal wound.

THE "JOHN BAGSHAW" bound to Singapore, sailed out of harbour on the 6th June, with forty-two native and two European convicts on board.

GUZERAT WHEAT.—The Gentleman's Gazette states that fifty tons of Guzerat wheat have been shipped at Bombay for England, under several modes of packing, to test the practicability of the export.

COURT MARTIAL.

MR. NOBLE FISHER HUNT, MATE, L.N.

Extract from the proceedings of a Court Martial held on board the Hon. Co.'s ship Hastings, Feb. 8, 1848, to try Mr. Noble Fisher Hunt, mate, Indian navy, on a charge preferred by Capt. Thomas G. Carless.

Charge.—For insolent and insubordinate conduct in the following instance:—

"In having on the 19th day of March, 1847, when desired by Lieut. Tromson, sen. Lieut. of the Sesostris, to attend to his duty and see the deck swabbed up; afterwards came to him; Lieut. Tromson, and said, 'Place me in arrest; report me to the Captain; I want to be spoken to in that manner before military officers; I'm damned if I do,' or words to that effect.

"Given under my hand on board the Hon. Co.'s steam frigate Sesostris at sea on the 20th day of March, 1847.

(Signed) "T. G. CARLESS, Captain, Commanding H. C. S. F. Sesostris."

The Court having carefully and deliberately weighed and considered the evidence in support of the charge, as well as what the prisoner had to offer in his defence, as also the evidence adduced in his behalf, is of opinion that the charge has been proved, with the exception of the words, "I am damned if I do." The Court therefore adjudge the prisoner, Noble Fisher Hunt to be dismissed from the Honourable Company's service.

Sentence.—The Court do therefore adjudge the prisoner, the said Mr. Noble Fisher Hunt, to be dismissed the Honourable Company's service, and the said Mr. Noble Fisher Hunt is hereby sentenced accordingly.

MARKETS.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 17, 1848.—Since our last report, the season for business here has been brought to a close by the setting in of the S. W. monsoon, and the usual dullness of this period of the year has consequently prevailed in the interval. The rain that has fallen in the meantime has been most abundant, while from different parts of the interior favourable accounts in this respect are also received; and though yet too soon to form a decided opinion on the coming harvest, there is every hope, judging from present appearances, that it will be an abundant one, and that we shall also witness a resumption of business at a comparatively early period, with every prospect of a good trade during the coming season. Our money market is, we are happy to state, in a healthy condition; supplies of specie are coming freely forward from China, and matters in this respect are likely to continue easy for some time. Consequent upon this, Government Securities have improved in value, while shares in some of our Joint-stock Banks have materially declined, owing to an anxious feeling on the part of many of the native shareholders to realise their property. As we anticipated at the date of our last report, the excitement caused by the decision of the Supreme Court against the repudiators of the Opium bargains soon calmed down, and the fears expressed by some as to the serious injury that might result to our commercial interests have turned out to possess even less foundation than we thought at the time. In the thirty-five cases immediately affected by the decision of the Court, the money has instantly been forthcoming. The great portion of the loss has fallen upon our wealthy Mharwarrie Shroffs, and, as we have before said, they were quite prepared to meet Ramlall's claims against them in full. So far, as we expected, there has been no ill effect in our bazars from the above cause, nor do we think any is likely to result.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.—Our market, as usual at this period, is very quiet, and the season being closed, the business done is of course to a very limited extent. Present inquiry is confined chiefly to Grey Shirtings of forty and forty-five inch widths, particularly the latter, of low and middling qualities. For Grey Madapolams and Jaconets there is also a slight inquiry, but no sales to any extent could be effected at the moment unless at low rates. As regards other goods, nothing calls for particular remark, except Grey Dhooties, which are scarce and in some demand.

COTTON YARN.—The sales since our last have been on a somewhat limited scale, owing to the indisposition of holders to part with their reduced stocks except at advanced prices. The firmness they have shewn has had the effect of causing buyers to increase their offers: the sales made have established an advance, and we think it probable further improvement will be experienced ere long.

DYED YARNS.—In Turkey Red Twist we have no sales to report; the article continues very depressed and difficult of sale. Of Orange Yarn we have had several arrivals.

COCHINEAL.—The arrivals have been very heavy, amounting to 40,000 lbs. and prices have experienced a material decline. The estimated stock is about 50,000 lbs.; so that prices are likely to rule low for a considerable time, seeing that further supplies are on the way.

OPIUM.—The last advices from China imparted considerable activity to this drug, and a large quantity has changed hands at Rs. 1,115 to Rs. 1,120 per chest for Malwa of the best quality.

METALS.—Swedish Bar Iron is in good demand and scarce, while prices have a tendency upwards. British Bar, on the contrary, although stocks both in first and second hands are moderate, has declined in value, Rs. 34 per candy being the quotation for the best assortment. Of late the importations have been very trifling, but we observe there is a quantity on board a vessel arrived to-day. Nail Rod, both round and square, is somewhat lower in price; but in Sheet and Hoop Iron, as also Nails, there is no change to notice. Copper.—A decline has taken place in all kinds of Copper, with the exception of South American, which maintains its price. Swedish Steel, and Lead, both pig and sheet, are dull of sale. Spelter is firmer, owing to the great reduction in stocks caused by further shipments to Calcutta, and our quotation of Rs. 9½ has been refused for a large parcel.

MARINE STORES.—The only sales reported are 40 barrels Red Lead, at Rs. 17 per cwt.; 60 barrels White Lead, at Rs. 13 per cwt.; and 230 barrels Coal Tar, at Rs. 5 per barrel. Both Red and White Lead have declined in value.

SPIRITS.—Owing to the heavy stocks, our market for Brandy is dull. The sales during the past month amount to 80 hds. and 200 cases. Gin is in good demand.

BEER.—Prices have given way considerably since our last, the present quotation for Allsopp's and Bass's being Rs. 75 per hhd. at which price some large sales have been effected.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BANK OF CEYLON.—We give a conspicuous place to the following important notice, respecting the bank of Ceylon.

"The following circular has been issued to the shareholders of the Ceylon Bank, announcing that, owing to recent losses, the directors are unable to recommend a dividend for the current half-year:—

"Bank of Ceylon, 32, New Broad-street, London,
"April 3, 1848.

"I am desired to inform you, that, in consequence of some extensive failures having taken place in the island of Ceylon since the last annual court of proprietors was held, by which there is reason to apprehend loss to the bank to an amount that will exceed the reserve of undivided profits held, the court of directors do not feel justified in announcing a dividend for the current half-year.

"The court of directors have resolved to send the bank's secretary to Colombo forthwith in the character of inspector, for the purpose of thoroughly investigating the affairs of the bank, and reporting thereon, the result of which shall be communicated to the proprietors.

"The manager by whom the injudicious advances likely to involve the bank in loss were made, contrary to the express injunction of the court, has ceased to be in the service of the bank; and every precaution has been taken to restrict the business within safe limits for the future.

"I am, &c. "H. MACKAY, Secretary."

CELEBES.—The Singapore petition respecting the proceedings of the Dutch in Celebes, &c., has, we are glad to learn, had the effect of inducing the Dutch authorities to withdraw the prohibition formerly announced against English vessels visiting the native ports in Celebes. We shall make some remarks on this, as well on the Dutch comments on the petition, in our next.—Free Press, May 11.

We hear that H. M. S. Meander will not leave this for Borneo until about six weeks. The H. C. steamer Phlegethon will, we hear, leave for Labuan in about eight or ten days, and convey thither the master attendant and surveyor-general.—Straits Times, May 24.

LITERARY & SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

At the monthly meeting of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, 11th May, Dr. Buist laid on the table complete plaster casts of the apex and four sides of the Nimroud Obelisk: pieces of stucco of this size were so apt to get broken that they had not as yet been set up in their original form. With the history of the obelisk he was altogether unacquainted: the inscriptions were as distinct as if fresh from the sculptor's hands: they in all likelihood gave a description of the sculptures on the four sides of the stone. The obelisk was of very fine-grained compact marble, black slightly streaked with yellow; and so little had it suffered from the lapse of 2,500 years that the polish in much of it was perfect—the lustre was gone, but might be restored by the most moderate application of putty-dust. Its length, from the base to the commencement of the terminal apex, is five feet eight inches,—the apex itself, which is pyramidal, and of three steps, is eight inches,—so that the total length of the stone is six feet four. The sides are of unequal sizes: two of them are two feet at base, and one foot four at top; two are one foot three from end to end. The solid content of the block is about nine cubic feet; its weight a little over fourteen hundred weight, and its specific gravity three almost exactly. It is the only one of the Nimroud relics formed of marble that has as yet been noticed. It disposes of the theory of the Dean of Westminster, who, from the high state of preservation of the relics previously sent home as compared with the Athenian sculptures, assumed that the gypsum upon which they were formed must be much less liable to decomposition or alteration than limestone. The marble obelisk is in a state of much more perfect preservation than almost any of the gypsums. The Nimroud relics seem to owe the fine condition in which they are found to the fact of having for a time been protected as ornaments in the insides of buildings, and subsequently having been inhumed in dry friable rubbish, which preserved them from the air without scratching or decomposing them. The apex, and nearly two thirds of the lower part of the obelisk, are covered with cuneiform inscriptions. From the apex three feet down there are on each side five compartments slightly sunk in the stone, and filled with sculptures: each compartment is from a foot to a foot and a quarter in length, and about seven inches up and down: a margin of two inches, on which is a line of cuneiform characters, intervenes betwixt them. There are from five to six figures in relief, of about a quarter of an inch high, in each compartment,—the compartments being sunk this much under the surface of the stone. The whole twenty compartments appear to represent a long procession or series of processions bringing gifts from parts of the world to the king. There are a hundred human figures, variously attired and ornamented, bearing all sorts of loads. The first group next the king accompany a richly caparisoned horse; then come two double-humped camels or dromedaries with their drivers; then men with jars of oil, loads of fruit of all descriptions, heavy bags or baskets on their shoulders or heads,—large faggots, probably of bow staves, or some sort of valuable wood, money or metals—sacks of wine—more camels and rich vases, rich apparel, and almost every thing that might be supposed acceptable to royalty. We have, in one compartment monkeys ornamented with chains, feathers, and drapery; in another, monkeys with an elephant, which one of them seems to be teasing. These probably represent gifts from India, the animals just named being unknown in this part of Persia. A magnificent bullock, covered with rich caparisonings, with erect neck and wide branching horns; a strange creature, something like an unicorn or rhinoceros, probably meant for the latter; these probably are meant as gifts from Africa. In a compartment pretty low down, two tigers are represented in a palm tree grove, one of them in the act of seizing a deer by the haunches; they both have short manes and bushy tails, like a wolf: these probably are meant to do no more than represent the hairs on end when the animal is excited. This perhaps is meant to typify the dangers of the way over which some of the gift bearers had to pass—or it may mean to typify hunting-leopards as included among the gifts. The king, easily distinguishable by the head-dress always assigned to him, appears in two different compartments, one under the other, next the top of the stone, and in both cases he and his attendants are represented meeting the procession. At three places on the stone there are groups of individuals in exactly the same attitude, which look as if they headed the divisions of the procession, or three separate processions. They bear no burthens, and are armed and more richly attired than the rest. They are all on the same side of the stone—that immediately before the side on which the king is sculptured, on which, therefore, it is assumed that the starting of each procession is delineated—the two uppermost excepted. In the case of these two, the king and his courtiers receiving the processions take the place of the fourth compartments of the other three. The leading figure of the groups just referred to stands upright with a look of respectful attention, as if waiting to be addressed: his left hand is slightly held forward, with the right hand resting on the wrist of the left. The beard, wig, and head-gear, are richly knotted and adorned. The party following is dressed in nearly the same attire as the leader, but is without beard: his right hand is held forward, and his left is raised as high as his head, as if warning those behind him forming the procession to come on. Then follows a man dressed like the bearers of burthens; he has peaked shoes upon his feet; he has no load, he holds up both his hands, and bends forward his brow in the attitude of solicitation, as if humbly entreating that his gifts may be received. In the uppermost compartment, containing the caparisoned horse, this last figure is wanting. By far the most interesting groups are the two in which the king and his attendants appear filling the uppermost compartments on the first side of the stone. The king is recognized by the form of the cap in which he is always represented. In the uppermost group he is delineated as returning from hunting or from battle. He holds a bow in his left hand, leaning on it like a staff—its lower extremity rests on the ground: in his right is a bunch of arrows:—the bow seems about four feet in length, the arrows about two. A supplicant, dressed like the majority of the bearers of the gifts, rests on his knees and hands, kissing the hem of the king's garment, and looking slightly upwards. The attire of the king, though extremely elegant, is less gorgeous in this than in the next compartment: he has the usual knotted beard and fell of hair depending from his neck. From a little above the elbows, where a short-sleeve is held together by a clasp, his arms are naked. He wears a tight vestment, plainly embroidered, over his chest; a belt about ten inches wide girds his waist: he wears an under robe as low as the ankle, richly trimmed round the skirt. A short square skirt, like an apron reversed, depends from the belt down over the hips; this is edged with fur, with two rows of rich embroidery, and from beneath it depend two cords, suspending massy tassels about the calf of the leg. Immediately behind the king is his bowbearer, carrying a bow erect. He is armed with a sword, or some similar weapon, with a cross near the tip of the sheath, such as is carried by all the armed figures on the stone; his tunic is similar to that of the king, his other vestment more plain. He has no beard, but a large mass of plaited and knotted hair hanging down from the back of his head. The faces of all the unbearded men are remarkably like each other—round, full, plump, and intelligent—they are perfectly smooth. Behind the bow-bearer follows the shield-bearer—a stout brassy man, with a long knotted beard. His dress consists of a rich tunic, extending no further than the knee: his legs are bare; he wears on his feet sandals like the rest. A rich fringed baldric or belt passes under the right arm and over the left shoulder, where it is fastened with a large clasp: it is worn somewhat like the Highland soldier's belted plaid. The shield is about two feet and a half in diameter. This figure closes the compartment on the left. Facing the king, just behind the man on the ground, are two men in attire similar to that of his majesty, but much more magnificent. They have both got baldrics over the left shoulders, which is turned to the spectator. From the drapery already described depend four tassels instead of two. The first man is bearded with knotted hair like the rest. He is followed by another in attire similar in all respects to that just described, but that he is beardless: he seems to have a staff under his arm instead of a sword by his side. Both advance with the attitude of deep respect; with the right hand resting on the left wrist—the left hand slightly advanced, and the fingers turned up. These fill up the right hand side of the compartment: they are followed, as already, on going round to the right side of the stone, by two men leading on a richly caparisoned horse, held by a page; and again, as we go round, by double-humped camels, &c. Immediately in front of the king, at about the elevation of his forehead, but probably meant to appear in the distant sky, are two emblems, which are represented in the next compartment, though in reverse order, and in all likelihood they are meant to represent some celestial objects. The one nearest the king is a circular disk, including a star of eight points; that beyond it is a winged globe, extremely similar to that given by Wilkinson * from the Persopolitan sculptures, some of which he says were probably executed by captives taken from Thebes at the Persian conquest. The compartment just under this resembles that already described in so many points that a very short account of it may suffice. The same celestial emblems as those just noticed are again seen in the air, but in this case the winged globe is nearest the king, who holds upon the tips of his fingers a censer or some other vessel—probably containing an offering. His left hand rests on the hilt of his sword: his head-dress is the same as before, or indeed as it always is. His lower garments are different and considerably more gorgeous. As in the previous compartment, a man lies on his hands and knees before him: in this case his face is almost in the dust, instead of being half turned up, while he kisses the hem of the garment of the king. There are two persons before and behind him, all gorgeously attired; as are the attendants in the previous compartments; they have all richly-carved wigs, but are destitute of beards. The one next behind the king holds a long-handled umbrella over the king's head; it is like those mentioned by Wilkinson, consisting of a light framing covered with leather. It was common in Egypt as well as in Greece and Persia, and was commonly indicative of royalty. Behind him is an attendant holding what seems a truncheon of office. The party immediately in front of the king, behind the supplicant, holds out something like a bush or broom, and looks boldly, as if confronting or reproving royalty; his other hand is held forward with a scourge or thong. The follower behind him has his hands crossed and a staff under his arm, exactly like the attendant in the corresponding place in the compartment above. The drawing and grouping of these sculptures is, on the whole, good, and generally full of expression. In details they correspond exactly with that of the larger figures seen singly or in lesser groups on the gypsum slabs: in these we have nowhere groups of more than a few figures.† The whole of the figures in presence of the king are represented as without caps or bonnets (it would be incorrect, as will appear presently, to say bareheaded,) and wear shoes or sandals. The king alone is covered: so that at this time the oriental custom of keeping the head covered and casting off the shoes was not in Nineveh considered a sign of reverence. The extreme care and faithfulness with which the features of the face, the muscles of the limbs, and all the details of the dress, are delineated, lead to the inference that everything else is represented with equal accuracy. It would be impossible ever to disentangle the human hair or beard were they plaited, knotted, and worked, as represented; they must, if once so involved, get filled with filth and vermin, and become out of order in a few weeks as the human hair became uprooted. The pages leading the horse, and attendants on the group of camels, are evidently boys or lads; their beards and hair are exactly like those of elderly men. From this and other circumstances about to be referred to, it is inferred that the beards and head-dresses were altogether artificial. The Egyptians shaved their heads and beards, and it was reckoned a reproach to permit the hair of either to grow: the wealthier portion of them wore rich plaited wigs of hair, of which specimens are to be seen in the British and Berlin museums.‡ Imitations of these in woollen or other coarse material were worn by the poorer classes. There seems no reason to doubt but that the custom here described is typified on the Nimroud sculptures as prevalent in Assyria.

Dr. Buist laid on the table a collection of drawings of marbles of great antiquity found in Scotland, on one of which tigers, monkeys, and other oriental figures, are represented. The principal persons on the whole of these stones wore large matted wigs! Dr. Buist also laid before the meeting a Baetrian coin which he had picked up in the bazaar: it was not described either in the Ariana Antiqua, or in Prinsep's Historical Researches. On one side was the head of a king with a crown, wig, and beard, exactly resembling the head of the king (Darius Hystaspes) on the Bihestan sculptures. § On the opposite side was a well-marked figure of very delicate proportions, leaning back on a chair—with wig and beard like the preceding. He seemed to hold forward a branch in his hand, his attitude being exactly like that of Britannia on the English coins of George III., with the branch, but without the drapery or shield: in place of a trident he held a spear in his hand. This was surrounded by a Greek inscription not made out.* The kings on the Bihistan sculptures, and probably a considerable part of the others, wear head-dresses of similar character. The reign of Cambyses, son of Cyrus, was chiefly occupied in the conquest of Egypt, and it is to the reign of Darius Hystaspes nearly the whole of the marbles are devoted: with that of Xerxes they cease to afford any record. They relate therefore to an epoch extending from 523 to 485 before Christ, or to about 2,400 years from the present. Alexander the Great, again overran Asia betwixt the years 327 and 323 a.c., or 2185 from the present time. The earliest of the coins described by Prinsep, or Wilson, are those of Theodotus a.d. 266†—the present coin belongs to about the beginning of our era,—so that the very long interval of 490 years elapsed betwixt the execution of the Bihistan sculptures and the striking of the coin exhibited. The Egyptians so despised the Greek custom of permitting their hair and beards to grow‡ that they would not so much as eat with them, or touch a dish or utensil from which they had eaten; yet the Greeks clung to them, as do the Albanians still, as something national: and it is singular to find a piece of money coined by a Greek sovereign representing him with the artificial beard and wig of Egypt and Assyria. The sandals of the more important personages on the obelisk have a very close resemblance to those on the pair produced by Brigadier Stacey, found by him in Beloochistan, and believed to be copies from the Greek. The lesser personages wore shoes with turned-up peaks, very like those common all over India: a few only were barefooted.

† The Bihestan sculptures are exceptions: but these are on a gigantic scale on the face of the rock, and seem to have very little artistic merit. Quarterly Review, Vol. LXXIX.; Journal of the Asiatic Society, Part X.; and Royal Geographical Society, Vol. IX.

¶ The general reader may be reminded that the celebrated personage to whom nearly all the writings in the cuneiform character which have been deciphered refer, is Darius Hystaspes, who, after having destroyed Smerdis, who usurped the throne of Persia after the death of Cambyses, was elected King by his brother conspirators about 522 B.C. His defeat by the Greeks at Marathon is one of the most celebrated incidents in classical antiquity. He besieged and captured Babylon, and made many conquests. He died in the midst of his preparations for a second attack on Greece in 485 B.C. He was thus contemporary with the prophet Daniel, and with the builders of the second Temple, and with Anacreon, Diogenes, Zoroaster, and Pythagoras. The sculptures executed in his time are thus some 2350 years old; the gorgeous scenes they represent, and attire they delineate, bear witness to the proverbial luxury of the Persian court.

* The inscription on this coin has since been made out by the Rev. Dr. Stevenson; it is subjoined. Its discovery in the Bombay bazaar, where all sorts of natural and artificial wonders abound, ought to impress on the inhabitants that they need not resort to distant parts to make discoveries, when they have the means of doing so around them:—

† Although I believe few if any such have been brought to light in India, neither Parthian coins are not very uncommon in Europe. On consulting Eckhel (Part I. Vol. III. Vindobonæ 1794, pp. 529 and 530), I find a coin described as belonging to Phraates IV., the fifteenth of the Arsacids, which both in the emblem and inscription agrees with your coin. The image of the king's face he says is Modeste barbata diademate crispis crinibus. I am rather inclined to think he wears a wig, and not his own hair; and from the form of the beard I should rather think it also false—just as in the images of the marbles lately dug up near Nineveh, to which the head on the coin in question bears a very remarkable resemblance. Phraates IV. was a contemporary of Augustus. The year is not mentioned on your coin, or the letters have been obliterated, but the month Dæsius, corresponding to our June, is given. The figure on the obverse is a Parthian, sitting and holding up a bow or some warlike instrument in one hand, supporting a spear with the other. The legend is as follows, and arranged round the coin, beginning at the head of the figure:—

ΒΑΣΙΛΑ [ΕΩΣ]

ΕΥΕΡΓΕΤΕΩΣ

‡ Wilkinson, ut supra.

§ The most singular custom of the Egyptians, says Mr. Wilkinson, was that of tying a false beard upon the chin, which was made of plaited hair, and of peculiar form, according to the person who wore it. Private individuals had a beard scarcely two inches long; that of the King was of considerable length, and square at the bottom.—Ancient Egyptians, vol. iii. chapter x. p. 365.

¶ The King even wore his crown in the heat of battle, like the Kings of Europe in olden times, sometimes wearing a wig; but a helmet, made apparently of woollen stuff, with a thick mass, not very unlike the modern Persian cap, was generally preferred; and on religious ceremonies he put on a striped head-dress, probably of linen, which descended in front over the helmet, and terminated behind in a sort of queue, bound with ribbon.—Ibid. p. 353.

¶ This description applies almost exactly to the head-dress of the King as represented in the greater part of the Nimroud marbles, especially in the statue of the Persian cap and queue.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, August 1, 1848.

DURING the last week, two gentlemen who had been Crown judges in India, and had been dismissed from their offices by the Crown, presented their cases before two different tribunals, with a view (in one instance, at least), not of obtaining a reversal of their sentences, but of being re-appointed to other similar offices. Although somewhat different in their respective circumstances, the two cases have sufficient analogy to furnish a general principle, which is of some importance.

The case of Sir John Thomas Claridge, which was brought before the House of Commons on the 25th of July, by Mr. Gladstone, is briefly stated, as follows:—The learned gentleman was appointed Recorder of Penang in 1825. The constitution of the Court of the United Settlements of Penang, Singapore, and Malacca is somewhat peculiar: the charter ordains that the Court of Judicature should be held before the Governor, the resident Councillor, and the Recorder, the two former to take precedence of the latter, unless they sat as a Court, or executed judicial functions, when the Recorder was to take precedence next after the Governor; that, when two judges only were present, the Recorder, in the event of a division of opinion, should have a double vote, and that no Court should be held without the presence of the Recorder, unless by the express authority of the Governor.

The charges alleged against Sir John Claridge by the Court of Directors of the East-India Company were six in number: first, that he refused to execute the duties of his office until the local government guaranteed the payment of an increased court establishment, beyond what the Government deemed sufficient; second, that he refused to administer the oath to Mr. Murchison, one of the resident councillors, when duly appointed, in order to qualify him as a judge; third, that he refused to proceed to Singapore and Malacca, to hold sessions for the trial of criminals, unless the Government agreed to pay his circuit expenses; fourth, his vexatious exercise of authority, in repealing, individually, a standing order of the Court, passed by a majority of the judges, which he was enabled to do by the peculiar constitution of the Court; fifth, unbecoming conduct towards his colleague, the resident councillor of Malacca; and sixth, making use of his judicial station to hold up the Government to public odium.

We do not enter into the details of these charges, or into the answers or explanations of Sir J. T. Claridge; we have stated sufficient merely to shew their nature and complexion. The charges were referred, in 1831, for investigation to a Committee of the Privy Council, who recommended that Sir John should be removed, and he was removed accordingly.

In their report, however, the Committee stated that, although he was not justified in the measures to which he resorted for enforcing a more liberal court establishment or the payment of his circuit expenses, yet the local government were not fully justified in their scale of allowances, and considering that the conduct of Sir John had proceeded from a mistaken view of his line of duty, and not from any corrupt or improper motive," they declared that "no imputation rested upon his capacity or integrity, in the exercise of his judicial functions, so as to preclude his Majesty from employing him in his service in some other judicial situation."

This declaration was interpreted by Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Goulburn as a "recommendation," and by Sir F. Theigier as "a positive assurance amounting to a pledge," that Sir John should be reappointed to some similar situation. But such a pledge, as remarked by Sir John Hobhouse and Lord John Russell, would be an unconstitutional invasion of the prerogative. The words cited from the Order in Council clearly import no more than that Sir John Claridge was placed in statu quo ante his appointment; not disqualified by his removal, the merit of experience being neutralized by the manifestation of an error in judgment.

The other case is that of Mr. Robert Langslow, late a district judge in Ceylon, which was referred by her Majesty, at his instance, to the Committee of Privy Council for Trade and Plantations, before whom it was argued on the 21st of July, and several following days, by Mr. M. D. Hill, on behalf of Mr. Langslow, the Attorney-General appearing on the other side. The decision of their Lordships has not yet been given.

It would require a large space to set out the particulars of this case; but an outline of it will serve the purpose we have in view.

Mr. Langslow, who was called to the English bar in 1823, was appointed Attorney-General at Malta in 1832, and was removed from that office in 1838. In 1839 he was appointed judge of the District Court (No. 1, South) of Colombo, being the first member of the legal profession who had filled the office of district judge, to which hitherto civil servants had been appointed. This Court, like that of Penang, was peculiarly constituted. The law of Ceylon is the Roman-Dutch law, modified by the Charter of 1833, and the District Courts have an original and exclusive jurisdiction, civil and ecclesiastical, without limit (subject to appeal to the Supreme Court), and a large but limited criminal jurisdiction. The Charter provided that criminal prosecutions should be by information, filed by the Queen's Advocate, in the Supreme Court, but that the District Courts (in each of which the judge was assisted by three lay assessors) should take cognizance of "breaches of the peace, petty assaults, or other offences of a like nature." The uncertainty of these terms, the difficulty of knowing what were "petty assaults" and what "minor offences of a like nature," raised a question of jurisdiction between the district judge on one side, and the Queen's Advocate on the other, which appears to have been the groundwork of the differences between Mr. Langslow and the Government authorities at Ceylon. The latter charged the district judge with dilatoriness in the disposal of business, contumacy in refusing to try "minor" causes; to which charges were added others of a less prominent or more general character: such as habitually indulging in sneers, and writing against the Government in the newspaper; insulting people from the bench, making long speeches, insubordination, and insolence. Mr. Langslow defended himself by argument and by evidence against these charges; but the Governor, Sir Colin Campbell, and the Executive Council, suspended him in 1843, and in 1844 Lord Stanley, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, for reasons irrespective of those which had influenced the Governor and Council, directed his removal from the service.

The question which arises out of these two cases appears to us a grave one; namely, how far the Government would be justified in reappointing to an Indian judgeship a gentleman who, upon substantial grounds, has been removed from such an office. Far be it from us to argue that such removal should operate as a general bar; on the contrary, we can even conceive cases in which qualities, whereby a man is unfitted for one station, may fit him for another, and the number of subordinate judicial appointments at home in the gift of the Crown is so large that there can be no difficulty in appropriating one to a gentleman who, like Sir John Claridge, has fallen into an error which in England would be of trivial moment and could be promptly remedied, but which in India might have time to propagate a large family of evils.

We have had too much experience (it would be invidious to mention examples) of the mischiefs which spring from conflicts between the executive and the judicial functionaries of Indian governments to doubt that discretion and temper are amongst the prime qualities required in an Indian judge. Squabbles in New South Wales, or Van Diemen's Land, or even in our North American or West Indian Colonies, between haughty or indiscreet governors and capacious or unruly judges, unseemly as they are, leave no permanent injury behind. The judge is removed, or the governor recalled, and the atmosphere of the colony is, perhaps, the purer after the storm. But in India, such dissensions have been justly characterized as not only "discreditable to our character in the estimation of the natives," but "dangerous to our power;" and, in our humble opinion, in no instance where an Indian judge, through lack of discretion, or infirmity of temper, has engaged in an unnecessary collision with the local government, and been removed, should he ever be permitted to fill a similar appointment there.

PENSION TO LIEUT. WAGHORN.

WE observe that Lieut. Waghorn has written to the Times, "distinctly contradicting" a paragraph inserted in the last Mail, to the effect that the East-India Company had granted him a pension of 100*l.* per annum for life, observing that he "had not received any distinct assurance or promise of pecuniary aid from the Company." We are not in the habit of making statements of this kind at random, and if Lieut. Waghorn will give us credit for a short time, he will probably find that the statement which he has "distinctly contradicted" is correct.

CORRESPONDENCE.

No. III.—ON THE POPULATION AND MORTALITY IN CALCUTTA.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—In my last letter I presented a general summary of the principal observations which have been made with regard to the effects of cholera upon the native and European populations in Calcutta. The comparative prevalence of other diseases may be briefly examined by reference to the records of the Presidency General Hospital, and of the Hospital of H.M.'s Corps, in garrison in Fort William. The patients admitted into the former comprise soldiers both of H.M.'s and the Company's regiments, British and American seamen from the shipping in the harbour, townsmen, paupers (generally seamen), and invalid soldiers on their way to England. From these sources, and from the acute diseases having been generally neglected in their earlier stages, it may be readily imagined that the mortality out of the number admitted is unusually great. Excluding cases of cholera, the total number of admissions in twelve years, from 1827 to 1838, was 14,490, and the deaths 1,332, being 9.2 per cent. The Garrison Hospital contains a very different class of men, both as to their average age (which probably does not exceed twenty-five years, their general state of health, and the facility afforded them for checking the severer diseases on their first appearance. The admissions in the same period were 15,564, and the deaths 544, or 3.49 per cent. only. These probably also include some cases of cholera, which, being allowed for, would make the contrast appear still stronger. The following table shews the ratio of different classes of diseases compared (as nearly as they can be ascertained) with each other in the two hospitals, but the comparison is somewhat defective, for want of an uniform system of nomenclature:—

Various causes, no doubt, combine to produce the great mortality which is to be observed in Calcutta, but the most important are the defective state of the drainage, and the impurities and neglected condition of the native part of the city. From 1835 to 1839 a body of evidence was collected by the committee appointed to inquire into the propriety of establishing a native fever hospital, which has afforded the most valuable and important suggestions for improvement. Native gentlemen of high standing joined the committee, and native medical men combined with the European authorities in the inquiry into the existing nuisances, and the means of their removal; and it is just to add, that the remedies offered to the consideration of Government were all of the most practical kind. For instance, under the head of drainage, the levels were taken, the fall calculated, the expense estimated, and it is presumed that, from that time to the present, some or other of the improvements proposed have been in course of operation. At that period, Mr. Ryper attributed the bowel complaints and dysentery, so common amongst the natives, to damp houses, unwholesome food, and contaminated air; and Mr. Brett, surgeon to the Governor-General's body-guard, considered that, out of 401 medical cases amongst natives treated at his hospital, 266 were dysenteries, remittent and intermittent fevers, affections of the spleen, and rheumatic attacks, which might be attributed to the same cause. A native practitioner of medicine, in whose opinion great confidence was placed, stated it as the result of his personal observations that the children of the natives were generally unhealthy, which he attributed to the narrowness of the streets, the canals being full of vegetable matter, and the dust of the streets, which was the fertile cause of ophthalmia and cough. Add to this, that there were but few native medical men on whom dependence could be placed. He stated that there were about twenty-five East-Indian doctors, and fifty Hindoo and Mahomedan, who, however, knew but little of European modes of treatment; their knowledge was generally confined to the compounding of medicines.

As to the drainage, the evidence of Dr. Graham tended to shew that it was almost impossible for drains to be in a worse condition, the centre of the conduit being in many cases below the level of the extremities. The tanks and the canals, which by the supply of pure and abundant water ought to have been the sources of health and comfort to the inhabitants, were suffered by the natives to become loaded with impurities and offensive matter. Exhalations most dangerous to health, rising from them, contaminated the surrounding air. The Entally Canal is particularly mentioned as being almost in a stagnant state, and the receptacle of the contents of the town drains. It may be supposed that the supply of pure water is consequently very deficient. The richer sort of natives drink the water of the Ganges; but the poor are not only compelled to have recourse to the polluted tanks and the noxious stagnant streams of the canals; but even from these objectionable sources they can only obtain, on account of the cost of carriage, a small and inadequate supply. The committee reported that, in a country where it may be considered a peculiar necessary of life, the supply of water to the poor inhabitants was not two-fifths of the quantity which is estimated to be allowed to each family in London, and that the cost of the daily allowance to each family would be a quarter of an anna, where the wages of ordinary labourers do not exceed two annas per day. It does not appear that any natural impediment exists to the proper draining, ventilation, and cleansing of the streets; and there is every reason to hope that the suggestions which have been offered for the improvement of the condition of the native town and suburbs, and especially the establishment of the Fever Hospital, the purifying of the canals, and the formation of new tanks, will produce the most important results, not merely to the health of the native population, but also to that of the European inhabitants of Calcutta. The first of these suggestions appears, by a minute of Sir John Grant in April, 1847, to be at last in a state of rapid progress. The Fever Hospital is estimated to cost £10,000, and to be able to receive, according to the average of twelve days, the usual duration of these cases, 10,500 patients in the year. The mention of this valuable institution naturally leads us again to the obligations which the public of Calcutta are under to the talents, the philanthropy, and the untiring zeal and energy of Dr. Martin, whose complete Report on the Medical Topography of Calcutta has been already referred to. It was to his exertions and practical skill that we owe the collection of the body of evidence, the fruits of which are already appearing in the carrying into effect of some of the recommendations contained in the Report, so ably drawn up by Sir John Grant. It is to be hoped that others will quickly follow, especially the improvement in the medical returns, of which so excellent an example has been set in the Madras presidency. In the mean time, I cannot do better than commend such of my readers as may be interested in the subject to the Reports above referred to, or to a brief history of their origin, contained in two articles, by Dr. Martin, in the Lancet for Sept. 25 and Oct. 9, 1847. Whatever credit may be due to the successive Governors-General, to Sir John Grant, and the other high authorities, by whom the establishment of the Fever Hospital and the other important measures for the sanitary condition of Calcutta have been pressed forward, it must not be forgotten that Dr. Martin was the first to introduce the subject in such a shape as to enforce, and perhaps we may say to justify, the interference of Government, and both the present and future population of Calcutta will owe a debt of gratitude to his public spirit and scientific labours.—I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

Equitable Office, Blackfriars,

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, July 26.—Case of Sir J. T. Claridge.—Mr. Gladstone brought before the House the case of Sir John T. Claridge, who had been appointed Recorder of Penang in 1825, from which office he was removed in 1831, in consequence of certain charges alleged against him, as to the manner in which he had executed the functions of his office, which charges were referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, who reported that the conduct of Sir John had “proceeded from a mistaken view of his line of duty and not from any corrupt or improper motive,” and though they decided that he ought to be removed, yet they declared that no “imputation rested upon his capacity or integrity in the exercise of his judicial functions, so as to preclude His Majesty from employing him in his service in some other judicial situation.” Mr. Gladstone considered that this dismissal was not a final act, and that the intention of the Judicial Committee was to give Sir John a fair expectation that he should be re-appointed to some similar situation. He moved, therefore, an address to Her Majesty, praying that Her Majesty, graciously taking into consideration the expectations which the terms of the said order in council were calculated to create, might be pleased to direct that Sir J. T. Claridge might receive an appointment in Her Majesty's service of such a class as to Her Majesty should seem meet.

The motion was supported by Sir F. Theiger and Mr. Goulburn, the former of whom maintained that the order of the council conveyed a recommendation, and even a positive assurance, amounting to a pledge, that Sir John should receive a future appointment. It was opposed by Sir John Holhouse, who declared that the proviso of the Privy Council (which was a little extrajudicial) enjoined the ministers of the crown (and it would have been odd if it did) to give employment to Sir John Claridge, and consented that the motion was unconstitutional, and an interference with the prerogative of the crown.

Lord J. Russell took the same view of the motion, and expressed his surprise that Sir F. Thesiger should propose to make the prerogative subservient to a recommendation of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which, after all, went no further than declaring that the crown was "not precluded" from appointing Sir John to some other judicial situation. If the House agreed to this motion, its patronage would be much enlarged; whereas, it had business enough in the exercise of its own proper functions, without discussing the fitness of gentlemen for appointments under the crown.

Sir J. W. Hall acknowledged that the case was one of great hardship; but the Company had made to Sir John Claridge two grants of £600 each. He recommended that the motion should be withdrawn, and perhaps this discussion would have the effect of calling the attention of the government to the case, and if they should be of opinion that Sir J. Claridge had suffered wrong, it was to be hoped that they would appoint him to some situation for which his talents qualified him.

Mr. Huxley expressed regret that the motion had been brought forward. Looking to the high character of the right hon. gentleman by whom this question had been introduced, he feared that the motion would be a precedent for many others of a similar description, of which Mr. Gladstone himself might feel the inconvenience at a future period.

The motion was withdrawn.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CROWN LANDS at HONG-KONG will not be alienated in perpetuity, but let on leases, which are to be offered for sale at public auction. The duration of the leases will not exceed twenty-one years for country lands intended for the purposes of cultivation; but country lands required for erecting residences, and all lands for building purposes, will be let on leases for seventy-five years, not renewable by right, but at the option of the government, and on the holders paying an increased rent. Powers will be reserved, when necessary, for regulating the character of the buildings to be erected in particular situations, and for avoiding the lease, if within a specified time the buildings be not completed or in progress. The rent to be paid for lands designated as marine, town, or suburban lots, will be terminated exclusively by public auction; but leases of country lots, if they have been once exposed to auction and not sold, may be afterwards sold by private agreement at the upset price. — Colonisation Circular.

H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS,

&c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavour to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the utmost despatch will be used in the shipments from London.

H. and T. Peat feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are apt of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior qualities. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineers, will be executed according to the latest regulations, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12th saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 3, 4, and 5th, as present as much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. P. cannot be accountable for any damage the same may receive after shipment.

She also strongly recommends a beautiful description of Merino Vest and Drawers adapted for the East and West Indies.

Mrs. W. takes this opportunity to thank her friends and the public for the liberal support she has acquired for the last six years, and begs to assure them that as she devotes the whole of her time and attention to her business, that the best attention will be paid to all orders she may be favoured with for either ladies' or gentlemen's clothing, and for payment on a bank or any house of known responsibility in London, will meet with immediate attention.

CARPENTER AND WESTLEY, OPTICIANS, 94, REGENT STREET, WATERLOO PLACE, LONDON.

LADIES TRAVELLING, or otherwise exposed to the scorching rays of the sun and heated particles of dust, will find ROWLANDS' KALYDOR a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity of the skin. The numerous varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions, Sunburn, Freckles, Tan, and Discolorations, are pleasantly eradicated by the Kalydor, and the skin rendered delicately soft and clear. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by the Queen, the Court and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and the several Courts of Europe; together with the "élite" of the Aristocracy, from the sultry climes of India and the drawing-rooms of Calcutta and Madras to the frozen realms of the Casr and the saloons of St. Petersburg and Moscow.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

67 Beavers of superior KALYDOR, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and which, by their repellent action, endanger health.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL.—The unprecedented success of this discovery in restoring, improving, and beautifying the Human Hair, is too well known and appreciated to need comment. The special patronage of the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and of every Court of the civilized world; and the high esteem in which it is universally held, together with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits.—Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, a white Powder compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the Oriental Herbal, of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the Teeth, strengthening the Gums, and in rendering the Breath sweet and pure. Its truly efficient and fragrant aromatic properties have obtained its selection by the Queen, the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

* BEWARE OF SPURIOUS IMITATIONS—some are offered under the implied sanction of Royalty and the Government Departments, with similar attempts at deception. The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS" pressing that of the article on the wrapper or label. Sold by them at 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by all Chemists and Perfumers.

MOURNING,—COURT, FAMILY, AND COMPLIMENTARY.

Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

CURED by HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.

WOUNDS in a LEG after more than THREE YEARS' SUFFERING.—The wife of Mr. James P. Springle, schoolmaster, of the town of St. Patrick, Grenada, had been suffering with an ulcerated leg for more than three years, which was so bad that it baffled the skill of all the professional practitioners in the island, who could not possibly heal it. After every other remedy had failed, Holloway's Ointment and Pills were resorted to, and by their powerful efficacy the wounds were soon healed, and a perfectly sound cure effected. These medicines excel all others in the cure of scrofula or king's evil, glandular or other natural swellings.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

AGENTS IN INDIA.

Calcutta Messrs. Robinson, Balfour, & Co.
Madras Messrs. Line & Co.
Bombay Messrs. Ritchie, Stewart, & Co.
Ceylon Messrs. Ackland, Boyd, & Co.

The following peculiar advantages are offered by this Company:—

1. Their policies cover the risk of living and voyaging over a far larger portion of the globe than do those issued by any other Company in existence. They allow the assured to reside in the Australasian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow to the assured for the whole of life one passage out and home to any of those colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged, and the premium is reduced to the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence.

2. Premiums may be paid, and claims settled at Sydney, where there is a Board of Directors and Trustees; and at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, where there are Agents.

3. A third of the premiums may remain unpaid for five years; nor is it necessary for the maintenance of the Assurance to pay up the premium at the end of that time, but the unpaid thirds may remain as a debt against the policy, if the interest be regularly paid upon them as the renewal premiums fall due.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

THE outbreak at Mooltan and the insurrection at Lahore, which have been the chief political topics of our late Indian intelligence, seem more and more to resemble in their chaacter a recent outbreak and insurrection nearer home, and to lose the terrors with which exaggeration in both cases clothed them. A writer who is at a loss for a subject, and has a talent at running parallels, might find some points of analogy between the projects and career of the "King of Munster" and Colonel Khan Sing, who, like the other, aimed at a "repeal of the union" between his country and ours; and even the fakeers, the disseminators of treason amongst our sepoys, might be assimilated to certain reverend denunciators and preachers of sedition in Ireland.

By the present mail, which brings intelligence from Bombay to the 1st of June, we learn that affairs remain in much the same condition as they were. The reports from beyond the Sutlej are satisfactory; the Sikh capital and country are tranquil. The conspiracy appears to have been, as we have already observed, "a wild and impracticable scheme," which is now traced to the restless and desperate woman who prompted it, the Rani Chunda. The feeble attempt to tamper with our sepoys was unsuccessful, for it does not appear that a direct participation in the plot has been brought directly home to a single native soldier.

In this absence of exciting intelligence, more importance than would otherwise belong to the occurrence is given to the proceedings of the rebellious gooroo, Bhae Maharaj Sing. The British force sent after this man and his "army" of ragamuffins failed to come up with him, though it appears to have dispersed his followers, some of whom were taken. The saint was, however, closely pursued by some of the irregular local bands in the service of the durbar, and he took refuge upon an island in the Chenab: being blockaded there and nearly starved, he plunged into the river. His horse having come to one of the banks without his rider, the gooroo was supposed to have been drowned; but some accounts relate that he had reached Mooltan. These accounts, however, appear to rest upon no better ground than the report of some natives, who say they saw the saint floating down the river astride upon a muscuck or inflated skin. His "army" is, at all events, annihilated, some hundreds having been brought into Lahore as prisoners.

A rumour was afloat that the Rani had made her escape from the party who were conducting her to Benares. The incident is said to have occurred in this manner: One of her attendants having been ordered back to Lahore, to give evidence before the durbar, the Rani substituted a slave-girl for herself, and, personating the attendant, succeeded in baffling the escort. But a lady who has been much occupied in the display of her charms than is usual with Eastern ladies rank, or even with Sikh ladies, is not likely to have profited by so shallow an artifice.

The state of affairs at Mooltan is unaltered, except by the reduction of the resources of the ex-Dewan to a more sober estimate. His army, not more than 8,000 or 10,000, is said to be attached to his interests by very feeble ties, and the citadel of Mooltan, sometimes described as almost impregnable, is now represented as weak, and incapable of defence against a properly appointed force. Moolraj, it is stated, has already lost heart, and prepared for the worst, having given directions for the slaughter of his wives in the event of his fall, and provided a supply of sandal-wood for his and their joint cremation! His cabinet council, it is said, have advised him to implore the clemency of the British government.

Meanwhile Colonel Cortlandt and Lieutenant Edwardes are pressing upon the Mooltanees, in conjunction with our tried and faithful ally, the Khan of Bhawalpore. Their successes have established the influence of the Lahore government in the large and fertile district west of the Indus, called the Derajat, disheartened the rebel bands, and prevented many mercenary leaders from joining Moolraj. The Bunnoos are the only Sikhs who are said to shew a disposition to join the Dewan; the Pathans and Beloochees stand aloof or join the durbar cause.

The latest intelligence from Lahore is dated 16th June. Reports had been received there that Lieutenant Edwardes (who had joined his detachments with those of Colonel Cortlandt, making a respectable force of 7,000 men) had again defeated a body of Mooltanees, taking some guns. On the other hand, the Khan of Bhawalpore is said to have sustained a repulse. This intelligence reached Lahore by letters from Shikarpore, dated the 7th June, and is stated to have been communicated by a correspondent at Ahmedpore, who reported, that when he left off writing, the greater part of the Khan's troops were actually surrounded by those of the Dewan, and their case was rendered the more critical, in consequence of a lack of ammunition. Other accounts, which evidently refer to the same transaction, say that the troops of the Khan having crossed the river, many incautiously, one of the detachments was surprised, and the chief and most of the men were cut off. A British officer (Lieut. Lake) had been sent to the Bhawalpore army, to give the Khan military advice, and "see that he does not do any mischief." The Khan, taught by experience the necessity of circumspection, advanced more warily, and ordered his people to intrench their camp at every halt. It is considered by some writers that the forward movements of our officers, as well as of the Khan, are, under the circumstances, not judicious. The Friend of India, however, passes some severe strictures upon the tame conduct of the authorities with reference to the Mooltan affair:—

"According to present appearances, there will be no Mooltan laurels but for Edwardes and Cortlandt. But, if it should turn out that the Nawab of Bhawalpore's undisciplined troops, and the raw levies under the two officers above named, have brought the rebellion to a happy issue, and reannexed Mooltan to the Punjab, it will form a bitter satire upon the policy which has been pursued by the public authorities at Lahore and the north-west. Their success will demonstrate how easy would have been the conquest of the rebel with one of the moveable brigades which Lord Hardinge established for the express purpose of their moving out upon such an unexpected contingency as the present. The success of these raw troops cannot but prove a severe reflection upon the hesitation by which the golden moments were lost, when decision should have been the order of the day. The resident has had a difficult part to play. The reader has not forgotten that the first intimation that we received of the rebellion was through an order for the immediate march of the moveable brigade to quell it. The march of the troops was almost immediately after countermanded; it is of course no secret that the majority of the military authorities at Lahore voted for delay. The concurrence of those authorities in such a course of policy might be entitled to some deference, if we could forget the standing proverb that councils of war never fight. Then came the reference to Simlah, and the Commander-in-Chief's resolution to postpone operations to the cold season, and to make preparations for the grand army of Mooltan which was to conquer the province, and another army of observation to watch the Rajah Golab Singh, at an expense which was sufficient to throw our minister of finance into a cold sweat. Be that as it may, happily the evil consequences which were to have been expected from this temporising policy have not arisen. Our distant and isolated political officers have not been attacked; disturbances have not broken out in the Punjab itself; there has been but one conspiracy and one insurrection. Great is the Company's ikbal; great is the Company's ikbal. The Punjab is still tranquil, though our hesitation to march upon the revolted province rendered it in no small degree presumptuous to calculate on such tranquillity.

Speculations are hazarded as to the disposal of Mooltan, if taken by us; and it is suggested that it will be severed from the Punjab state, and given to the Khan of Bhawalpore.

Scinde remains perfectly tranquil.

Affghanistan appears to be plunged in civil discord. Mahomed Shah Khan Ghazee was in arms against Dost Mahomed Khan.

There are agreeable accounts of the condition of Nepal, where peace and tranquillity have produced content and prosperity. An active trade has sprung up with the contiguous British provinces, and it is remarked large purchases of raw cotton are made by merchants from Katmandoo to supply the interior provinces of China.

From the Nizam's territories there are accounts of the utter confusion into which affairs have fallen under the administration of Suraj-ool-Moolk. General Fraser, the resident, having personally proceeded to Calcutta to communicate with the Supreme Government, it is expected that some measures of improvement will be devised and recommended to his highness. A letter from Hyderabad represents the prominent vice in the character of the minister (Suraj-ool-Moolk) to be habitual and unconquerable deception.

His ancestor, the famous Meer Alum, professed to have adopted lying upon principle, which is to be gathered from his memorable acknowledgment made to Moenshee Ussezoolla, when he was about quitting the residency, on Captain Sydenham's accession to office, that he had derived benefit from no other source so largely as from the practice of deception. That which his ancestor did upon principle, Suraj-ool-Moolk follows from inherent taste; like his father, as described by Sir Henry Russell, he deceives without an object; but he does what his father never did, he treacherously betrays those who have coalesced with him, and been the coadjutors or the instruments of his vices.

Letters from Goomsur report the continuance of anarchy in that district. A village has been burnt close to Russulkoondah, though the wing of a regiment was at that station. The Meriah victims brought down by the Agent are said to be making their escape. Chokra Bissye has complete command of the hills, and is reported to laugh at the fruitless campaign of the last cold season. The Englishman has letters from the south, which represent the state of the Northern Circars as very unsatisfactory:—

In Goomsur house and highway robbery are of very frequent occurrence, and, a few days before the date of the letters, several persons had been murdered in Gallery and Chokapad; the great Northern road through Gallery and Chokapad is entirely closed to travellers and traffic. Chokra Bissye is at a place just beyond Domosinghi in Boad, where he has built houses for himself and followers: he is circulating invitations to the discontented Paiks of surrounding Zemindaries to join him, and he is endeavouring to excite the Boad tribes to resume their former system of making plundering attacks on the more peaceable and well-disposed of the Goomsur tribes.

In Calcutta the Union Bank and its affairs still continue to form a prominent subject of attention. The last scheme for the liquidation of this unfortunate concern, it is said, promises better results than were anticipated. Creditors representing nearly forty lakhs, out of the fifty-four owing, have given in their adhesion, and not one has expressed his dissent. The Hurkaru says, "The home shareholders receive great credit here for the promptitude with which they have come forward with their contributions to meet the liabilities of the concern."

No incident at the other presidencies invites comment.

News had been received at Singapore of disturbances attended with great loss of life in Siam. An insurrection of the Chinese employed in the sugar districts had brought down on them the weight of royal vengeance; and it appears that some four or five thousand at least had been slaughtered, and many more sent into Bangkok as prisoners. The editor of the Straits Times had received a letter containing an account of the affair, written in English, by no less a personage than Prince T. Y. Chun fut Mongkur, a brother of the king.

We published in the last Mail, in full, the important judgment of Sir L. Peel, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, suspending Mr. W. P. Grant from his office of Master in Equity, on account of his conduct as one of the Directors of the Union Bank, which appeared, the learned Chief Justice said, to him and Sir H. Seton, "utterly inconsistent with the character which the Master in Equity in that Court ought to possess." The grounds upon which misconduct is imputed to Mr. Grant may be stated in the words of the Judges themselves in a reply to a letter from Mr. Grant, inquiring the nature of the charges against him: "The gross mismanagement of the affairs of the Union Bank, which had ended in the destruction of the interests confided to him, involving as it did, in addition to reports of a deceptive nature, breaches of trust of the most serious description, justified the withdrawal of their confidence; and they added that they needed to refer only to two of the more prominent instances,—viz., the lending the funds of the partnership on unauthorised securities, and becoming himself a debtor to the bank to a large amount, contrary to the most obvious principles of his duty, of which they regretted to observe on his part such apparent unconsciousness." The learned Judge in another part disclaims the imputation of fraud to Mr. Grant. He says, "I see no ground for supposing that Mr. Grant intended to wrong the Union Bank of a rupee; there was no intentional or conscious fraud; there may have been full confidence that all would be right: but there was, in my opinion, notwithstanding, most gross misconduct as a director." His lordship, in the course of his judgment, alludes to the injury which the character of the Court had lately suffered "by the conduct of some who were connected with it in important situations of trust."

Whether or not the judgment of Sir Lawrence Peel will stand the test of a revision of the Privy Council upon technical grounds, no one will deny him the merit of firmness and courage in this endeavour to correct the laxity of moral principle, of which Calcutta has of late afforded some conspicuous instances.

Mr. Grant, it appears, has published a pamphlet, the purport of which is said to be to exculpate himself as a Director of the Union Bank, by throwing the blame of mismanagement entirely on the paid officers of the bank. The Englishman describes it as "a mere mass of evasions and concealments; among other extraordinary statements it asserts that his enormous purchases of the shares of the falling concern were for permanent investment, though it is notorious that he had no other means of paying for them than by pledging them as fast as they were bought, at rates of interest far beyond the dividend which continued to be paid out of the diminishing capital of the bank. In one passage, however, he confutes his own statement, by admitting that his purchases were designed to prevent a panic in the Union Bank shares."

The Friend of India observes:—

"Mr. Grant is not charged with any misconduct or malversation in his official situation, as Master. Neither is it any part of the imputation that while in the enjoyment of an income of 4,800*l.*, he should have given so large a portion of his time and attention to the Union Bank. On this point the Chief Justice merely observed, that he had always entertained a strong objection to the officers of the Court engaging in transactions of business, tending to divert their thoughts and attention from the proper business of their offices. It is deeply to be regretted that his lordship should so long have allowed a feeling of delicacy toward his colleague, Sir John Peter Grant, to interfere with the duty of turning that sound opinion into action, and extinguishing the commercial speculations of the officers of his Court. He must have been fully aware, that whatever opposition he might have encountered in his own Court, he would have received the most unqualified support from Government in a measure which the whole community demanded. But the Government itself cannot be altogether exonerated from blame in not having taken the initiative in this measure. The Governor-General and Council had the power to interfere; they entertained the same strong objections as the Chief Justice to the officers of the Court engaging in mercantile speculations. They knew well that no officer in the Company's service would thus be permitted to neglect his official duties. The Government should not have limited itself to the indulgence of a feeling of complacency in contrasting the conduct of the officers of a privileged Court and those of a responsible Government. It ought assuredly to have taken an active share in putting down the nuisance; it should not have allowed its duty to the public interests of society to be neglected through a repugnance, however defensible, to interfere with a Court which was no longer in that close alliance with Government which existed eleven years ago, and which Mr. Macaulay considered so advantageous.

"The Chief Justice does not charge Mr. Grant or any of the Directors with fraud. 'I have no right,' says his lordship, 'to say that any of the Directors meant to defraud the bank.' That the bank was defrauded, however, will admit of no question. The Directors helped themselves to a million sterling of its funds; but, then, they always intended to return it. Like another place, the bank was paved with the best intentions, and these good intentions continued to multiply with every fresh misappropriation of the bank's resources, until the Insolvent Court put an end to their further development. It is a nice question of legal morality, on which it would be presumptuous for a mere lay understanding to pronounce a judgment, how far men can be said to be free from any charge of fraud, when funds confided to them for safe and beneficial employment were taken by them and expended in their own speculations, they being at the time hopelessly insolvent, but always intending to replace the money whenever they had the power. As to Mr. Grant himself, we believe the remark of the Chief Justice that he never meant to defraud the bank may be applied in a larger sense than those who are smarting from the effect of his measures are disposed to allow. It is confidently affirmed by those who have examined the accounts of the bank with an unfavourable eye, that there is nothing to implicate Mr. Grant in that personal delinquency which belongs to the other Directors, who so nefariously helped themselves to its funds."

We have given prominence to this transaction, because we think that, in conjunction with the misconduct of Sir Thomas Turton (which is undoubtedly of a different character), it deserves and calls for public animadversion. Calcutta used to be remarkable for the high tone of its commercial morality, but if these contraventions of principle escape without censure, they will become frequent, and afford encouragement to laxity of morals, not only amongst Europeans, but natives, in India.

BENGAL.

THE UNION BANK IN LIQUIDATION.

The monthly meeting of the shareholders of the Union Bank in liquidation took place on Saturday afternoon, at half-past three o'clock. The attendance was meagre. Mr. James Sutherland was voted to the chair; and Mr. Morton read the annexed report of the executive committee for the past month:—

“GENERAL REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE FOR THE MONTH OF JUNE.”

“The committee have to report, that in pursuance of the resolutions passed at the May meeting of shareholders, a meeting of the creditors was convened at the Bank on the 1st instant, and that the proposed scheme of liquidation was then submitted to them, and approved with some modifications. The creditors require the following conditions before individual discharges shall operate. 1st. That the assessment shall be on such a scale as to amount to forty lacs in the aggregate. 2nd. That the scheme shall be signed by creditors representing at the least thirty-five lacs. 3rd. That the sum of fifteen lacs shall be actually contributed by the 1st of August.

“The two first conditions have been already satisfied. With respect to the second, the only doubt which the committee ever felt was, whether the required number was not too small for the security of the shareholders themselves. It was necessary, however, to fix some definite number of consenters to be obtained in a definite time, and it was thought, that if so large a number as thirty-five lacs gave in their adhesion in a few days, a strong guarantee would be furnished that there would not be many dissentients when the scheme should come into actual operation. And the committee are happy to be able to state that this anticipation has been realized: the number who have actually signed represent nearly forty lacs. Creditors representing about seven lacs have declared themselves favourable to the scheme, but demur to signing for the present, most of them requiring to communicate with absent principals. Of the remainder, some are not represented in this country, others have as yet returned no reply, but no creditor of the Bank has hitherto expressed positive dissent. Under these circumstances, the executive committee intend to propose (subject to the approval of the general meeting) a modification of the scheme, viz., that the dividends of creditors, who have not dissented, though they may not have actually signed, be held in deposit, for a certain reasonable time, and be paid to them when and if they shall sign the conditional release.

“The schedule of assessment having been completed, the committee have directed circulars to be made out and forwarded to all the shareholders. The committee have received some, but not many replies to these circulars. Of those received, none put forward objections to the scheme, though the majority of them object to the individual rates of assessment. The committee earnestly request all shareholders, whatever their views may be, at least to reply to the circulars. The task which they have undertaken cannot be carried through unless they are cordially supported in their labours. It is already more than probable, that nothing like the required amount of contributions will be realised by the time limited; but if the general tenour of the replies be favourable, the committee will receive encouragement to apply to the creditors for an extension of the time, or a modification of the terms. But if the committee are not supported, this scheme, to the working out of which much time and attention have been devoted, must be, however reluctantly abandoned.

“The committee have received communications by the last two mails from the secretary to the London committee, and they feel bound to state, that the English shareholders have evinced far greater promptitude in responding to the calls than the great bulk of the Indian shareholders. The London secretary has forwarded to this committee a list of shareholders, who are stated to have made arrangements for meeting the call, aggregating a sum of between six and seven lacs of rupees. The committee have been in communication with the several agents in this country, named by the English shareholders, who have arranged to contribute as above stated, and they regret to say that, in consequence of the backwardness of the Indian shareholders, and the unsatisfactory state of affairs which has resulted, some of such agents are disposed to decline acting for the present upon their instructions wherever those instructions are in any degree discretionary.

“Mr. John Leslie Russell, the former secretary of the bank, having resigned, the Committee have appointed Mr. Robert Castle Jenkins his successor, subject to confirmation or otherwise at the present meeting. Should Mr. Jenkins be confirmed, there will be two vacancies in the executive committee, which ought to be filled up, as the present number only constitutes an exact quorum and no more.

“The purchaser of the Union Bank house having threatened proceedings to recover back the purchase-money, and the question at issue being doubtful, the committee have entered into a compromise, the result of which is, that the purchase-money already received is to be paid over to the sheriff, and the purchaser (having got the house originally on lower terms than was at first bargained for, on condition of taking it with all defects of title) agrees to pay an additional sum of Rs. 3,000, and to forego all claim for rent up to the 1st proximo, in consideration of which he is to get his title perfected, by obtaining a bill of sale from the sheriff.

“The Committee have arranged to remove the office of the bank in liquidation into commodious premises in Tank-square, from the 1st of next month. The rent agreed upon is Rs. 150 per month.

“T. C. Morton, President of the Committee.

In addition to the above, Mr. Morton mentioned that the liabilities of the concern have been diminished by Rs. 1,50,000 since the last meeting of proprietors.

The Chairman calling for a motion in regard to the report of the executive committee, it was proposed by Mr. Homfray, and seconded by Mr. J. S. Judge—

“That the report of the executive committee for June, just read, be received.”—Carried unanimously.

It was next moved—

“That the appointment of Mr. Robert Castle Jenkins, as secretary to the Union Bank in liquidation, vice Mr. J. L. Russell, resigned, be confirmed.”—Carried unanimously.

The above appointment occasioning a vacancy in the executive committee, and the departure of Mr. George Shearwood from Calcutta having created another, a proposition was made that the meeting should proceed to make elections, so as to complete the complement required.

Mr. Morton observed that, unfortunately, the choice of the shareholders must be restricted to a very small and miscellaneous class, since the members of the services were precluded from the privilege of taking any part in the management of the concern. In the absence of any other names, he would propose Baboo Prosunno Coomarr Tagore and Mr. Caird.

Mr. Caird, who was in the room, declined accepting the office: and Mr. Homfray, speaking from a conversation he had with the other nominee proposed, intimated a doubt as to whether the Baboo would be disposed to become a member of the committee, and recommended the election of Baboo Ramanath Tagore, in whom he thought the executive committee would find as intelligent and sufficient a coadjutor as in Baboo Prosunno Coomarr Tagore.

A Shareholder suggested that one of the brothers Dey would not be an ineligible party.

Mr. Clarke replied, that if they should follow his advice, neither of the brothers would permit himself to be elected. Both denied in the most positive manner that they were shareholders, and could not, therefore, consistently consent to form part of the executive committee. They had been assessed at the modest sum of eight lacs, which immodestly perhaps, they had refused to contribute, and until this delicate point could be settled between themselves and the executive committee, he did not see how they could amalgamate themselves with a body with whom they were at war.

The following motions were then put in succession, and carried unanimously:—

“Proposed by Mr. Morton, and seconded by Mr. Remfry, that Baboo Prosunno Coomarr Tagore be appointed a member of the committee.”

“Proposed by Mr. H. Birkinyoung, and seconded by Mr. Campbell, that Mr. J. Homfray be appointed a member of the executive committee, to fill up the vacancy occasioned by the departure from Calcutta of Mr. George Shearwood.”

Mr. J. Jenkins desired to know what measures, if any, had been adopted by the executive committee towards a recovery of the debts owing to the bank. Some of the debtors, he understood, were on the eve of quitting Calcutta—Mr. Grant for one.

Mr. Morton replied, that it had been intimated to Mr. Grant that he must not leave Calcutta before he should adjust his account with the bank. Mr. Morton drew attention to the term “adjust,” mentioning that he did not intend it should import payment.

Mr. Jenkins, to guard against all possible contingencies, proposed—

“That it is neither advisable nor expedient to allow the debtors to the Union Bank any further time; and that the secretary do forthwith proceed against all parties indebted to the bank, who will not make immediate arrangements for the liquidation of the bank's claims, and that no debtor to the bank be allowed to leave India until he has either paid his debts, or assigned over all his property to the bank. Further, that the assignment be submitted to approval by the counsel to the bank, prior to its acceptance by the secretary.”

Mr. Morton objected to the clause in this resolution, which directed that every debt to the bank, for the settlement of which no immediate arrangement could be effected, should, without discrimination, be made the subject of an action. It was his firm belief, that, with but a few exceptions, every debt due to the bank was a bad debt; and the adoption of Mr. Jenkins' motion, in its present form, would lead to the consequence of somewhere near 150 plaintiffs being filed in the Supreme Court, with very little prospect of an advantageous result. The benefit arising from a multiplicity of actions could only be confined to the legal portion of the community; and this was one reason, he hoped, why he should be be-

Moved to be speaking in this instance; at least, without any consideration for self. Admitting, then, that precipitate proceedings in the Court would be ineffectual materially to advance the interests of the bank, it must surely be conceded, that there was a necessity to vest a discretionary power in somebody to decide and declare which of the debtors it would be worth while to proceed against. He, for his own part, was far from being desirous that the task should be imposed upon the executive committee; on the contrary, although several committees had been appointed, since the bank came into liquidation, with little proportionate advantage, he would suggest that a special committee be appointed to judge of the ability or inability of the debtors to pay their debts to the bank, and shape their mode of dealing with them accordingly. Against those who were worth being proceeded against, the claims of the bank had been put in suit already; but the executive committee had been able to recover nothing by the actions, though it had been more successful out of Court.

Mr. Jenkins said that, in a question of this nature, he disapproved of every thing that was not definite, and would have no discretionary power reposed in any body, such as that suggested by Mr. Morton. With regard to the prospects of a realization of the debts to the bank, he could not conceive how there should be any bad debts upon the books. Was it credible that people in the enjoyment of a princely income, and who had frittered away ten lakhs of rupees, should have nothing left at this moment, to discharge their just debts to an institution in so serious a predicament as the one in which the banks was now involved?

Mr. Clarke remarked, that he concurred with Mr. Jenkins in principle, but with Mr. Morton in practice. In principle, he was ready to admit that all who were indebted to the bank, and were unable to make arrangements for a speedy liquidation, should be proceeded against in the Supreme Court; but then stepped in the practical question of his friend Mr. Morton—would such a mode of dealing be advantageous to the interests of the bank? If, for example, proceedings should be taken against a debtor who really had not the means to make immediate payment, doubtless judgment would be recovered against him; but the bank would not-withstanding be far from benefiting essentially by it. The debtor would laugh at the executive committee, walk into the Insolvent Court with a schedule, then walk out again independent of his creditors, and so the bank would lose by hasty measures what it might have recovered by patience and moderation. It had been said that the executive committee had betrayed some degree of favouritism in its general management of the affairs of the bank. In many cases, he was convinced, the accusation was unjust; but be that as it might, it was an object to satisfy shareholders that the complaint had not gone disregarded by this meeting; and he should support Mr. Jenkins's motion, as being a mode of providing against the possibility of undue leniency being used in any instance whatever. When it was considered that parties, chargeable with no other fault than that of having shares in the bank, were the only ones against whom actions had as yet been brought, while others owing considerable sums to the institution, but maintaining still an undiminished scale of domestic expenditure, flouting about in the course, betting on the turf, giving their burra khans, and boasting of their rich wines, had hitherto been left untouched, as though there were some sanctity attaching to their persons—when the treatment of the shareholders was contrasted with the treatment of the debtors, he must confess that the contrast did appear to him calculated to produce a great deal of ill feeling in the former. However, therefore, the practical views of Mr. Morton might be sound, a line and a limit should be drawn to the forbearance hitherto shewn to the debtors of the bank. It was a fact that, up to this time, not one debtor of the bank had been sued in the Court, though actions after actions had been brought against the unfortunate shareholders.

Mr. Morton said Mr. Clarke was speaking under an error. Plaints had already been filed against ten or twelve of the bank's debtors.

Mr. Clarke replied that this was the first time he had ever heard of the circumstance. But in any case not one of the actions had come on for hearing in Court. The insolvency of the bank was made known in December last, this was June; and people would not fail to remark that six months was a long interval to have permitted to elapse without any apparent effort to compel reluctant debtors to come forward with the moneys respectively due from them. Speaking upon the principle, then, involved in the motion of Mr. Jenkins, he must say that this forbearance should be tolerated no longer. Measures should be adopted, and that promptly, to collect the debts owing to the bank, as far as it should be found possible to effect this; and the happiest medium between the proposition of Mr. Jenkins and the objection that it would operate injuriously to the interests of the bank, would be, to appoint a special committee whose business it should be to ascertain the most advisable course to be taken with regard to individual debtors, towards a realization of the bank's claims against them.

Mr. Jenkins proposed to meet the objections of all parties to his motion by inserting, as a modification, the words "or satisfy the executive committee that they can do so" immediately before the clause, "and that no debtor to the bank be allowed to leave India, until he has either paid his debts, or assigned over all his property to the bank, &c."

Mr. Morton remarked—he should be very sorry if the motion should be carried even with this modification. It still left the discretionary power with the executive committee, and he, as one of its members, was unwilling to retain it. The committee had already, meeting after meeting, been accused of being partial in the exercise of the discretion given them; and, continuing that discretion as this resolution did, in their hands, it left them open to renewed attacks upon their motives and views in the use they might make of their power.

Mr. Jenkins did not think there was much in this objection, whereas he considered it of the last importance that a resolution corresponding, in effect, with the one he had brought forward, should be made a rule of practice, as he knew of not a few that had it in their intention to slip away from Calcutta without any adjustment whatever respecting the moneys due from them to the bank.

Mr. Morton replied, that Mr. Jenkins had, as yet, named but one solitary individual whom he suspected to be contemplating a departure from Calcutta without a settlement of his account with the bank, and having already given an explanation that must disabuse Mr. Jenkins of the idea, he (Mr. Morton) knew of no other parties to whom Mr. Jenkins's suspicions could attach. As to putting claims in suit, actions had already been instituted against ten of the bank's debtors, of whom six were included in one alone.

Mr. Homfray wished to know whether these were the parties concerned in the notorious share account, and called for their names.

Mr. Morton replied that they were the parties interested in the account mentioned, but said it would be a pity to give up the names. Strenuous endeavours, he said, were being made to bring the proceedings to a speedy termination, and there were hopes that the hearing would come on in the course of the present term. In selecting these ten cases, the executive committee, as he believed, had exhausted the list of debts which could at this moment be thrown into Court with any ultimate benefit to the bank. A reference to the list of debtors would make it clear to any person that it would be a matter of impossibility to say, with any degree of precision, who it is that are solvent, and should be compelled to pay. Some of the debtors were not worth powder and shot. He was not aware that the executive committee had done anything to lay themselves open to a charge of favouritism, even to the limited extent that Mr. Clarke appeared to think them guilty of. One or two debts, indeed, had been wiped away from the books by means of a compromise; but had they been brought to the hammer at a sheriff's sale, he was prepared to say that the proceeds would be nothing so good as the amount realised in the terms of the compromise; and this should be conclusive as to the question of favouritism. To his thinking, the half a crore of unsecured debts to the bank were not worth five or six lakhs of rupees in the aggregate; he was quite certain they would not fetch even that at a sheriff's sale. The matter, then, resolved itself into a question of discretion. To him it was a task of extreme difficulty to decide who it was that should be selected to be proceeded against for his debt, and who should not; and the mode most likely to meet the approbation of all parties seemed to him to be, to appoint a special committee vested with full power to exercise this discretion; but he must deprecate any attempt to take every debtor into Court who might not be able to respond to a call for the immediate adjustment of his debt to the concern.

Mr. Jenkins said that it was dissatisfaction at the very little that had been done towards the liquidation of the bank's affairs that had urged him to propose the motion that was still before the meeting; and he must still press for its adoption, as he was anxious to see that something definite in its nature should be determined upon as a rule to guide the executive committee in dealing with debtors.

Mr. Morton expressed a hope that, when Mr. Jenkins should be on the executive committee, he would prove his activity by better results; but, for the present, he must move, as an amendment upon his motion, that a special committee, composed of Mr. Jenkins and Mr. Clarke, should be appointed, with power to select, declare, and appoint which of the debtors should be taken into Court, and whether any and what measures should be adopted for the recovery of the amounts due from them.

Mr. Clarke declined being appointed to the proposed committee; and so did

Mr. Jenkins, who said he had no wish to nominate any one of the debtors. The shareholders paid a secretary; and, as the responsibility was thrown upon him, he should be the person to judge which of the debtors it was whose means would permit them to make immediate payments.

Mr. Morton denied that the responsibility was thrown upon the secretary, contending that Mr. Jenkins' motion cast it exclusively upon the executive committee, who, as he had said before, were most unwilling that the discretion should be confided to them, after they had so inconsiderately been accused of having exercised it improperly.

The Chairman now put to the meeting the amendment proposed by Mr. Morton.

Mr. Homfray leant towards the original motion proposed by Mr. Jenkins.

Mr. Clarke again spoke in support of the motion, saying that it was a sort of a flapper to the executive committee, leaving as it did to them what they ought to do, and what he felt convinced they would do.

Mr. Homfray pledged his word to the meeting that he would leave no stone unturned in effecting what Mr. Jenkins conceived, and very reasonably, to be so important to the interest of the bank, now that he had been elected one of the committee.

Mr. Morton replied that if this were so—if Mr. Homfray would undertake to make all the valuations upon the property of debtors, and bear all the abuse that might be lavished for alleged misuse of discretion, he would withdraw his amendment at once.

Mr. Homfray gave the required undertaking, remarking that, having heard the explanations given to-day by Mr. Morton, he was perfectly satisfied that proceedings were now in progress against those of the debtors that were unwilling, though able, to pay.

Mr. Morton observed that he could add that the principal debtor, at whom he took Mr. Jenkins' remarks to be chiefly levelled, was making arrangements to assign to the bank the whole of his property both here and elsewhere.

The amendment having been withdrawn, the motion of Mr. Jenkins, with the modification he had proposed to introduce in it in the course of the discussion, was put, and carried unanimously.

Mr. Jenkins remarked, in reference to the last clause of his resolution, that he had proposed an examination of all assignments by the counsel of the bank prior to the acceptance of them by the secretary, because he knew, that had all the assignments now held by the bank been so examined, it would not have been in possession of so many bad ones.

Mr. Morton replied, that wherever the assignments are bad, the defect consists, not in the title but in their subject matter, which it was not the business of counsel to look into. For instance, where an indigo factory was the property made over, the title-deeds might be unexceptionable, and yet the factory itself might be worthless.

Mr. Clarke said that he had it upon the authority of Mr. Dickens that the bank holds several assignments with defective titles because the instructions of the counsel of the bank in regard to them had never been followed.

Messrs. Molloy and McIntosh, the attorneys for the bank, denied this; but Mr. Clarke referred both to Mr. Dickens, as his authority for the statement he had made.

Mr. Homfray observed that he was extremely gratified to learn that the London committee had called for the Bank Post Bill Committee's report, which had been "kept in abeyance" here, and that a copy of the report had been forwarded to them. He had no doubt that the report would appear in the London papers before it would in the local prints; and it would be remarkable indeed to find a document produced in Calcutta, first given to the public in a country above fifteen thousand miles away from this.

Mr. Clarke now rose to remark upon the transaction respecting the post bills of the Commercial Bank, upon which it was determined at the last meeting that he should draw up another report for the information of shareholders. The learned gentleman said that the meeting must be aware that the report to which Mr. Homfray had just referred was one which he had been appointed to frame in conjunction with that gentleman and Mr. Jenkins, but that other engagements having taken up the time he had intended to devote to the labours of the committee, he had undertaken the isolated investigation of the transaction relating to the post bills of the Commercial Bank of Bombay. Mr. Morton had, upon a former occasion, submitted a brief report upon the subject to the proprietors. In prosecuting his examination, he (Mr. Clarke) had gone into the details at considerable length, and when he had reduced the result of his investigation into writing, he placed the report in the hands of Mr. Scott, who, at the same time that the report itself was produced at one of the meetings of the proprietors, read a written statement in reply. Subsequently to this, circumstances had come to his knowledge which induced him to bring to the notice of the proprietors the mode in which an item of Rs. 90,000 had been dealt with, after having been received by Mr. Scott, paid into this bank, and carried to the credit of the Commercial Bank of Bombay. Four days subsequently to this entry, he perceived an alteration in the books, upon the strength of a memorandum signed by Mr. Abbott, and countersigned by Mr. Scott, describing the original entry to the credit of the Commercial Bank of Bombay as "erroneous;" and directing the amount to be carried to the credit of the private account of Mr. Scott, which was done. He (Mr. Clarke) had felt very considerable surprise at an explanation by which Mr. Scott had endeavoured to meet his comments upon this subject at the last meeting, and a statement in reference to the identical transaction put forth by Mr. W. P. Grant in the pamphlet comprising the correspondence between himself and the judges relative to the part he had taken in the management of the Union Bank. On the 27th of May Mr. Scott wrote to the Englishman as follows:—

"The bank kept two accounts in its books for my late firm, namely, suspense account and a Union Bank post bill account. The Union Bank post bills account, Union Bank, was an account or register of post bills issued and handed to me for the bank's own purposes. These post bills, at whatever dates payable, on being handed to me, were debited to this account, whether negotiated or not by me, and to this account were carried to credit the moneys paid in by me for bills negotiated; and, as in many cases I only paid into the bank the proceeds of bills negotiated, whilst there remained at debit the gross amount of the bills, there soon appeared a large amount against the account, without taking into consideration the post bills remaining in my possession unnegotiated. Now, on the 11th December, 1847, there stood at debit of this account in the books of the bank, the sum of Company's Rs. 4,82,089-3, about which the secretary erroneously addressed my firm on that date as standing against its 'suspense account.'

"The directors attended at the bank at my request, and the matter was explained to them.

"The circumstance of my firm getting such a letter, with what came to my knowledge immediately afterwards, induced me to get an adjustment (leaving the interest and commissions in abeyance) of this and the suspense account; and, as my time was much occupied out of doors, I directed the bookkeeper of my firm to attend at the bank and do the needful;—on comparing the accounts furnished by the bank with the accounts taken from the books of my firm, there were found various discrepancies, and amongst them large sums appeared at the credit of the suspense, which ought to have appeared at the credit of the Commercial Bank of India, in the books of the Union Bank; and it became necessary that the bank should conform its entries to those of Hickey, Bailly, and Co., or that Hickey, Bailey, and Co. should conform to those of the bank.

"As the result would be the same, and easier accomplished than by moving the whole machinery of the bank's entries, I directed that these entries should be conformed to in the books of Hickey, Bailey, and Co. Credit was accordingly taken in the suspense account for the various amounts, and simultaneously passed out of it by check or order to that of the Commercial Bank.

"Mr. Clarke brought forward the case of Rs. 90,730 54 paid into the bank on the 9th December, and transferred to the credit of Hickey, Bailey, and Co.'s suspense account on the 11th or 13th December, the transfer order was the bank's own document, and upon the accounts being adjusted, it was unnecessarily adopted, in order to bring the amount it represented to credit, as it formed part of the amount for which a check was given, dated on the 17th of the month.

"These orders and checks represent the dates of transfer, but do not represent the dates when they were signed.

"On the 11th December, when the secretary wrote to Hickey, Bailey and Co., the suspense account was largely at credit in the books of the bank, say some 8 or 9 lacs of rupees.

"Your obedient servant,

Calcutta, May 27, 1848."

"JAS. S. B. SCOTT.

He (Mr. Clarke) confessed he was perfectly ignorant as to what this was intended to explain. He could not attach any intelligible meaning to it, unless, indeed, it was that Mr. Scott intended to infer in some way or another that a mistake had been made, and that a mistake was rectified. He would just draw the attention of the meeting to the transfer order. Mr. Scott, in his letter to the Englishman, stated, that this order was the bank's own document, from which he understood Mr. Scott's meaning to be, that the order did not emanate from himself but from one of the officers of the bank, his object, in putting forward this statement, being, to distinguish himself from the bank, and to shew that if there was any error or impropriety in the order, he was not a party to blame. But Mr. Scott had forgotten that the document, which he (Mr. Clarke) had produced at the last meeting, and which was still to be found among the records of the bank, bore his own signature, and that it was with this signature that he himself directed the transfer of the Rs. 90,000 from the credit of the Commercial Bank to his own suspense account, under the pretence that the original entry was "erroneous." In the pamphlet to which he had made allusion, Mr. Grant said:—

"I am able, however, to bring forward direct testimony, through the kindness of Mr. Scott, who allows me to make use of his information to the following purport.

"Mr. Scott was a partner in the late firm of Hickey, Bailey, and Co., and the person who negotiated the bills in question for the bank. On the 14th December he paid into the bank his own firm's cheques on the Bank of Bengal for Rs. 59,488-2-6, Rs. 25,000, and Rs. 25,000, in all 1,09,488-2-6, taking from Mr. Abbott a written receipt for Rs. 1,00,000 on account of the Commercial Bank bills. On the 15th he went to the bank, for the purpose of looking into Hickey, Bailey and Co.'s suspense account, to which, from circumstances which I need not detail here, his attention had been directed, and he then saw that the whole payment made by him the day before was at credit of that account, though he was in possession of the secretary's receipt shewing that Rs. 1,00,000 of it had been paid on account of the Commercial Bank. This induced him to look further into the matter, and he found that two sums Rs. 25,000 and Rs. 65,730-5-4 had on a former occasion been transferred from the Commercial Bank's to this suspense account; on which he insisted on the account of the bills sold through him being made out from the beginning, and put to rights; and he says that neither he, nor, as far as he believes, any one in the bank knew the extent of the misappropriation till that account was made up, pursuant to his directions given on the 15th. On the 17th the account was closed by transfers of Rs. 1,00,000 and Rs. 2,00,460-10-9, the orders for both of which, though dated on different days, were signed on that same day, the 17th; so that until the entries of this day were made, only 31,000 would appear at credit of the bill transaction, Rs. 20,000 of which had only been brought into the account on the 11th."

"Put to rights!" where was the error? This explanation, which the kindness of Mr. Scott had enabled Mr. Grant to make, was in direct opposition to the letter published in the Englishman. He (Mr. Clarke) had spared no pains in prosecuting the inquiry into this transaction; but he had found it so intricate,—so teeming with difficulties—the entries so confused, and mixed up with such purposed fraud, that up to this moment he had failed, despite the most laborious research, in arriving at the information he desired.

He was anxious to bring another very remarkable fact to the notice of the meeting, with which he had become acquainted only an hour ago. The transaction regarding the post bills of the Commercial Bank commenced on the 2nd of December; on the 3rd, the bills were sold, and payments continued to be made into the bank on account of the bills from that date until the 17th of the month. On the 8th of December, when Rs. 1,46,000 had been received in payment of the bills sold for the Commercial Bank of Bombay, the following letter was addressed to Mr. H. W. Abbott, the ex-secretary of this bank, by the gentleman who then represented the Commercial Bank here:—

"8th December, 1847.

"To H. W. Abbott, Esq.

"My dear Sir,—I have just received a communication from the C. B. of B. regarding a remittance they made you of 100,000L., and about which the accounts of Glyns returning the U. B. of B. has alarmed them; pray let me know what you have done in the matter, as they have authorized me to make the necessary inquiry on the subject, and to protect their interest in case of need.

"Yours, &c.,

(Signed)

"C. B. SKINNER."

The annexed was Mr. Abbott's reply:—

"11th December, 1847.

"To C. B. Skinner, Esq.

"My dear Sir,—I have to apologise for not answering your note regarding the Commercial Bank of Bombay before, but I wished to see Scott first, but had not an opportunity of doing so either yesterday or the day before. The four lacks of bills were sold by Scott before the mail went out. On the 4th I remitted them post bills for Rs. 75,000, and would have sent them 15,000 Rs. more to-day, but I received the money too late to get a post bill from the Bank of Bengal. It shall be sent on Monday. In haste.—Yours truly,

(Signed)

"H. W. ABBOTT."

As one proof of the confusion into which this account had been thrown, he would simply mention that, at the very moment that this promise to send the Rs. 15,000 on Monday was penned, the amount had already been remitted to Bombay! If the letter in the Englishman stated the truth, at the date on which Mr. Skinner wrote to the secretary of this bank, Rs. 1,46,000 had already been paid in on account of the bills of the Commercial Bank; and yet, three days afterwards, writing in reply to a communication in which the bank in Bombay was shewn, in undisguised terms, to be alarmed about its money, the secretary concealed the fact of the payment in his letter, violated truth in the statements he made, and deceived the agent in Calcutta into an opinion regarding the proceeds of the bills, which could never have been formed if the real facts had been candidly given. If Mr. Scott had seen the letter from Mr. Skinner, as he must necessarily have done, the attention of both the secretary and the broker of the bank had been prominently called to the fact that a feeling of alarm had been engendered in Bombay for the safety of the moneys realised upon the post bills, and that an agent had been appointed to protect the interests of the Commercial Bank in Calcutta. In the face of this, it was idle and impudent to pretend that the misappropriation that went on day after day subsequently to the receipt of Mr. Skinner's application, was the result of an unfortunate mistake—it was the result of a purposed, a wilful, a deliberate fraud—and the transaction was so gross, that, unless justice should be sacrificed to feelings of false delicacy, the parties concerned must be led to the criminal bar of this country to answer for their conduct. Now, as to another matter. On the 4th of December, 1847, a cheque for Rs. 20,000 had been drawn by Mr. Dallas, in favour of Mr. Abbott, on account of the bills of the Commercial Bank of Bombay; on the 6th, a second cheque, drawn by the same party, for Rs. 10,000, was received by Mr. Abbott on the same account, and on the same date a third cheque for the same amount, drawn by Mr. Gollan, of the North-Western Bank of India—the several sums of the three cheques aggregating Rs. 40,000. Upon reference to the register of cheques, kept by the bank, he had found that these identical cheques, their number, date, and amount being specified, had been entered to the private account of Mr. J. S. B. Scott. Examining, again, the waste books, he had found that the very same cheques, their number, date, and amount, being specified as in the book of registers, were carried forward to the account of Mr. J. S. B. Scott, and, proceeding in his search, he found the cheque ledger containing entries in which those cheques were entered to the private account of Mr. J. S. B. Scott. This ledger contained the private account of each party doing business with the bank, in separate entries. The Rs. 40,000 paid into the bank on the cheques he had mentioned was, in this book carried on to the end of the month, and, added to other sums also entered in Mr. Scott's account, gave a total of Rs. 1,76,000 odd to the credit of Mr. J. S. B. Scott. Subsequently, this amount of Rs. 1,76,000 was transferred to the accounts of the Lockanathpore and Sindoorree factories. This led him to make further search, and he discovered that on the 25th of November last, both these factories had been sold to Mr. Scott;—so that this Rs. 40,000 of the Commercial Bank of Bombay, which had been received from Mr. Dallas and Mr. Gollan, and formed a component part of the Rs. 1,76,000, having gone through the books of the bank as the property of Mr. Scott, had in the end been given in payment for two indigo factories that he had purchased from the concern. He (Mr. Clarke) differed widely from Mr. Ayrton, the agent of the Commercial Bank of Bombay, in certain matters relative to this transaction; but as to the criminal part of the business, they were both fully agreed; and Mr. Ayrton had afforded him the greatest and most valuable assistance in sifting and inquiring into this discreditable affair; and he was bound to make the same acknowledgment in favour of the secretary and deputy-accountant of the Bank of Bengal, Mr. Gollan and Mr. Dallas. Still, however, the transaction was enveloped in so much mystery—there was so much confusion in the entries, indicative of purposed fraud—the clue to information had been so guardedly concealed, that with all his toil and all the valuable assistance he had received, he had as yet been unable to make all the discoveries that he could make, and therefore it was that he had come to the meeting with no report upon the subject of these post bills. He hoped, however, that he had spared no effort or exertion to prosecute the inquiry confided to him; and if the meeting would grant him an extension of time to prepare his report, he would pledge his word that he would present, upon the authority of the records in the bank, such a statement to the shareholders, as would perfectly justify them in sending the parties concerned to the criminal bar of Calcutta. The charges he advanced were grave; and he was too cautious to allege against any individual conduct so gross and disreputable, when he was not fully confident that he was prepared to prove it in any court of justice. He would ask the shareholders to adjourn, then, for a fortnight, that he might prepare a report for their information on this subject; and when he should lay it before them, he hoped that they would put it into the hands of the law officers of the bank, so that it might be in time to meet the grand jury at the opening of the sessions on the 15th of August.

Mr. Scott, in reply, said, however talented Mr. Clarke might be, he was not a professional bookkeeper; and he said this not as a reproach, for it was notorious that, in every age, men of the highest talents have been found children in accounts. The questions brought forward by Mr. Clarke were matters entirely belonging to the bookkeeper's department. He (Mr. Scott) was not responsible for the entries made by the officers of the bank, and the instant he discovered that various sums were carried to his own and his firm's credit, he had the accounts adjusted; he did not allow an hour to elapse before putting the matter in course of adjustment. The sum of Rs. 90,000 paid into the bank on the 9th of December, and transferred to the credit of his firm's suspense account on the 13th of the month, was transferred by an order from the officers of the bank; and on the entire accounts being adjusted, that order was adopted by Hickey, Bailey, and Co., to enable them to give a cheque for the balance of 2 lacs Rs. 10,000 on the 17th of the month.

The cheques for Rs. 40,000, which were carried to his own account, were so carried without his authority. They were cheques by Mr. Gollan and Mr. Dallas in favour of the secretary of the bank, and were not payable to Hickey, Bailey, and Company, or Mr. Scott, and he (Mr. Scott) gave no order for the sums to be placed to his credit, either by writing or verbally. On the final adjustment of all these accounts a cheque was given for the full balance at the credit of the Commercial Bank,—balance on the suspense account, namely, 2 lacs and Rs. 10,000, instead of giving a cheque only on the suspense account for 1 lakh and Rs. 70,000, and a second cheque on his own account for Rs. 40,000, which would make together the 2 lacs and Rs. 10,000; and this was a mere matter of convenience by the officers of the bank, and he (Mr. Scott) was not aware of all the particulars connected with them, until after the bank stopped.

Mr. Clarke rejoined that he could lay his finger on a dozen items a great deal worse in their nature than the one upon which he had just commented.

Mr. Scott remarked that he must not be made responsible if an amount had been carried by the officers of the bank to an erroneous account.

Mr. Morton remarked that as Mr. Scott had taken the objection that Mr. Clarke was not very well versed in accounts, he must confess that the same might be said of himself, and that when he came to look at the accounts for the first time, they puzzled him completely. Without intending to imply that Mr. Clarke had formed an opinion without mature consideration, he should say that he did not jump to the conclusion that fraud necessarily lurked beneath the entries simply because they were confused and unintelligible. Professional assistance would go a great way in unravelling the mystery in which the accounts were now involved; and he would propose that Mr. Curnin or some other professional gentleman be appointed at the expense of the bank to aid Mr. Clarke in his investigation.

Mr. Clarke replied that this was not a question of account at all. Where he traced three cheques by their respective numbers, dates, and amounts, from their payment into the bank to their payment out of it, it appeared to him that the matter was one of fact, and not of account.

Mr. Morton differed in opinion, and thought it in the last degree essential that it should appear upon indubitable shewing, whether it was that these moneys were appropriated by Mr. Scott himself, or whether they were applied in payment of the bank's liabilities. If the former, of course Mr. Clarke might proceed to a prosecution; but if the latter, although the act would be highly wrong, it would be very difficult to make out a criminal case against any individual.

It was then proposed—

"That the meeting be adjourned for a fortnight, to enable Mr. Clarke to complete his inquiries and furnish his report; and that Mr. Cooke (of the Bank of Bengal) be requested to give the aid of his services to the investigation, and that a gratuity be paid him by the bank."—Carried unanimously.

Thanks were then voted to the chair, and the meeting separated.

UNION BANK.

JUDGMENT OF THE CHIEF-JUSTICE IN RE THE COMMERCIAL BANK OF BOMBAY.

THE rule must be made absolute. The objections raised are numerous. The wording of the 8th section is no doubt ambiguous; the object of the Act was on the one hand to make the bank to sue in the name of a nominal party, and on the other hand, to enable creditors to sue through that party. The object was to put legal difficulties out of the way, and it would be a bad construction to rely on words which are not in harmony with the meaning of the Act. The first objection, that shareholders should be sued one at a time successively cannot be supported. The clause is badly worded, and inaccurate in a legal point of view, as the execution is not against the property, but against the person. The action is against the party himself, but the writ is issued and levied against the property. The language is no doubt inaccurate, the words being "execution shall be issued against any other individual," &c., but there is nothing about funds or property. As to the argument that the word "successively" means one by one; not so: suppose the first suit be not satisfied, and there be after discovered property, then another writ may go even against the same person. The ab inconvenienti argument is strongly in favour of creditors. If the sum be large, then unless more than one proprietor could be joined, the creditor might be compelled to issue numerous writs in succession at great expense and trouble, neither would it be for the advantage of the shareholders, as under the clause for levying contributions the extra expense caused by this mode of process would fall on all the shareholders. This being a quasi corporate Act goes against the funds of the bank first; there might be a state of circumstances under which, though abundantly solvent, the bank might not be able to meet the amount at the time, and it would then be necessary to resort to the shareholders. It is left to the option of the party whether he will go against one or more of them at once; there is no hardship in this; on the contrary, it would be a saving of expense eventually, and not inconsistent with law. We are, therefore, of opinion that a fi. fa. may go against several at once. Then as to the objection that the secretary has no power to grant a cognovit, the truth is, that the bank is the party sued, and is represented by its solicitor, and it is not to be presumed or supposed that the public officer acted improperly; if collusion or fraud be charged that would be a ground for setting aside the judgment itself, and would form a matter of defence by plea to the scire facias.

The transfer of shares is in like manner matter of defence by plea, and it would be improper to decide that now on mere affidavits.

Under the form of transfer the transferee becomes bound at once by the provisions and regulations of the bank. It is provided by the deed that there can be no assignment as against the company without the assent of the directors certified, &c.; there has no doubt been a different practice for a long time, which is now relied on; but this is not sufficient,—the filing of a memorial clearly imports the assent of the directors to a transfer; but such is not the case here. If the bank has adopted an erroneous mode of transfer, and if the secretary has inadvertently adopted a wrong practice, that does not justify its continuance, and there is no reason why the proper practice should not be adopted now, and it is doubtless the duty of the directors not to give their assent to a transfer without being properly satisfied.

The main question is, whether there has been a sufficient resort to the funds and property of the bank, which is necessary before going against the shareholders—as to this, the Court ought to rely on the sheriff's return—there is a strong probability of their not being good debts; the failures were in January and it is now June, and the executive committee then appointed would, in all probability, not have delayed so long had these debts been realizable. The sheriff's valuation is, no doubt, much under the actual amount, but if left to our conjecture we should call it a rash return even as it is.

It is unnecessary to decide now whether a compromise by the committees is valid or not; it is clear, however, that those actually under seizure could not be compromised. The debtor is bound from the delivery of the writ, then the original creditor cannot interfere with his creditor. If he compromises he must take the consequences; such a composition could only stand where it appeared to be the only course.

Rule absolute for scire facias.—Friend of India.

THE BOMBAY BAR AND THE SMALL CAUSE COURT.

WE stated last week that Sir Erskine Perry, when announcing the new rules which had been passed for the Small Cause Court had made the two following assertions; first, that the expense of a suit in it was not more than one-twentieth of the cost of a similar suit in the full Court, and secondly, that the barristers of the Supreme Court highly approved of the short, simple, and economical procedure of the Small Cause Court. The incompatibility of the two assertions must, doubtless, have struck others as it did us at the time; but having great confidence in Sir Erskine Perry's means of information and judgment, we refrained from offering any remark upon the subject, but preferred to leave the explanation of the anomaly to time and circumstances. We have never thought of attributing to the gentlemen of the Bombay bar, any greater love of acquisitiveness than is apparent among other classes of society, neither did we expect to find a larger exhibition of disinterested zeal for the public benefit. Still, reasoning from the principles of our common nature, it appeared almost incredible that a body of gentlemen, who have resorted to India with the view of securing an independence by honourable exertions, should regard with any degree of complacency the existence of a Court in which their professional emoluments were so disagreeably limited. It appeared any thing but natural that men should so far forget all regard for their own interests, as to approve of the improvements in a Court, when every step in advance narrowed the jurisdiction and business of the Supreme Court, in which their brightest hopes were centered. We felt something like a suspicion, therefore, that the learned Chief Justice, in his ardour for the improvements of the Small Cause Court, and of the administration of justice through its instrumentality, had lost sight of those impulses by which men are generally actuated, and had thus been led to form an erroneous estimate of the feelings which pervaded the minds of the barristers around him. That opinion has now been confirmed. At the sitting of the Supreme Court at Bombay on the 5th instant, the Advocate-General informed his Lordship that he had not correctly interpreted the sentiments of the Bar regarding the Small Cause Court, and that with the exception of one gentleman, Mr. Crawford, they did not entertain the opinion attributed to them on the subject of the Small Cause procedure. Whatever disappointment the Chief Justice may have felt at this announcement, it will assuredly create none in the minds of the community. We are fully prepared to find that the same professional obstacles which so long obstructed the establishment of similar courts in England, will be found to exist in equal vigour in this country, and that their jurisdiction must be enlarged and their utility augmented in the teeth of much opposition. Indeed, every improvement in the administration of justice must necessarily involve the reduction of legal emoluments, and consequently provoke the hostility of those whom it will affect. It would be idle to indulge the hope of establishing a Court in which justice shall be administered simply, expeditiously, and economically, without encountering the prejudices of those who have been accustomed to a system of law, the most complicated, the most tardy, and the most expensive which the world has ever seen; but it would be dastardly to allow any such consideration to damp the zeal of reform and improvement.—Friend of India.

STATISTICS OF MOOLTAN.

TRADITION states that Mooltan is one of the oldest towns in or throughout the Panjab, that it was the emporium or chief city of a very ancient and large principality, said to go by the name of Mullistan, or properly Mull-ee-staan, meaning the country of the Mulls or Maulls, and it is allowed by intelligent Hindoos that the appendage or title of Mall, in or after Hindoo names, such as Sowam Mull, Jewar Mull, &c. &c., appertains to them as being descendants, or supposed descendants, of the people of the Mall or Maall country: but that now, by long usage and contamination, that term is taken and appropriated to Hindoo names in common. It is also said that the ruins on which the present Fort of Mooltan stands, are of most ancient date. It is situated on one of the chief and high roads to India, and consequently must have been the scene of numerous strifes, revolutions, and divers changes, and with the exception of the vicinity itself, water is scarce throughout the inland part of the district. It was only in a state of half, or extremely thin, population, until Sowam Mull took the Government into his hands. Before his time it was famous for bandits and depredators. On account of the scarcity of water, the best roads to it would be by either of the river banks, Ravee or Sutledge, or by boats down either; in case of previous rain or a good monsoon, the deep jungle and bam that exists throughout the district would afford at least plenty of good grass; but all other necessities must be scarce, and should be provided for, at least for any large forces from a distance. Below Mooltan forty to sixty miles, and about Mitten-ka-Kote and Chatchera, at or near the confluence of all the Panjab streams, rice is most plentifully produced; and about Perankpultan, on the north bank of the Sutledge, and about ninety miles or so below Ferozepore, there is a very good grain and wheat country. The population are mostly Mahomedans, and are linked by family connections, &c., to the people of Dera Gaze Khan, Lega Dere, Imed Khan, and the whole of the Scinde Sagur, as also to those of Bhawalpore and the Majoree country, or upper Scinde districts. As for the population of the Mooltan jungle, and all that tract of wild and deep jungle that spreads from near Lahore down to Mooltan, the people are all, or mostly, gridjas or shepherds, and wander with their flocks from river to river and from pasturage to pasturage. They are divided in large families or clans, and are a warlike, bold, and able race. They invariably carry arms.—Friend of India.

PROHIBITION OF TRADING BY OFFICERS OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Fort William, Home Department, Legislative, the 17th June, 1848.

The following Act passed by the Governor-General of India in Council, on the 17th June, 1848, is hereby promulgated for general information.

Act No. XV. of 1848.

An Act to forbid trading by the officers of the Supreme Courts.

For the better discharge of their duties by the officers of the undermentioned Courts of Justice, it is enacted as follows:—

I. No officer of any of the Courts of Judicature established by royal charter, within the territories subject to the government of the East India Company, or of any Court established for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors within the said territories, shall directly or indirectly by himself, or by any other person or persons on his behalf, accept from any person or persons any gift or reward for any act or behaviour in his office, other than his legal salary and fees and profits of office; or hold any office in any bank or public Company, except as hereinafter excepted; or carry on or be concerned in any dealings as a banker or trader, or as agent, factor, or broker, either for his own advantage, or for the advantage of any other person or persons: except such dealings as it may be part of the duty of any such officer by virtue of his office to carry on.

II. This act shall not be construed to forbid any officer of any of the said Courts, who is also a practising advocate, attorney, solicitor, or proctor in any of the said Courts, from taking the usual fees or emoluments of advocates, attorneys, solicitors or proctors; nor to apply to any advocate, attorney, solicitor, proctor, sheriff, assignee, receiver, or committee, so far as he is held to be in that capacity merely for some purposes an officer of any of the said courts.

III. This act shall not be construed to forbid any officer of any of the said courts from holding any unpaid office in any society for charitable purposes, or for the advancement of knowledge, or for the encouragement of science, art, or manufactures.

IV. Every officer of any of the said courts, who shall knowingly offend against this act, shall, on conviction thereof, be liable to be punished by deprivation of his office; and also by the sentence of the Court before which he shall be convicted, may be declared incapable, and in that case shall become incapable, of being appointed to the same or any other office of the same court, or to serve her Majesty or the East India Company in the territories under the government of the East India Company, or in such part of the said territories as shall be specified in the sentence; or in the discretion of the Court may be otherwise punished by fine, or fine and imprisonment, for his misdemeanour, as to the Court shall seem fit, regard being had to the nature of his offence.

G. A. BUSHBY, Secy. to the Govt. of India.

THE RECENT HURRICANES IN THE INDIAN OCEAN.

Our readers will have noticed about a fortnight ago an extract from the Bombay papers, giving an account of the hurricane experienced by H. M.'s brig Jumna, in which she only recovered from being capsized by cutting away her main-mast; and since the publication of that letter various notices have also been reprinted by us and by our contemporaries from the Mauritius papers, shewing that several vessels from this port have also suffered severely about the same position and date. A copy of the log of the Jumna has reached Calcutta, and from it, it is evident that she ran down to the S. S. W. in the face of a falling barometer, till she reached, and was becalmed in, the centre of the hurricane which she had been literally chasing till this time; but when she lost her speed of twelve to thirteen knots in the calm, the hurricane swept down upon her again, and fortunately only dismasted her.

We have been informed that some of the ships which suffered in this hurricane allowed themselves to run on, under the erroneous impression that hurricanes do not prevail in the month of April. A reference to Mr. Piddington's large work, p. 237, would have shown them that in that month the chances are more than half as great as in the two worst months preceding it! The average of recorded storms in thirty-nine years in the whole Southern Indian Ocean, being 9 in January, 13 in February, 10 in March, 8 in April, and 4 in May; in June, July, and August, none; 1 in September, 1 in October, 4 in November and 3 in December.

From the few logs and notices which have yet reached Calcutta, it would appear that there was more than one hurricane raging at the same time about this part, and we learn that Mr. Piddington has now in the press a memoir on the Maria Smees hurricane, in which it is clearly shewn that there were within a space of some four or five degrees square three hurricanes all blowing at once, and all travelling down to the south-westward, two of them being of sufficient fury to dismast three well found and well prepared merchantmen. One of the ships exposed to these hurricanes also, the Duncan, met with a terrific whirlwind which fortunately passed a mile or two from her, but which is described as being at least two miles in breadth and of an "astonishing height" and velocity of motion past the ship.

It is clear we do not yet know all the dangers of this singular tract of the Indian Ocean, from 5 to 25 S., and from 75 to 105 E., which has been the grave of so many brave men, and the gulph of such a vast amount of property, and we trust that all who can lend their aid to trace them out will freely do so, for it is only by long and patient and accurate research that their complicated phenomena are unravelled, and the laws and rules by which they are governed, and are to be avoided, are made plain to all.—Englishman, June 29.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The London Mail of May 8th, arrived in Calcutta on the 14th of June, in less than twenty-seven days.

THE NOSTASHYK INDIGO CONCERN in Jessore, was sold by auction, on the 15th of June, by Messrs. Adams & Co., in two lots, and fetched—a four annas share, Co.'s Rs. 44,700—a two annas share, 26,100.

THE NICOBAR ISLANDS are, it is said, to be abandoned by the Danes.

THE DIVISION ORDERS published at Umballah on the 2nd June, directed H. M. 3rd Light Dragoons, and two troops of Horse Artillery, to hold themselves in readiness to march at the shortest notice, and the officers of the artillery stationed at Meerut, as also those of the H. M. Lancers, have received instructions to take up their private carriage, though it is not thought likely that either the troops at Umballah or Meerut will be called on to move before the end of September.

MR. W. P. GRANT, the suspended master of the Supreme Court, has published the documents connected with his case, in the form of a pamphlet, which will probably reach England by the present mail.

MR. GORDON, the barrister, it is said, is appointed to act as official assignee in the place of Mr. Macpherson, the officiating master in equity.

THE REV. J. COLLY, of St. James's church, is, we hear, seriously indisposed.

MR. J. C. STEWART has published an advertisement calling on the shareholders of the Union Bank to appoint a committee to investigate the history of the bank's management, or rather mismanagement.

HER MAJESTY'S 98th Regiment arrived at Umallah on the 5th June.

We are sorry to notice the death of Major John Scott, of the 55th N. I. This casualty will promote Brevet Major Jellicoe, Lieutenant John D'Oyly Baring, and Ensign Cooper, M. N. Fellows of that corps. Lieut. Baring's promotion will also vacate the adjutancy of the regiment.—Hurkaru, June 28.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.—It is asserted by the Delhi Gazette, that the Governor-General's tent equipage is ordered to be prepared, which, if true, prognosticates a departure for the North-West Provinces, at the close of the rains.

MR. CHARLES HOGG has resigned his appointment as secretary to the Bank of Bengal, in order to join the firm of Kelsalls and Co.

THE CANDIDATES for the vacant secretaryship of the Bank of Bengal are Messrs. Plumb, Stopford, J. Hume, R. C. Jenkins, Curmin, Oswald, Captain Engledue, and T. Bracken (by his attorney).

MESSRS. SAUNDERS, MAY, FORDYCE & Co.—A second dividend of 5 per cent. is announced as payable on this estate on and after the 1st ultimo.

COTTON FROM NEPAUL.—A trade appears to have sprung up in the plains between Nepaul and Lassa, that promises, at no very distant period, to become important; viz., a trade in cotton, the use of which is becoming universal in these districts, as it has long been in Northern Hindoostan. The traders descend from Nepaul as far as Bahar, and offer their horses, &c., in exchange for raw cotton, which is transmitted by boats as far as Kesserrye Ghaut, on the Ganduck, and there transferred to coolies, who convey it up to its destination. Three houses of business have been established to carry on this trade, viz., at Kesserrye, Govindgunge, and Sahebgunge, and through these houses all transactions are conducted. The editor of the Englishman makes some just remarks on the advantages that might arise to this trade from the construction of good roads, and the subject is deserving of a most attentive consideration. Roads are the pioneers of civilization, and the great means for the maintenance of power. The Romans never considered a country conquered till it was traversed by at least two good roads. We, with still greater inducements for the same conduct, pursue a different policy, and expose all travellers and traders to the dangers of the jungle, besides imposing upon our troops tenfold the exertion that would otherwise be necessary. Every power that raises its head against us depends upon its natural position in wood, jungle, or mountain, for security, but this hope becomes fallacious as soon as a road adapted for military movements is formed, and our soldiers have only men, instead of nature to overcome.

THE SKEEPHORE SUGAR WORKS were sold by auction, by Messrs. Mackenzie, Lyall, and Co., on the 12th June, for one lac and twenty thousand rupees, and although we have not heard the sum which they originally cost, yet judging from their appearance, we should say that the return was very inadequate.

RESULT OF THE OPIUM SALE, the eighth of the season—1805 chests of Behar at an average of 867-14-0, produced Rs. 15,66,600; and 775 chests of Benares, at an average of 827-3-7, realised Rs. 6,41,100, thus showing an increase of Rs. 32 for Behar and Rs. 37 for Benares over the average price obtained at the last sale.

THE RANEE CHUNDA.—The manner in which the Ranee Chunda was seized (not, in the opinion of some of our Indian journalists, very creditable to our name and character) is thus described by a correspondent of the Mofussilite:—"How beautiful it was done! Fakcer Noorodeen was sent with Lumsden. They hoaxed her, that Sir Frederick wished to see her. She instantly jumped into her palankeen, quite delighted with the idea of getting back to Lahore; the pannels were closed, and under the escort of nearly the whole of Wheeler's Cavalry (who was present), took a circuitous road (avoiding Lahore by nine miles) to the first march on the Ferozepore road. When getting out of her palankeen or carriage (for I believe one was waiting for her on this side of the Ravee), she found herself surrounded by troops, instead of going into her palace. She instantly gave vent to her feelings in no measured language, attacking the Fakcer most vehemently. However, when she found it was of no use, she turned round to Lumsden and said, that on the whole she was better pleased at being removed from Lahore, where her life was not safe. In the mean time all her traps, beds and bedding, appeared at Lahore during the night, when the secret was blown, and every one in the town was taken aback. At first the people could not believe it: no doubt it would have been a different affair had she been allowed to visit Lahore—for she must have a number of friends in the town." The Ranee reached Loodianah on the morning of the 31st May, apparently in high spirits, but her servants assert she is grieved beyond measure at leaving her native country. She was to quit Umballah on the 9th June, en route for Delhi. We are happy to obtain from the Delhi Gazette a distinct and unequivocal denial that any deception was practised on the ranee to induce her to leave Shaikapoorah, and the assertion derives strength both from the personal character of Sir F. Currie, and the entire redundancy of any such act of treachery. A correspondent of the Englishman mentions a rumour afloat in the North West Provinces that the ranee is not with her escort; that a slave girl of her train had been ordered to Lahore to furnish evidence, and that the ranee, taking her place, made her way to Mooltan. The story, though improbable in itself, is rendered plausible by her known talent for intrigue, but such an escapade will injure no one but herself, as without money she is powerless, and her allowance would at once be sacrificed by such a proceeding.

KISHNAGUR AND SANTIPORH.—Reports from Kishnaghar and Santipore relative to the prospects of the indigo crop appear to be far from satisfactory; the general expectation being that a half crop is as much as can be hoped for. The great wonder is, where funds have been obtained even for so small a crop as that which is expected, since the fall of the houses which were so largely engaged in indigo speculations, and the loss of that support which the Union Bank ministered to them.

PREPARATIONS FOR A CAMPAIGN.—Although the probability of a campaign is diminishing every day, we are given to understand that active preparations continue to be made in the commissariat department, not only at Lahore, but at all the large stations in the N. W. Provinces. The ordnance stores that left Delhi for Ferozepore at the commencement of the present month will reach that station in a few days, and a little energy, "judiciously applied," would get an army quite ready by the 1st of August, should it then be still required. It is not probable that any of the troops at Lahore will be engaged, except the Queen's 10th foot, and the two native infantry regiments recently arrived from the Julundhur. Brigadier Campbell and Col. Eckford are already on the list for brigade; Col. Brooke will, it is said, command the artillery, and Capt. Frank Turner has been named for the office of asst. adjt. general of artillery.—Delhi Gazette, June 21.

SIR THOMAS MADDOCK.—The Honourable the Court of Directors having been pleased to intimate that previously to the expiration of the term of five years to which the tenure of a seat in council is limited by their orders, they had resolved to extend it for one year, in favour of Sir Thomas Herbert Maddock, Knight; he will during such extended period retain his rank as first ordinary member of the council.

THE CALENDAR OF PRISONERS to be tried at the ensuing sessions in Calcutta contains only five cases. The Madras calendar the other day, if our memory is correct, contained more than a hundred. How the Madras grand and petit juries must envy the superior institutions of the City of Palaces.

THE CANDAHARIS.—The Delhi Gazette furnishes some satisfactory intelligence from Candahar to the effect that the Candaharees, so far from descending in thousands to join the Dewan's standard, have more than sufficient occupation in their own dissensions; two sirdars, brothers, blockading a third, Kohun dil Khan, who claims to be ruler in Candahar. It has been successively affirmed that Cabul, Lahore, Beloochistan, Scinde, and Candahar were pouring their thousands to the assistance of Moolraj, but the information turns out in every instance to have been groundless, and the Dewan is now reduced to his own unassisted resources, which are gradually decreasing, while he has surrounded himself with a turbulent and dissolute soldiery, bound to him only by the hope of pay and plunder, with little respect for his authority, and a salutory dread, in their hearts, of English prowess.

CHARGE OF EMBEZZLEMENT.—We fear Mr. Campbell, the superintendent of Darjeeling, has laid himself open to a very serious charge for libel, by a notification which he has ventured to publish in the last Bengalee Government Gazette, of a reward of Rs. 500 for the apprehension of Akil Mahomed Moonshiee, the treasurer of Darjeeling. The superintendent charges the treasurer in that notice with embezzlement and robbery. Has he not heard that the government of Madras dismissed Vencataroyaloo on a charge of having abstracted government records from the office in which he was employed, and, according to the immemorial custom of the Madras and Bengal Presidencies, published the crime of which he had been convicted, and the punishment, in the official Gazette. Does he not know that a prosecution has been commenced by that individual against the government for libel in the Supreme Court, and that the press of that presidency upholds the prosecution? They maintain that the positive assumption of the guilt of Vencataroyaloo is not just, because criminality has never yet been brought home to the man, whatever his deserts may have been. They have declared that government should not possess the power of libelling their servants in the official Gazette, and that it is not right to publish defamatory matter ad libitum regarding those whom they get rid of, and that whenever this is done, they are liable for an action in the Supreme Court. Here, the superintendent has no positive proof that the money was stolen by the treasurer. It is true the money entrusted to him is gone, but it may have been taken by others. It is true he has fled, but he may have known how many enemies he had at the station, and supposed that his innocence would be no protection. Yet Dr. Campbell, positively assuming that the man is guilty, though criminality has never been brought home to him, whatever his deserts may have been, has "libelled him, on suspicion, in the official Gazette," by charging him with bribery and corruption. We think the wisest thing the ex-treasurer could do in these circumstances, would be to proceed forthwith to Calcutta, and turn the tables on the superintendent by commencing an action of libel, laying his damages at Rs. 20,000, to shew how high an estimate he has of his own moral character. —Friend of India.

COAL.—Major F. Jenkins, the Governor-general's agent in Assam, has endeavoured to work the coal mines on the banks of the Dekhoo. The mine in which the present experiments are being carried on is in the vicinity of the Namsang hills, and the working depth is not more than ten feet below the soil. The stratum is ten feet in thickness, of which four feet is pure coal. The difficulties of working the mines arise from the rugged, and in some places dangerous, character of the roads. This, however, may be surmounted, and a supply of coal obtained, sufficient to feed the steamers visiting the province. A report of the proceedings has been submitted to the Asiatic Society.

EXPLOSION.—A letter in the Delhi Gazette gives the particulars of an explosion, that amply justifies Sir F. Currie in removing the magazine. Some hundred maunds of gunpowder having been taken out, were thrown into some deep wells in the neighbourhood, and six feet of water was considered a sufficient guarantee for their non-combustion. The heat of the weather however exhausted the wells, and the powder gradually dried. A gureewan and two bullock-drivers with their cattle happened to sit down around one of the wells, and a spark from a pipe carried by one of the party, falling into it, they were blown to atoms. Several others at a great distance were severely injured, and the well was scarcely recognizable. If this immense mass of gunpowder had been allowed to remain in the magazine in Lahore, and had, either by design, or accident, taken fire, half that city would have been destroyed.

NATIVE CREDULITY.—A Hindoo mendicant made his appearance near Surda, and proclaimed that Shiva had invested him with a miraculous power of curing diseases; exhibiting at the same time an image of that deity, which he affirmed spoke to him every night. According to his own assertion, he can cure consumption, leprosy, lunacy, &c., and even heal the lame, and restore sight to the blind. So great is the concourse of persons anxious to obtain the benefit of his powers, that shops have been erected near his residence to furnish them with subsistence. It is not improbable that he may have performed a few cures, for it is a well known fact that many of the diseases of mankind are owing to dependency, or what in modern parlance is styled "nerves." Of these influences the natives are known to be peculiarly susceptible, and the removal of their mental ailments may in many cases be followed by a freedom from physical suffering. One such cure would create belief, and elevate the impostor into a deity; and such appears to have been the process in the present case.

THE UNION BANK.—The Chief Justice has made the rule for a writ of scire facias against the four wealthy shareholders of the Union Bank absolute. The numerous objections which were raised by the ingenuity of counsel to it have been overruled. His judgment will be found in another column, and it was thus summed up:—"The main question is, whether there has been a sufficient resort to the funds and property of the bank, which is necessary before going against the shareholders; as to this the Court ought to rely on the sheriff's return; there is a strong probability of their not being good debts; the failures were in January, and it is now June, and the executive committee then appointed would in all probability not have delayed so long, had these debts been realizable. The sheriff's valuation is no doubt much under the actual amount, but if left to our conjecture, we should call it a rash return even as it is." So the writ will issue against these proprietors; one, if not two, of whom are said to be now residing at Chandernagore, and another is prepared to take up his abode where the law may send him to. As it may seem strange that the shareholders should be pursued by process of law, at the same time that the creditors' committee is endeavouring to effect an equitable arrangement, it is necessary to state that the present suit is brought by the representative of the Commercial Bank of Bombay, who declines to act in concert with the committee.

RAGOOE BANGRIAH.—The Hurkeru affirms that the band lately headed by Ragooe Bangriah has again commenced operations; they have attacked three villages in the tannah collectorate, in one of which the patell was slain. If this fact be correct, it demonstrates the deficiency of the police arrangements at the Bombay presidency, which, it is said, Mr. Clerk had determined to reform. The country, which is the scene of these outrages, presents every facility, from its mountains and its forests, for the successful operations of a band of marauders; but a well organised police, under the direction of an officer like Lieutenant Gell, would doubtless be successful in eradicating the gang, and restoring peace and security.

LIEUT. NICOLSON, political agent at Peshawur, undertook on the 25th May an expedition against a troublesome tribe in his neighbourhood, the result of which was completely successful. The example of Lieuts. Edwardes and Nicolson would prove, even if no other evidence were forthcoming, that British troops can march, fight, and conquer, during the hot season, as well as the cold.

DISTRIBUTION OF BOOKS TO NATIVES.—The Probhakur mentions that a prospectus is now in circulation among the natives, to supply with books those native youths who are too poor to obtain them otherwise. This is the real mode of diffusing knowledge and its attendant blessings, and if the design is not dropped at the outset—as is too often the case with native schemes—it will prove a permanent benefit to the native population.

UNCOVENANTED SERVANTS.—The Sudder Dewanny Adawlut has just issued a circular order, intimating that, under specific instructions from the Court of Directors, the orders in council of the 24th July, 1846, relative to leave of absence to uncovenanted servants, have been abrogated.

Dr. Hooker, the eminent botanist and naturalist, who is now residing at Darjeeling, has experienced insuperable difficulties in penetrating to the north of that station and visiting Chinese Tartary. Surely the influence of the British government ought to be sufficiently powerful to procure a safe conduct for all who travel in the neighbouring countries under its auspices.

EDWARD CURRIE, Esq.—The choice of government for a successor of Mr. Lane at the Board of Customs, Salt and Opium has fallen on Mr. Edward Currie, and a more efficient officer the service could scarcely furnish.

John Lewis Esq., is stated by the papers to have been nominated provisional member of council.

MR. A. L. MELVILLE.—The eminent attainments of this gentleman in the Bengalli language having been brought by the examiners of the College of Fort William to the notice of government, the Right Honourable the Governor of Bengal has been pleased to confer on him a degree of honour, and award to him a donation of Rs. 1,600, prescribed by the rules of the college.

THE LAHORE correspondent of the Englishman affords the following intelligence. The force that had been sent out to capture the Gooroo returned on the 7th without having achieved its object, chiefly through the treachery of the Kardars; and of the inhabitants of the villages, who almost in every instance, gave the most rapid information to the Baiee, while they imposed fictitious reports upon the British; and whenever by the exercise of personal acuteness and activity, the officers managed to acquire a knowledge of his position, they were led by the most circuitous roads, and all kinds of obstacles were thrown in their way, till ample time was afforded for the pursued to make his escape. The inhabitants of one of these villages having given nuzzurs to the rebel, and even gone to his assistance, were given up to plunder, and the village itself was burnt to the ground, a terrible, but perhaps necessary, example in the present circumstances of the country. The same letter states that he is at present surrounded by 500 Patans, a statement utterly irreconcilable with that of another authority in the Hurkaru, who estimates his force at 5,000 men, since, if he retain but one-fifth of that number, the idea of his being surrounded by the Patans is absurd.

STEAMER BETWEEN BENARES AND MIRZAPORE.—The new steamer, the Kashoeja, has been regularly established between Mirzapore and Benares, a distance of about fifty miles; the fare is extremely moderate, two rupees being the highest charge. The vessel is well fitted up, and it is expected will be able to make the trip to and from Mirzapore the same day. She has been started by a company of native merchants.

DOST MAHOMED KHAN.—The Delhi Gazette states that Mahomed Khan had evinced a disposition to march against Mahomed Shah Khan Ghilzie, who has built a fort in lieu of the one destroyed in the last war, and has shown an inclination to be troublesome. But on hearing of the civil war in Candahar, he desisted, and has sent to offer his mediation to reconcile the disputants, an offer not very likely to be accepted by either party. Our own private letters state that Mahomed Shah Khan, who was the first to take the field against us in the Khybur, in 1841, is in open revolt against the Dost, who finds it no easy matter to reduce the wild mountain chief to reason.—Friend of India.

STAGNATION OF BUSINESS.—The Star states that so great is the stagnation of business in the port of Calcutta, that the extras of the preventive service have been "requested to discontinue" their attendance for the next ten months at least, and it is rumoured that a reduction in the regular staff will soon be effected.

BENGAL NEWSPAPER.—The Probhakur announces the appearance of another Bengalee newspaper started by a number of young men at Bhowanipore. It is called the Rothnoborshun, or the Shower of Jewels, and has an item in its arrangements, we believe, as yet perfectly unique. No fixed price is charged, but every one is at liberty to give what he likes, so it be not less than two annas. Such a plan is likely to be more popular than profitable, and we can scarcely see what object it is intended to serve, as the price of the paper becomes practically two annas. It is a bi-monthly, and we hail it as another accession to the strength of Young Bengal.

THE CALCUTTA PRINCES.—The Calcutta Star, in reply to one of his correspondents, says that the Calcutta merchants are called princes, because people should not put their trust in them!

STORMS IN THE SOUTHERN TROPICAL SEAS.—Very severe storms have recently visited the southern tropical seas within longitudes 68 deg. and 89 deg. East; and among other vessels the Pemberon, the Columbia, and the Wellington received serious damage between the 24th of April and the 1st of May. On the 12th of May the Columbia passed the hull of a large ship in lat. 18 deg. 23 min. S. and lon. 68 deg. 27 min. E. The Minerva also on the same day passed the hull of a ship of some 600 tons, with all her masts gone by the board, latitude and longitude not mentioned. Both the reports, however, probably refer to the same wreck. The loss of a troop ship, with many lives, is rumoured in town, but it has not been traced to any authentic source. It is also rumoured that that well known and noble Indianman the Earl of Balcarras has been dismasted.—Hurkaru.

DOODOO MEAH.—The proceedings of the Sudder Court in the case of the notorious Dacoit Doodoo Meah are being translated into English for publication, by the orders of government.

AVA.—The court of Ava has granted permission to foreigners to leave the empire at pleasure without extortion or hinderance.

BENGAL COAL COMPANY.—The Star says that government has determined at last to interfere with the monopoly of the Bengal Coal Company, so far as to secure mere speculators from molestation or hinderance in mining or transporting coal.

GENERAL RAPER.—It is said that General Raper, who has arrived in Calcutta from the Cape, will resume his appointment at Moorshedabad, thus sending Mr. H. Torrens down to Calcutta again.

MACKENZIE V. PARKER.—In the Supreme Court an action was brought on the 28th of June, by Mr. James Mackenzie against Mr. J. P. Parker, for assault under the following curious circumstances. A fictitious announcement of the marriage of Mr. Parker's daughter and niece had appeared in the Calcutta Star, and on Mr. Parker's application to the editor of that paper, the letter, on the authority of which the announcement was inserted, was given up to the injured parent and wife. The handwriting of the letter resembled that of Mr. Mackenzie so strongly (in Mr. Parker's opinion), that he considered himself justified in giving Mr. Mackenzie a thrashing, and he called at his office and did so accordingly. This was the ground of the action. The Chief Justice, as well as the counsel for the plaintiff, seemed to think, that if Mr. Mackenzie had been the writer of the letter, he would have deserved the thrashing he got; but as the thrashing was administered in the absence of such proof, it was a serious offence in the eye of the law. "The case," said the Chief Justice, "is one in which the defendant acted without sufficient proof, and inconsiderately, though certainly under feelings of extreme irritation; and I award damages to the extent of Rs. 200." We believe the damages were laid at Rs. 5,000.

EDUCATION IN GOVERNMENT SCHOOLS.—It is said that Mr. Drinkwater Bethune, President of the Council of Education, disapproves of the system of instruction hitherto pursued at the Government schools and that he intends reforming it.

TROOP SERGEANT MAJOR CUNNINGHAM.—The Hurkaru informs us that on the 1st June a handsome silver medal was presented to Troop Sergeant Major Cunningham as a reward for 24 years of meritorious service; the medal is accompanied by an annuity of 20*l*. a year. This is in pursuance of an order from the Horse Guards, dated 1845, and is the first instance of its operation in this country. Till very lately non-commissioned officers—a most responsible and efficient body—have been totally neglected. We hail this as an omen of a better spirit, and a more enlightened system.

BERHAMPORE.—The following is an extract of a letter from the neighbourhood of Berhampore, dated June 27th.—"The Bhagerutty river commenced rising at noon on the 25th instant, and, up to noon on the 26th, rose 6 feet, and has gone into a little of our indigo, which will occasion some loss."

ASSAM.—A letter from Assam of the 20th June, says:—"We have had very heavy rains, but, notwithstanding, the weather has been very hot and the river very low. This last circumstance shows how little the Burrampooter is affected by local rains, melting of the snow being the great source of our high inundations. We have had a pretty fair quantum of thunder-storms this season, but no earthquakes, or none that have been perceptible to me, since this change of the electric state of the atmosphere."—Ibid.

CHARGE OF MURDER.—A Sergeant Cribble is in the hands of the police, charged with murdering his wife, who has died in the general hospital from wounds she has received either from the hands of her husband or some one else.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE.—The old furniture which has occupied the Government House from the days of Hastings is expected, at no distant period, to give place to a new suit in the modern style. Messrs. Shearwood and Co., we understand, have received orders to furnish the house in their best style, and the expense, it is said, will not be much under two lacs.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE CALCUTTA DIOCESAN ADDITIONAL CLERGY SOCIETY took place at the bishop's palace, on the 19th of June. The amount realized last year for the purpose of the society was sufficient for the support of three clergymen, and the funds seem to be in a flourishing state.

THE ACT to forbid trading by the officers of the Supreme Court has at length passed into a law. A draft has also been published of an Act to enable the Supreme Court to issue commissions for taking affidavits.

COURTS MARTIAL.

LIEUT. ALEXANDER S. ALLEN, 34th N.I.

Head-Quarters, Simla, June 15.—At a general court-martial assembled at Agra, on Tuesday, May 16, 1848, Lieut. A. S. Allen, 34th N.I., was arraigned on the following charge—viz.

For highly unbecoming conduct at Agra, in the following instances:—

1st. In having, on April 1, 1848, made use of grossly insulting language to Ens. B. H. Baugh, of the same regiment, without any provocation.

2nd. In having, on the same day, when required on the part of Ens. Baugh to retract the language he had used, and to apo-logise for the same, shamefully evaded making any reparation to Ens. Baugh, by alleging that, as no third party was present who understood what was said, that officer could not prove that he, Lieut. Allen, had used the expressions for which an apology was demanded.

3rd. In having, on April 17, 1848, when required by his commanding officer to apologise to Ens. Baugh, in presence of the officers of the 34th reg. assembled for this purpose, by order of the major-general commanding the Meerut division, disingenuously hesitated to make the required concession, and at length refused to do so, falsely asserting that he had not used to Ens. Baugh the words imputed to him.

Finding—guilty of the preamble, and
Of the 1st instance of the charge, with exception of the words "without any provocation."
Of the 2nd instance, not guilty.
Of the 3rd instance, not guilty, both of which the court does acquit him of.

Sentence—To be reprimanded in such manner as his Excellency the Right Honourable the Commander-in-Chief may be pleased to direct.

Revised finding—1st instance of the charge, guilty.
2nd instance, not guilty, and does acquit him thereof.
3rd instance, guilty.
The court finds the prisoner is guilty of highly unbecoming conduct, as averred in the preamble.

Revised sentence.—To be suspended from his rank, pay, and allowances, for the period of six months.

Approved and confirmed,
(Signed) Gough, General,
Commander-in-Chief.

Head-Quarters, Simla, June 14, 1848.

Remarks by the Right Honourable the Commander-in-Chief.—The second instance of the charge was framed chiefly on the written statement of an officer, who, when examined as a witness at the trial, deposed to circumstances which, had they been included in his previous statement, would have prevented the second instance of the charge being preferred at all. The commander-in-chief will not impute to this officer any intentional suppression of the whole truth, but as more instances than one have lately occurred of important variations between the statements sent to head-quarters, on which charges may have been framed, and the testimony subsequently given at trials, his lordship desires to point out the absolute necessity for due consideration and entire accuracy on the part of all who may be called upon to give information or evidence.

The suspension of Lieut. Allen, under the sentence of the court, will take effect from the date of the sentence being published at Agra, of which a report is to be made to the adjutant-general of the army, and assistant adjutant-general at the presidency, and that officer is to be released from arrest.

ENS. JOHN W. RIPLEY, 41st N.I.

Head-Quarters, Simla, June 6, 1848.—At a general court-martial assembled in Fort William, on Wednesday, May 24, 1848, Ens. J. W. Ripley, 41st N.I. was arraigned on the following charges;—viz.

1st. For having, instead of availing himself of the leave to visit Benares, on private affairs, granted to him in general orders, May 12, 1847, remained in Calcutta till the expiration of that leave on Oct. 15, 1847, and for having from that date remained at the presidency without leave, until April 20, 1848, when he was placed in arrest in Fort William.

2nd. For having disobeyed the positive order of Maj.-Gen. E. Cartwright, commanding the presidency division, given to him on or about Nov. 7, 1847, and by which he was directed to proceed forthwith to join his regiment at Nusseerabad.

Finding.—Guilty of the first charge, with the exception that the arrest in Fort William took place on the 19th, instead of on April 20, 1848, as alleged therein.

Guilty of the second charge.

Sentence.—To be severely reprimanded.
Approved and confirmed.
(Signed) Gough, General,
Commander-in-Chief.

Head-Quarters, Simla, June 3, 1848.

Remarks by the Right Honourable the Commander-in-Chief.—The general officer commanding the presidency division will administer a severe reprimand to Ensign Ripley, and will then order him to proceed forthwith to join his regiment, having first released Ensign Ripley from his arrest.

EXCHANGES.

Exchange has fluctuated but little; business has been limited; few document bills have been offered; present quotations, six months' sight, 110 to 110½. American credit bills have been in much request at 1 9½ to 1 9½.

FREIGHTS.

Freights to London had an upward tendency shortly after the date of our last, but subsequently arrivals made consignees more willing to accept the rates offered. Quotations—to London, £4 7s. 6d. to £4 10s. per ton; to Liverpool, £4.

COMMERCIAL REPORT.

The accounts from Home tend to restore a healthy feeling in commerce; they have, combined with the present state of Exchange, given a slight start to the Produce market. There has been a better and more general demand for some of the leading staples, than for some time past. In Indigo nothing has been done, the remains of last crop being held at high rates. Sugar is the article in most favour, and demand is brisk at an advance of 8 to 12 annas per md. for all good white descriptions. In silk a moderate business has been done, the supply being at present small. Corahs, neglected for some time past, have during the last week come into somewhat more inquiry. Saltpetre remains quiet, prices during the month having rapidly subsided, and little business is now in progress. A few shipments of Rice still go forward to England. Sales of Jute have not been large. Safflower sells at gradually declining prices. Catch is largely shipped. A fair demand has continued for Linseed for America.

At the 8th Opium sale on the 12th ult, Patna averaged Rs. 867 14 9 per chest. Prices advanced a little, and remained steady at about Rs. 870, until receipt of the steamer's mail from China, brought last week via Singapore. Patna being quoted there at Rs. 500 per chest, the price here at once advanced, and is now steady at Rs. 915. A considerable business has been done in the drug, but at present the market is quiet, pending the 9th sale.

It is in the import market that considerable alterations are shown. It is seldom that in the value of British Cottons so unexpected and continuous a decline has taken place, as has been the case since the early part of May. Supplies have been large, demand slack, and holders very urgent. The low prices at which the Manchester Cottons are now selling has latterly produced more demand, but there is much, and probably, needless want of confidence in the market, evinced by both buyers and sellers. The proceedings in the Law Courts at Bombay, in the matter of the celebrated Opium cases, still distract to some extent the whole trade of the Marwarries. In Glasgow fabrics there is no change for the better, stocks and supplies being large, demand almost suspended, and prices ruinously low. In Mule Twist the same course is apparent. Large supplies arriving at once, and at once placed on the market, have caused a rapid, indeed, almost a daily decline in some numbers. There should be more firmness now, as the Marwarries are buying, and imports are falling off. In Metals a more general business has been done than for some time past.—Copper, Spelter, and Iron having all proved more saleable, though shewing little upward tendency in prices.

In the value of money in the Bazar, there is no great alteration. There are no changes in the bank's rates of interest and discount, or in the stringency of its mode of business. In the Bazar, money can be obtained on similar securities at rather lower rates, but it is needless to add, the security must be of a tangible and undoubted character.

IMPORTS.

COTTON GOODS.—The prices of British cottons have experienced a further decline since the date of our last. The demand, although latterly more extensive, has still been insufficient to take off the large quantity of goods that have been placed on the market, but it is to be hoped that prices have now arrived at their lowest point. The inquiry is chiefly directed to Manchester Cottons, and sales have latterly been large. Almost all varieties of Glasgow Light Muslins are only sold by submitting to ruinous prices, which, in the present overstocked market, it is necessary to do to make sales. There has been more doing in Printed Goods during the past month, chiefly in fine Turkey Red Chintzes of 25 inch. Turkey Reds have generally been sold at very low prices, and even at these demands, is still languid.

SHIRTINGS.—There has been a further decline in all descriptions of Grey Shirtings; in ordinary qualities, the fall since the early part of May is fully 8 annas per piece. Sales at present are on a large scale, and these low rates must induce a considerable increase of consumption. In Bleached litle has been done, and the prices remain very low.

JACONETS.—In both Grey and White a further decline of 2 to 3 annas per piece must be quoted, but both kinds have continued in good demand, and sales have been considerable.

MADAPOLLAMS.—Grey of suitable qualities are of fair sale, stock being moderate.

CAMBRICS.—White 6-4 are neglected, and stocks in dealers' hands are large.

BOOK MUSLINS.—There has been a moderate inquiry for common Books, but at extremely low prices, at which holders have been willing sellers, in the absence of any better prospects for the future. Prices paid have been for No. 1 Co.'s Rs. 1, and for Nos. 2 and 3, 3 annas per piece consecutive advance. Middling and fine Books are also in little request.

LAPSETS.—All descriptions of these goods are unsaleable.

MULLS.—A few sales of fine 6-4 kinds have been made. Common sorts are quite unsaleable.

LAPSET SCARFS.—Sales of some quality have been made, but at low rates, and prices are very low.

TURKEY RED GOODS.—The quantity of all descriptions of these goods on offer has been great, and prices are even lower than at the date of our last. The demand has been for the season very inactive. Twills and Cambrics are lower by 6 pies per yard, for all widths. Plain Mulls and Printed 20 and 5 yards goods continue to be supplied to an extent much exceeding the wants of the market, and prices are at ruinous rates.

PRINTED GOODS.—The finest qualities of 25 inch T. R. Chintzes have been saleable, but there has been little of the inquiry usually experienced at this season for these goods.

MULE TWIST.—The arrivals of Twist having been large, and holders being anxious sellers, a further decline has taken place in the value of Nos. 40, 50, and 60, of 2 to 3 pies per morah. Sales have been to a fair extent.

TURKEY RED TWIST.—Transactions have not been extensive, and prices are barely maintained.

ORANGE TWIST.—14 bales have been sold at 1½ annas per lb.

GREEN TWIST.—A small quantity has been sold at Co.'s Rs. 1-1 per lb.

COPPER.—In this metal a fair extent of business has been done, prices however remaining without much change for the better. The demand is at present without the activity usual at this season.

SPELTER.—There has been a fair demand for Spelter, and sales amount to 12,760 mds. at Ct. Rs. 9-4 to 9-6 per f. md.—the latter being the value of the day. The stock in first hands is very moderate.

IRON.—The sales are to a moderate extent, chiefly of Bar of old importation, which has sold from Co.'s Rs. 3-3 to 3-4. Bar of recent import commands Co.'s Rs. 3-8 per f. md. and is of free sale.

SWEDISH STEEL.—1,100 Tubs have been sold at Ct. Rs. 5-15 to 6-4 per f. md.

LEAD.—A small sale of Pig has been made at Sa. Rs. 8 per f. md.

TIN PLATES.—Sales have been large. 645 Boxes at Co.'s Rs. 16-12 to 17-8 per box.

BEER.—Large sales of Bass have been made at Co.'s Rs. 65 per hhd.—Allsopp's is held at Co.'s Rs. 70 per hhd.

SALT.—Liverpool stored has been selling at high rates, Co.'s Rs. 92 to 95 per 100 mds. Madras has brought Co.'s Rs. 51 per 100 mds.

DISTRICT AND PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF SOUTHERN INDIA.

FRIDAY, 26TH MAY, A. D. 1848.

We have at last the heartfelt satisfaction of communicating to our readers the joyful intelligence of the re-opening of the District and Provincial Grand Lodge of Southern India, which auspicious event took place this morning at 10 o'clock. Right Worshipful John Binny Key, Esq., having, by a patent under the hand and seal of the Right Worshipful John, Lord Elphinstone, Provincial Grand Master of Southern India, which was read by the acting Provincial Grand Secretary, been appointed his deputy for the government of this province, was duly installed, proclaimed, and saluted accordingly. The ceremony was conducted by W. Br. McTaggart, W. M. of Lodge No. 175, Perfect unanimity and junior grand warden of the province.

The Right Worshipful Brother before entering on the duties of the morning, addressed the assembled brethren, and in very appropriate terms, expressed his sense of the high honour conferred on him. He hoped this present re-opening of the grand lodge was but the dawning beam of a bright and prosperous era in the masonic annals of the province. There were a great many abuses to reform, a multitude of irregularities to repress, which, he trusted, a strict adherence to the land-marks and constitutions of the order, aided by the ready and cordial co-operation of the lodges and the brethren, both at the Presidency and in the Mofussil, of which he did not entertain the slightest doubt, would enable him effectually to accomplish.

The proceedings of the last grand lodge were read and confirmed. After which, agreeably to the constitutions, the election of a treasurer took place, when Brother Goolden, who had been acting all the time the grand lodge was in abeyance, and to whose kindness, next to that of Brother J. U. Ellis, the late grand treasurer, the province was greatly indebted for the continued support of the widows on its charity fund, was found chosen as the guardian of finance, by a large majority; indeed, we might almost say unanimously, for there were but three votes for two other brothers.

The grand treasurer then submitted the accounts of the province, showing a balance in his favour of about Rs. 560. The D. G. M., in remarking on the present ineffective state of the Provincial Fund of Benevolence, observed it was entirely owing to the non-payment for a length of time, by almost all the lodges of the province, of their regular dues and quarterage. As this was an evil which could not be allowed to exist any longer, he would appoint a committee consisting of the masters and past masters of the Presidency Lodge, assisted by the grand secretary and grand treasurer, to investigate the state of affairs and to suggest measures for restoring the Fund of Benevolence to its former flourishing condition. The same committee would also undertake the entire revision of the old provincial by-laws; many of which required to be amended, and others expunged. The committee were accordingly appointed and directed to lay their proceedings before the grand lodge at the quarterly communication on next St. John's Day, the 24th June; previously submitting them to him for his consideration.

The following Brethren were then nominated to office for the year:—

W. Br. J. Ouchterlony, of Lodge No. 175 Prov. Sr. Gd. Wn.
W. Br. W. McTaggart,	ditto Jr. do. do.
W. Br. J. Goolden,	ditto Gd. Treasr.
V. W. B. W. Glover,	ditto Gd. Secy.
W. Br. F. A. Reid,	ditto Sr. Gd. Dn.
W. Br. P. Austruther,	ditto Junr. do.
W. Br.....,	ditto Gd. Dr. of C.
W. Br. H. Nelson,	ditto Gd. Sd. Br.

All business being conducted, the Grand Lodge was closed in due form, and the brethren dispersed.

We congratulate the province of Southern India on the happy selection made by Lord Elphinstone, in the person of our present worthy and high esteemed Head R. W. Br. Key. His position just now is a difficult and an unpleasant one; he has much to contend against and more to rectify—yet have we no fears for the issue. We believe him fully qualified for the struggle, and that with the assistance of his worthy and zealous colleagues he will be enabled effectually to grapple with and overcome every obstacle that may be thrown in the way either of his good intentions or of his measures for the welfare and prosperity of the province.

We fervently pray that our hopes and anticipations may be fully realized.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Precursor, with the London mail of May 24, arrived on the 1st July.

THE COURT MARTIAL ON DR. MONAT.—The Spectator states that H. E. Sir George Berkely has transmitted the proceedings of the late Court Martial on Assist. Surg. Monat to the Horse Guards for the special observation of the Duke of Wellington.

THE REV. MR. JAMES.—The Athenaeum mentions that the appointment of a committee of medical officers has been requested to report on the state of mind of the Rev. Mr. James, chaplain of Black Town.

ATLAS MARINE INSURANCE OFFICE.—A call of Rs. 6,000 has been made upon the members of this office.

THE MAGAZINE OF THE 23RD L. I. at Kamptee was struck by lightning on the night of June 2, and utterly destroyed.

ELLORE.—A letter from Ellore states, that the six companies of the 47th N. I. that were ordered on field service to Masulipatam have suffered much from fever. The detachment had 88 men in hospital.

GOOMSOOR.—The Spectator has received intelligence from Goomsoor; its tone is croaking; no disturbance of tranquillity has yet taken place, but no end of disturbances appears in the future to the mind of the Spectator's informant. Among other particulars we learn that since Colonel Campbell left the Hills, Chokra Bishye has visited the Goomsoor tribes, for the purpose of keeping alive their feelings in favour of a restoration of the Raj.

THE BRIG GRACE got on shore one and a half miles to the northward of Cavelong, on the night of June 27.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF and his staff will proceed almost immediately to Bangalore.

COL. P. MONTGOMERY, C. B., it is reported, will be appointed to the divisional command of the Ceded Districts, v. Brig. Gen. Anderson about to proceed to Europe.

LIEUT. COL. DOWKER is spoken of as the probable successor of Col. Perry in the command of Nagpore.

MILITARY.—The remaining portion of the detachment of H. M. 4th Regiment, and a detachment of the Invalids, &c., of the H. C. Service, will embark early to-morrow morning the 17th instant.—Madras Spectator, June 16.

A. MACLEAN, ESQ.—The Madras papers inform us that A. Maclean, Esq., third member of the Board of Revenue at that presidency, has been arrested by order of government, for the purpose of instituting criminal proceedings against him—he being charged with having violated the Act of Parliament, which forbids British subjects from engaging in money transactions with native princes.

BELLARY.—The Spectator contains a petition to George Norton, Esq., from "six thousand respectable inhabitants" of Bellary, praying for the establishment among them of a provincial high school. The following is an extract from the address in question:—"The Bellary district consists of a population of one million and two hundred thousand souls, and the portion susceptible of educational improvement might fairly be assumed at one third of this number. The subject of the present address, concerning as it does the interest of such an immense number of people, needs in itself no further proof to verify the utility and necessity of a provincial high school at Bellary; and should it be formed at once, what we now urge would render the fact more obvious to you. It will be no self-praise or flattery when we say, that great anxiety is evinced for educational improvement in all quarters of the district, and so also in some degree even in villages destitute of schools. Although we feel persuaded that your board will not lose sight of the establishment of subordinate schools, yet the importance of the subject, and the absolute necessity that exists for them, induce us to express our desire that measures would be taken by you to set on foot branch schools at other towns and places of the district, as may be deemed expedient."

SUSPICIOUS DEATH AT KOTAGHERY.—The death of a lady, the wife of a member of the civil service, under very suspicious circumstances, has excited a great sensation at the presidency. The affair is thus detailed in the Athenaeum of July 8:—"The unfortunate lady, who was the wife of H. Frere, Esq., of the Madras civil service, has been living separated from her husband, almost from the time of their marriage. At the time of her death she was residing at Kotaghery, fifteen miles from Ootacamund, which place she occasionally visited. She was first taken ill on the morning of the 26th May, and continued very unwell during the night and the whole of the next day. Violent attacks of retching succeeded each other, and towards Saturday evening she became insensible and remained so until the 28th, when she expired. She was attended during her illness by Mr. Daubeney, an assistant surgeon upon the Madras establishment, who, for some time previous, had been residing at Kotaghery on sick leave, and whose acquaintance with the unhappy lady has been made the ground of serious inquiry. It appears, that he alone prescribed for her, and was the only attendant during her illness; his prescriptions being made up by Mr. Haldwell, the apothecary in medical charge of the station. Dr. Ranking, the junior medical officer on the Hills, was sent for; but she had expired some hours before the intelligence of her illness reached him. The post mortem examination of the body was made next day by Mr.

Daubeney, but rumours as to the cause of death, and various suspicious circumstances, had in the meantime got abroad; and on the 31st, Major Hall, the commanding officer on the Hills, accompanied by Dr. Ranking, proceeded to Kotaghery, with the view of investigating all the circumstances connected with the matter. A jury was assembled; the body was re-opened by Dr. Ranking, and the stomach and brain, which had not been examined by Mr. Daubeney, were inspected, and afterwards transmitted to Professor Key at Madras, for the purpose of being analysed. A careful hearing of the facts deposed to by various parties, if they did not dispel the doubts which had given rise to the inquiry, seemed to afford no ground for imputing guilt, either to the living or to the dead; and a verdict was returned, of "death from natural causes." Some days afterwards, however, during the prosecution of some researches in the house of the deceased, the remains of an infant child were found, wrapped in old soiled bags or pillow cases, which had been deposited in a box. They were conveyed to Major Hall, who forthwith empanelled another jury, the commanding officer as before, officiating as coroner. The medical officers belonging to the station, Drs. Packman and Ranking, and Dr. Welsh, who is staying at the Hills, on sick leave, were in attendance; and after a lengthened investigation, the jury found that the remains were those of a child born of European parents; but in consequence of the entire destruction of the lungs and heart, it was impossible to give any opinion as to whether the child had been born alive or not. A wound, however, being detected on the right side of the neck, which, in the opinion of all the medical men present, would have been sufficient to cause death, the jury came to the conclusion that foul play had been resorted to, and brought in a verdict of wilful murder against some person or persons unknown."

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

DEDUCTIONS FOR PASSAGE ALLOWANCE.

Fort St. George, May 12, 1848.—1. The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to direct the publication, for the information and guidance of all departments and officers concerned, of the following extracts from a letter from the Hon. the Court of Directors, dated Feb. 23, 1848:—

"The deductions required to be made by the royal warrant of May 30, 1832, from the pay of infantry officers of H. M.'s service on passage, when they receive passage allowance, or are provided with a table and accommodation on board ship, free of charge, to themselves, are only applicable to passages from this country to India, Ceylon, the Mauritius, and the Cape of Good Hope, and from those places to this country. You will therefore rescind the rule which was adopted at your Presidency subjecting officers to a deduction under that warrant, when on passage between India and the eastern settlements.

"It is most important that one uniform system should prevail at the several Presidencies respecting passage allowances and the contribution by officers in aid of their mess during the voyage. It is also necessary that the Queen's and Company's Regulations upon these points should have distinct operation, and that they should not be, as we fear they sometimes are, mixed up together in the settlement of passage claims."

"If, for instance, the issue of passage money or the hiring of conveyance for officers and soldiers originate with Her Majesty's authorities in the Colonies or elsewhere, the final adjustment of the accounts or claims should be governed wholly by the Queen's Regulations, and, in case of any dispute arising, reference should be made for our instructions upon the point at issue."

2. The rules contained in Para. 8, under the head of passage money, Section 14th, page 255 of the code of Pay and Audit Regulations, are hereby cancelled, and the following rule is established instead.

8. The sum of 5*l.*, or Co.'s Rs. 48 15-8, is deducted, for the period of his voyage to, or from, Europe, from each officer of H. M.'s infantry to whom passage-money is allowed, or for whom a passage is provided at the public expense. When proceeding to Europe, unless he receives an advance of pay in India, the deduction is to stand over, and a notice to that effect to be inserted in the last pay certificate given on embarkation, that the recovery may be made from the arrears of pay issued on arrival in England.

OFF-RECKONINGS.

Fort St. George, May 16, 1848.—In consequence of the demise of Col. (lieut.-gen.) C. T. G. Bishop, of the Inf., the following addition to the list of officers entitled to off-reckonings is authorised.

Lieut.-Col. Com. C. D. Dunn, to half a share from the Off-Reckoning Fund, from May 12, 1848.

MONEY MARKET.

We have no change of consequence to report in our money market, but the tendency is towards a supply of means adequate for commercial purposes, with scarcely any fluctuation. Madras Bank shares are quite unsettled, attributable to the low rate of interest declared for the half year ending 30th June last, being only 5 per cent. per annum.

FREIGHTS.

Freights are rather unsteady as there are many vessels in the roads wanting employment, and the quantity of produce going forward not being large we cannot notice any improvement. Quotations are—to London, £3 5s. to £3 10s. per cwt.; to Liverpool, uncertain.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SMALL CAUSES.—The Court has made the following rule respecting the trial of small causes:—Vacation after first term.—29th May, 1848.—Whereas doubts have arisen whether the rules made for the trial of causes to a small amount in the Supreme Court are valid, on the ground, as respects the trial of causes at law, that such rules do not require the clerk of small causes to be an attorney.

And whereas in point of fact the office for the last twenty-five years has been held by an attorney or a barrister-at-law, and it is expedient that in time to come the office should always be held by a member of the legal profession; It is ordered as follows:

1. The clerk of the small causes shall always be a barrister-at-law or an attorney.

2. The Court will sit on Thursday in every week for the trial of small causes at law where the debt or damages claimed do not exceed Rs. 600.

3. The clerk of the small causes shall file the plaint and pleadings of record in all such causes as heretofore, and the Court will proceed to hear the same according to the provisions pointed out by the charter of justice for the trial of causes at law.

CONVICTS TO SINGAPORE.—A letter from one of the European convicts, per Prince Albert, from this to Singapore, speaks in high terms of the kind and humane treatment of the commander, Capt. G. S. Thompson, towards the prisoners, and suggests that if more attention was paid to cleanliness and ventilation on board convict vessels, we should not so often hear of the brutal conduct of convicts, or so great a proportion of casualties among them. Out of 83 prisoners who were on board the Prince Albert, during a voyage of 42 days, not one man landed in a state of sickness. There were on board, likewise, a guard numbering 23 and a native crew. The sailors' cook died of small pox, and it is supposed Capt. Thompson's attention to ventilation and purification alone prevented the spread of that disease.

THE BOMBAY OPIUM CASES seem to have been finally decided by a verdict for the plaintiff, Ram Lal, in twenty-six cases, the average being settled at Rs. 1,793 5-11.

EXPORTATION OF WHEAT TO ENGLAND.—We find, from the Gentleman's Gazette, that the Bombay Government, at the suggestion of the collector of customs, and gentlemen connected with the export trade of that Presidency, have come to a determination to ship a quantity of wheat from that port to England, with the object of knowing how far such a speculation may be profitable.

ST. THOMAS'S CATHEDRAL.—From the Bombay Telegraph and Courier we learn that the munificent donation of a communion service for St. Thomas's Cathedral has been received from Miss F. West, the only surviving daughter of the late Sir Edward West, chief justice of Bombay. The service consists of one gold chalice, two gold patens, one gold offertory dish, and four silver collecting plates.

The gale in the harbour yesterday put an almost total stop to intercourse with the shipping, and where communication was attempted, it was at the risk of the lives of those who went aboard. An accident, we regret to say, is reported to have occurred, in which four persons out of five, who were in a dinghey, met with a watery grave. We are not in possession of particulars, but may be enabled to give them to-morrow.—Telegraph and Courier, June 20.

JAVA.

The influence of the revolutions in Europe has been felt even in the islands of the Indian Ocean. Java, or more strictly speaking, the city of Batavia, excited by the news from Holland, has begun to feel and express a wish for equal privileges with their more fortunate countrymen at home. Among our European extracts will be found an account of the constitution of Holland, according to the late decrees, and the reader will not fail to perceive that one important particular in it is the neglect of the colonies, which are handed over, almost without check of any kind, to the absolute dominion of the crown, very much against the wishes of the colonists themselves. Actuated by these feelings, the Dutch residents in Batavia called a meeting to moot certain questions relative to a petition which they desired to present to their sovereign on the following subjects:—first, the establishment of a free press; secondly, the right to send representatives to the Dutch parliament; and thirdly, the abolition of the custom of nominating the covenanted servants from those only who had been educated in Holland.

As the public assemblies are illegal in Netherlands' India, without the consent of the authorities, the permission of the governor, Rochussen, was first to be obtained. It was granted in a courteous and moderate note; and the meeting was convened for the 22nd May. In the interim, the governor appears to have repented of his concession, and ordered half a battalion of infantry, and a squadron of cavalry to hold themselves in readiness, and turned the artillery so as to command the Harmony, the place appointed for the meeting. Still he did not venture to forbid it, and on the appointed day it took place, when about two hundred and eighteen of the residents of Batavia were present. Every part of the affair was conducted with the elaborate precision peculiar to the Dutch, and votes were received to decide the election of the chairman. The lot fell on Dr. Van Hoevell, minister at Batavia, who accordingly addressed the assembly; but to the disappointment of most, and the surprise of all, adverted only to the third ground of complaint, read the petition and dismissed the meeting without the slightest disturbance. The petition was signed by those present, at their own dwellings, and another was afterwards got up, in which were embodied the remaining two prominent grievances. The ludicrous part of the whole affair was the trepidation of the Governor-General, who sat the whole time in his palace, listening to the cheers and acclamations of the meeting, and trembling lest an émeute should occur, although he was surrounded by his soldiers and officers, and had a park of artillery at his disposal sufficient to have knocked all Batavia to pieces.

The narrative of the meeting demonstrates two facts of some importance; the little likelihood of the Batavians obtaining their wishes, and the great impulse which the democratic spirit has received in so distant a quarter of the globe from the European revolutions. Here was a governor with a disposable force more than equal to every emergency, composed of horse, foot, and artillery, yet alarmed at the bare probability of a small section of the citizens taking the law into their own hands, and seizing their privileges. In one respect, however, his trepidation can excite little wonder. He knew the same popular assembly, notwithstanding its great disparity of numbers, to have been victorious in Paris, victorious in Holland, victorious in Germany, and he dreaded the event, which would have cost him dear, either from the enraged people or his own sovereign.

The objects of colonists are the same in all countries,—equal participation with the mother-country in all rights and privileges, is the sum total of the whole. But independently of the two objects of a free press, and a share in the national representation, the Dutch at Batavia are anxious to break down the barrier which separates the uncovenanted from the covenanted service. It appears that the Dutch, born and educated in Java, are eligible for admission to all uncovenanted offices, but that all aspirants to the dignity of the privileged service, must go through a course of study at Delft. They complain that the great expense of an education at that college places it in a great measure beyond their reach, and they feel, that after having incurred the expense, they cannot be certain of promotion, for out of several hundreds who study there—the institution being open to all—but twenty are chosen annually to the Java civil service, and of course they incur the great risk of disappointment from the constant competition of talent.—Friend of India.

CHINA.

CHIEF JUSTICE HOLME arrived from England on the 16th June, much to the gratification of the inhabitants of Victoria. In the evening most of the houses in the business part of the town were illuminated.

THE TARIFF.—The Friend of China complains of infractions of the treaty of Nankin, through the corruption and venality of the Chinese officials.

THE BRITISH CONSUL AT SHANGHAI has issued a strong notification concerning the conduct of some British residents in joining a party of foreigners in an excursion into the interior, as a direct and flagrant violation of the treaty. The Friend of China, says, "The French consul, the English Consul, and Captain Pitman of H. M. brig Chidders, visited the hills distant forty-six miles from the city, having received special permission from the magistrates; they were absent a day and a half. After their return, a second party was formed and an excursion made as far as Soo-chow; the time occupied was three days and a half. A third party was absent a week; a fourth party was reported to have gone to visit Hang-chow. With the exception of the three officials who visited the hills, none of these excursions were sanctioned by the authorities, and it is a matter of regret that the boundary should have been crossed at a time when it is most desirable that we should not in any degree encroach upon the established regulations. The gentlemen who visited Soo-chow were fortunate in not being maltreated; the news of their arrival spread like wildfire, and thousands were congregating to look at them; they hastened from the town, taking the precaution of returning by another path."

LITERARY & SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

Mr. Oxley, surgeon at Penang, has given, in the Journal of the Indian Archipelago, a history of the curious substance known as gutta percha, which is already applied to so many useful purposes in the arts.

Although the trees yielding this substance abound in the indigenous forests of the Straits and the Malay countries, it is only four or five years ago that it became known to Europeans. In the beginning of 1843, Dr. W. Montgomerie, in a letter to the Bengal Medical Board, recommended the substance as useful for some surgical purposes, and Dr. D'Almeida brought a specimen to Europe, which he presented to the Royal Society of Arts. Both these gentlemen were led to the discovery by meeting with some whips made of this substance by the Malays.

The tree which produces the gutta percha, or gutta tuban as it should be called,—the percha producing a spurious article,—belongs to the natural family of the Sapoteæ, but differs so much from all described genera as to deserve to rank as a new genus. The tree is of a large size, sixty to seventy feet high, and from two to three feet in diameter. Only a short time ago, the tree was tolerably abundant in Singapore, but all the large timber on the island has been felled. The range of its growth is considerable, it being found all up the Malayan peninsula as far as Penang, where it is abundant. The tree is also found in Borneo. The localities it prefers are the alluvial tracts along the foot of hills, where it flourishes luxuriantly, forming, in many spots, the principal portion of the jungle.

The present mode of collecting the substance by the Malays and Chinese is most improvident, and, if persevered in, will soon render it a scarce article. It is by cutting down the trees of full growth, and ringing the bark at distances of from twelve to eighteen inches apart, and placing a coco-nut shell, spathe of a palm, or similar receptacle, under the trunk, to receive the milky sap that exudes upon each fresh incision. This sap is collected in bamboos, taken to their houses, boiled, and inspissated.

When quite pure, the colour is of a greyish white; but, when brought to market, it is ordinarily of a reddish hue, arising from chips of the bark which fall into the sap when exuding from the incisions. Besides these accidental, there are intentional, adulterations, by sawdust and other matters. It is, however, easy to detect these sophistications, and clean the gutta; it is only necessary to boil it in water until well softened, and roll the substance into thin sheets, when the impurities may be easily picked out.

The quantity of solid gutta obtained from each tree varies from five to twenty cattles (65 lbs. to 260 lbs.); so that, upon an average, for every cwt. of the substance, a tree is sacrificed. The quantity of gutta percha exported from Singapore in the years 1845-47 amounted to 6,918 peculs, to obtain which it is calculated by Mr. Oxley that 69,180 trees must have been destroyed. There seems to be no reason why tapping should not be adopted, as in procuring the caoutchouc.

Capt. A. Cunningham, in an account of a journey through Kulu and Lahul, to the Chu Mureri lake, in Ladak (which appears in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal), gives the following description of the Nomad Tartars, called Kampas, or Champas, who appear to be a happy race, moving about from place to place, living in black hair tents:—"The men usually wear woollen great coats reaching below the knee. As they are never washed, but often darned and patched, these great coats are mostly rather tattered-looking garments of many colours. They wear leggings also, generally of thick coloured woollen, which is put round the leg like a bandage and secured by a long garter, usually of black woollen rope, which is wound spirally round the leg from the ankle to the knee. Their short boots are made of goatskin or sheepskin, with the hair or wool turned inwards, and well stuffed with wool, which, while it makes them warm to the wearer, gives rather a clumsy appearance to his feet. The cap is generally a piece of goatskin with the hair inwards, or else a woollen one edged with skin or coarse red silk. The women go bareheaded, but they wear lappets round the cheeks, and over the forehead, from which a broad band, well studded with large, flat, badly-flawed turquoises and cornelians, passed over the head, gradually narrowing until it reaches the waist behind. The hair is dressed in numerous thin plaits, which hang behind and over the shoulders, forming a complete fringe, or rather a sort of well-greased mane to the head and neck. They frequently wear long great coats and leggings like the men; but I have seen them also dressed in three or four thick woollen petticoats, and a sheepskin jacket with the wool turned inwards over the coat. The men also wear these sheepskin jackets when they feel cold; and their tents are well supplied with them, as both sexes put them on when they go to rest. The men are generally from 5 feet to 5½ in height, and the women from 4½ to 5 feet. Yet they are hardy and even strong. I have often seen the roof of my tent, which was wradded with cotton, carried throughout a whole march by one of these diminutive women; although the taller and finer-looking men of Simla declared it to be too heavy for one of them to carry. These Nomads are generally of a deep brown complexion; the girls are, however, rather fairer, and some of them have colour in their cheeks. They all have the small eyes of the Tartar races, and, to use the words of an old traveller, they are 'a square, stout, strong people, having platter faces and flat noses.' Their ears are particularly large, and many of them wear earrings. Both men and women carry about them all their property excepting some wooden pails for milk and the few large iron pans which they have for cooking their food. Knives and spoons, pipes and tobacco-pouches, flint and steel, and a small cup, either of iron, brass, or wood, are carried by every one. These are usually crammed inside the great coat above the waist, where also may be found a long piece of woollen rope for fastening packages, and occasionally a single or double flagolet, either of wood or brass. Their cattle consist of herds of yaks, or grunting oxen, with the long bushy tails, and droves of sheep and goats. The hair of the yaks is cut every summer, and woven into the coarse cloth of which they make their tents. During the winter they live in the valley of the Indus; in the summer they move to any places where they can find grass, water, and fuel. They exchange their wool with the traders for wheat, flour, tobacco, and any thing else that they may require."

The following vivid and appalling description of the great cataclysm of the Indus, in 1842, is reported by Capt. J. Abbott, from the lips of an intelligent zemindar, an eye-witness:—"In the month of Poos (Dec.) the Indus was very low. In Mang and Phagoon (Jan. and Feb.) it was so low as to be fordable (an unprecedented phenomenon). In Chait it continued very low, but not fordable. In Bysakh (April) the same. About the middle of Jayt (May) 1st, 1842, the atmosphere was one day observed to be very thick, the air still. At about 2 p.m. a murmuring sound was heard from the north-east amongst the mountains, which increased until it attracted universal attention, and we began to exclaim 'what is this murmur? Is it the sound of cannon in the distance? Is Gundgurh* bellowing? Is it thunder?' Suddenly some one cried out, the 'Rivers come!' And I looked and perceived that all the dry channels were already filled, and that the river was racing down furiously in an absolute wall of mud, for it had not at all the colour or appearance of water. They who saw it in time easily escaped. They who did not, were inevitably lost. It was a horrible mess of foul water, carcasses of soldiers, peasants, war-steeds, camels, prostitutes, tents, mules, asses, trees, and household furniture, in short, every item of existence jumbled together in one flood of ruin. For Raja Goolab Singh's army was encamped in the bed of the Indus at Koolaye, 3 koss above Torbaila, in check of Poynda Khan. Part of the force was at that moment in hot pursuit, or the ruin would have been wider. The rest ran, some to large trees, which were all soon uprooted and borne away, others to rocks, which were speedily buried beneath the waters. Only they escaped who took at once to the mountain side. About 500 of these troops were at once swept to destruction. The mischief was immense. Hundreds of acres of arable land were licked up and carried away by the waters. The whole of the seesoo trees which adorned the river's banks; the famous burc-gutt tree, of many stems, time out of mind, the chosen bivouac of travellers, were all lost in an instant. The men in the trees, the horses and mules tethered to the stems, all sunk alike into the gulf, and disappeared for ever. As a woman with a wet towel sweeps away a legion of ants, so the river blotted out the army of the Raja. There were two villages upon an island opposite Ghazi. One of the inhabitants was returning from Srikote, and descending the mountain. When he came within sight of the spot where he had left all he held dear, he naturally looked with affection towards his home. Nothing was visible but a wide rushing sea of mud. His house, his friends, his household, his village, the very island itself, had disappeared. He rubbed his eyes in mortal terror, distrusting his sight, hoping it was a dream. But it was a too horrible reality. He alone, of all that busy hive of moving, struggling, hoping, fearing beings, was left upon the earth."

* Gundgurh is a singular ridge of argillaceous schist, permeated with veins of mica and of sulphate of lime, forming a wall about 1,500 feet high, almost parallel to the stream of the Indus, on the eastern bank. In its cavern Raja Russaloo (the king Arthur of the Punjab) imprisoned the last of the Rakhus, or giant race, having slain the others. He hung up his bow at the mouth of the cavern, so that whenever the huge monster attempted to escape, this memento of his terrible victor sent him back roaring with terror to his den. Many natives assured me, that twenty years ago they have often heard Gundgurh bellowing, but that the sounds have ceased since then. The mountain has no volcanic rocks or lavas; yet the admission of sound by this mountain is too well attested to admit of doubt.

So far the zemindar, and to this eloquent description of an eye-witness I need only add, that it will take hundreds, if not thousands, of years to enable time to repair with its healing hand the mischief of that terrible hour. The revenue of Torbaila has in consequence dwindled from 20,000 to 5,000 rupees. Chuch has been sown with barren sand. The timber for which the Indus had been celebrated from the days of Alexander until this disaster, are now so utterly gone, that I vainly strove throughout Huzara to procure a seesoo tree for the repair of the field artillery carriages. To make some poor amends, the river sprinkled gold dust over the barren soil, so that the washings for several successive years were farmed at four times their ordinary rent. It is generally believed that the accumulation of the waters of the Indus was occasioned by a landlip, which blocked up the valley.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, August 22, 1848.

No question appears to be easier of solution than this,—What should be done where a country, of limited extent, possessing colonies which are under-peopled, is itself over-peopled, its labourers languishing for employment whilst its dependencies are craving for labourers? The obvious answer is, balance the wants, by removing the superabundant population from idleness and starvation in one place to occupation and plenty in another, and thus the mother-country will be relieved, her colonies recruited, and the condition of her industrial classes ameliorated. Migration and colonization are the means whereby the human family has been diffused over the face of the earth which they were commanded to replenish; and so far from a country like this, with a colonial empire of almost boundless dimensions, deploring as a curse the increase of its population at home in a greater ratio than the means of employment and subsistence, it should regard it as a blessing, as a fruitful source of political strength, commercial prosperity, and social happiness. England has already, like the peepul tree, whilst its giant trunk is fixed in Europe, connected itself, by its branches, with Asia, Africa, and America, and if its population be allowed freely to expand, the language and the institutions of this country will, in time, predominate throughout the world.

The remedy for what is considered the evil of over-population being then so obvious, why has it not been successfully applied in this country? The answer is, that its insular position and the remoteness of its colonies render it indispensable that emigration from one to the other should be systematic. Labour, like ordinary commodities of traffic, is obedient to the reciprocal action of demand and supply; but its transport is not regulated by the same laws. A cargo of emigrants cannot be packed, shipped, landed, and warehoused like a cargo of gruff goods. It is owing to the want of a proper scheme or system of emigration that the mother-country and her colonies have hitherto not been adequately relieved, in their several exigencies, by the efflux and influx of labour.

One of the earliest of our systems of emigration consisted in the clearing of parishes and the emptying of workhouses of the idle, the dissolute, and even the infirm, who were as great an incumbrance to the colonies as to the mother-country. Where the emigrants were better selected, they did not migrate voluntarily, or they were not of a class suited to the peculiar wants of the colony to which they were sent, or they were disgorged at once in numbers beyond its capacity immediately to absorb,—the unemployed being, meanwhile, left in a state of utter destitution, venting complaints which reverberated home, and created a prejudice against emigration which has not yet subsided. Under more favourable auspices, there has been an absence of attention to the comforts of the emigrants, and, above all, the motive power of labour, capital, has not accompanied the supply.

These are some of the causes which have impeded the beneficial action of emigration, more especially from England to her Australian colonies; but they are impediments which, being the result of negligence or cupidity, may be readily removed. They prove not that emigration is an evil or a nostrum, but that, in order to become a good, it must be judiciously and systematically conducted.

The first reflection upon this state of things suggests that an operation which is of national concern, and involves the interests of masses of the community at home and abroad, should be managed by the immediate agency of the Government; and, but for two considerations, we should deem this an indispensable condition. A scheme for promoting the voluntary transport of indigent emigrants from home to the colonies partakes, in some degree, of a commercial character, involving details of profit and loss, which is neither politic nor very practicable for a Government to deal with; and secondly, it requires the advance of funds, which our Government, at this moment, would be unwilling, perhaps unable, to provide. All that the Government can do, therefore, is to undertake the general superintendence and encouragement of emigration, and that is now done by the instrumentality of the Emigration Board, who have funds at their disposal derived from the sale and rents of crown lands in the colonies applicable to the assistance of needy emigrants. The scheme must, consequently, be carried into execution by private means, either by a joint-stock company, or by a body of philanthropists, or by a society which combines both characters. In the hands of the first-named, the project, if it did not degenerate into a kind of slave-trade, would assuredly fail through the impossibility of realising from such a source a sufficient profit to attract capital; and pure philanthropy would neither collect the resources nor conciliate the confidence necessary to carry on such a work. There remains the third method, by which a machinery constructed upon commercial or economical principles might be set in motion by a philanthropic power.

A Society, recently formed, "for the promotion of colonization," appears to be of this character, and to offer many promising features, and although we are aware, from many unsuccessful experiments, how uncertain is the action of such bodies, the urgency of the object, and the necessity of relieving this country of a population which has outgrown the means of present employment, and is moreover increasing at the rate of 1,000 per day,—the unemployed being mostly untaught, and ignorance and idleness being the parents of vice,—induce us to regard it with favour and with hope. This Society provides for the transport of capital conjointly with labour, and selects the labourers; it proposes to aid and regulate the emigration to the British colonies of persons in all ranks and conditions of life, who may be divided into two classes,—those possessed of capital, and who are anxious to invest it profitably; and those whose labour is their capital, and who are unable to ensure regular work in this country. For the former class, the Society will collect information by means of its branch societies; for the second, it proposes to extend the advantages of emigration to a larger number of the working classes than can be now benefited by the funds in the hands of the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners. The cost of emigration is to be defrayed out of the following resources, in addition to the allowances made by the Commissioners: Sums advanced by parishes, landlords, or others; sums remitted from the colonies; the private funds of the emigrants, and the funds of the Society, derived from subscriptions and donations. Such emigrants as cannot pay their passage, and who shall be approved by the Society and the Commissioners, will have the amount advanced upon their promissory notes at sight, which will be exchanged for others in the colony payable at a certain time out of their wages.

The scheme of this Society is undoubtedly at present somewhat rude, and the recovery of the money advanced will be attended with difficulties and losses; but the great obstacles which have prevented many of the benefits of emigration will, with a moderate degree of judgment, care, and activity, be under its control; and if the emigrants be properly selected, and the numbers carefully regulated, the redundant industry of this country, accompanied by capital, may flow in equal and moderate streams to all our colonial possessions, relieving the labour market here, establishing new hives of industry abroad, and laying the foundation of new communities in remote regions that shall add to the stability, the power, the wealth, and the greatness of Britain.

SOME discussion having arisen as to the terms of the guarantee which the East-India Company are willing to afford to the East-Indian Railway Company, and as to the effect of such guarantee upon the interests of the proprietors of the latter Company, it may be desirable to state precisely the nature and chief conditions of the proposal, so far as the guarantee is concerned. The East-India Company undertake, provided a certain amount of capital be paid up within a specified time, to allow and secure interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum upon such amount for the period of twenty-five years, unless the engagement shall be determined before the expiration of that period under contingencies specially provided for; all profits arising from working the several portions of the line as they shall be completed to be applied towards the payment of the guaranteed interest, and if the profits shall exceed five per cent., half the excess to be paid to the East-India Company, until the sums they may have advanced under guarantee shall be reimbursed, the remaining half to be at the disposal of the Railway Company. The contingencies above referred to are as follow:—If the Railway Company shall fail to complete the construction of the sections once commenced, or to maintain them when completed, or to open the lines selected within a period to be agreed upon between the Government of India, under the advice of their engineers, and the Railway Company, or to use such lines when opened by the passage each way of at least one train daily—in each and all of the above cases of failure, the guarantee is to cease and determine.

The Times of yesterday correctly stated: "We are glad to understand that the deposit of 60,000*l.* required by the East-India Company from the East-Indian Railway Company, preparatory to a final settlement of the terms upon which that undertaking is to be carried out, was fully completed on Saturday morning."

MISCELLANEOUS.

D. O. DYCE SOMBRE, Esq.—A petition was presented in the Chancery Court, on the 9th inst., on behalf of this gentleman, with a view of superseding the commission of lunacy issued against him some years back. After a discussion between the Lord Chancellor and the various counsel engaged, his lordship made an order to the effect that Mr. Dyce Sombre, who is now at Paris, should present himself some time in the month of October in the neighbourhood of London, to be examined by two doctors appointed by the Lord Chancellor, such examination to be conducted in the presence of two other doctors respectively appointed by Mr. and Mrs. Dyce Sombre.

DIVIDEND.—A first dividend of 17 per cent. has been declared on the estate of Messrs. H. M. Low and W. M. Westerman of Calcutta.

CEYLON RAILWAY.—The adjourned meeting of this company was held on the 1st instant, but in consequence of there not being a sufficient number of shareholders present, no business was transacted.

THE "BLENHEIM," a fine vessel, built for the East-India trade, has been recently launched from the dockyard of Messrs. T. and W. Smith, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. She is timbered and fastened in all respects similar to her Majesty's first-class frigates, and is equal to a complement of forty-eight broadside (32-pounders) guns, besides stern and bow chasers, her dimensions are: length 205 feet, breadth 42 feet, height between decks 7 feet 2 inches, burthen 1,489 tons.

LITERARY NOTICES.

The Journal of the Indian Archipelago and Eastern Asia. Singapore.

We hail with much pleasure the appearance of this work. The Straits settlements and the adjoining archipelago afford a vast field of original research in numerous branches of knowledge, especially the different departments of natural history, geography, philology, and the study of the human race, of which this part of Asia presents so many curious varieties. If we add the immense commercial resources which exist in the natural productions of those countries, the materials for such a publication are abundant, and the few numbers which have reached us shew that able and industrious writers are not wanting to take advantage of them.

The work (of which a number is published monthly) is intended to be a vehicle for communicating papers of value, original and translated from the Dutch, and to be "a focus in which the observations of English and American residents in Java, Bali, Borneo, the Philippines, Siam, &c. may be concentrated;" whilst the British settlements in the Straits of Malacca, and the Malayan Peninsula, and even Cochin China, will be laid under contribution. The papers will embrace the history, language, literature, and ethnography of the various races inhabiting this great region, as well as natural history and physical science, and economical, commercial, and miscellaneous subjects.

Amongst the papers contained in the early numbers of the Journal are copious statistical and ethnographical details respecting the Indian Archipelago and Cochin China; accounts of the Binnu of Johore and other native races; a treatise upon the laws of Eastern Asia; and the history of that singular and useful product of these parts, the gutta serena. These articles are diversified by a few specimens of Malay poetry.

H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS,
&c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavour to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the utmost despatch will be used in the shipments from London.

H. and T. PEAT feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are not of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior qualities. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12 lb. saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9 lbs., at present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. P. cannot be accountable for any damage the same may receive after shipment.

HOSIERY and OUTFITTING WAREHOUSE, 146,
Strand, near Somerset House.—Mrs. WHITE begs most respectfully to recommend to her friends (more particularly those resident in India) her most beautiful make of Lisle Thread Hose and Half Hose for Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear; their lightness, durability, and comfort can only be appreciated by those who have tried them. She also strongly recommends a beautiful description of Merino Vest and Drawers adapted for the East and West Indies.

Mrs. W. takes this opportunity to thank her friends and the public for the liberal support she has received for the last six years, and begs to assure them that as she devotes the whole of her time and attention to her business, that the best attention will be paid to all orders she may be favoured with for either ladies or gentlemen, enclosing an order for payment on a bank or any house of known responsibility in London, will meet with immediate attention.

SUMMARY OF THE PROSPECTUS.

The principal features and conditions of this undertaking are as follow:—
The Company will be incorporated by Royal Charter or Act of Parliament, and the Hon. the East-India Company guarantee 5 per cent. as a minimum dividend for 25 years, besides making a free grant of all lands necessary for the railway and works.

The shares will be limited to £5 each, and be applied to the section from Bombay to Callian. The calls will extend over three years, and not exceed 10s. at any one time, and the 5 per cent. will commence at once, and be payable half-yearly upon the calls as respectively made. If the whole sum be paid at once, full interest will be allowed. Where the shares are fully paid up, interest coupons will be attached, payable to bearer; and in every case the utmost facility will be given in the payment of dividends.

In the event of any obstacle to prevent the constitution of the Company, the deposit-moneys will be returned to the contributors, the interest being estimated as sufficient to cover current expenses.

The caution-money (£30,000) has already been duly lodged with the East-India Company, and interest is meanwhile accruing upon the same.

The line commences at the port of Bombay, where there is a population of 300,000 inhabitants, and proceeds 35 miles towards the producing districts of the interior, by Tannah to Callian—places of considerable population and resort, on the route of one of the greatest channels of traffic in India.

The gradients being for 8 miles level, and the remaining 27 miles averaging only 1 in 1,205, the cost of construction and expense of working will be necessarily light.

The original scrip shares already issued, upon which 5s. per share has been paid, will be consolidated into shares of £5, and rank as wholly paid-up shares entitled to full dividend. Or such scrip shares may be commuted, and credit given for the 5s. already paid, provided that these alternative options be declared in writing on or before the 31st August ensuing. If not so declared by the time stated, the option will cease, and the shares become absolutely forfeited.

The quantity of merchandise-traffic on the route of this railway is ascertained from official data to be at the present time 182,000 tons per annum, conveyed at a charge of from 4d. to 6d. per ton, and which at 3d. per ton per mile would give a receipt of £45 per mile per week, or £82,000 per annum, exclusive of passenger-traffic.

Besides the certainty of a good return for the capital invested, this undertaking recommends itself as a scheme of the highest national importance. The following brief extracts from papers just laid before Parliament may serve to show this judgment authoritatively:—

"The great desideratum which prevents the infinitely greater development of the resources of India, is the great want of speedy, cheap, and convenient transport to and from shipping ports. The constitution of railways will alone obviate the present incalculable disadvantages under which India is paralysed by the obstruction to speedy and cheap transport."—Report of the Board of Trade to the House of Commons, 1848, p. 254.

"The consequence of this deficiency (of railways) is severely felt, and traffic is conducted at an enormous cost of money, labour, and time. It is impossible to urge too strongly upon all who are in any way interested in Indian affairs, the necessity of special and early attention to this important subject."—Report of Committee of the House of Commons on the Growth of Cotton in India, 1848.

Applications for shares to be forwarded to the Company's offices, 3, New Broad Street, London; to Messrs. Simon and Son, brokers, 7, Warrford Court, London; to Messrs. Hoyle and Co., Bank Street, Manchester; Mr. T. Fonyth, Liverpool; Messrs. Beardsaw and Co., Park Lane, Leeds; Mr. J. Watson, 33, St. Vincent Place, Glasgow; Messrs. Pillans and Home, Edinburgh; or Mr. C. Stevenson, Derby.

No. 3, New Broad Street, London, July 28, 1848.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOU ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c.—They furnish equal pressure in every part, are perfectly porous, and draw on without lacing. Many have attempted to imitate them, by introduction of an article so full of serious defects, as to render this caution to the public necessary. H. and Co.'s Surgical Stockings, &c. are patronised by all the first surgeons in the kingdom.

HUXLEY and Co., 5, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

BEDFORD and RAND, Saddlers and Harness Makers, of 898, Oxford Street, London, take this opportunity to return their grateful acknowledgments for the distinguished patronage which they have enjoyed for so many years, and hope by strict attention to all orders entrusted to them to be honoured with a continuance of the same.

M. and R. request that when an order is not sent through an agent it may be accompanied by a credit upon some house in London, and the name of the party to whom the goods are to be consigned should always be given, in order to prevent delay in shipment.

B. and R. beg to recommend to the notice of Officers of Cavalry Regiments their new Regulation Saddles, as made for the Hon. East-India Company, and which have been so highly approved of; also their new Lady's Saddle, which allows a Saddle to be made longer or shorter at pleasure, and the position of the seat to be changed.

PHANTASMAGORIA.

CARPENTER & WESTLEY'S PHANTASMAGORIA

LANTERN has been so much improved, and is used with such increased facility, that it may be recommended with the greatest confidence, as being the best that is made, giving a perfectly-defined figure, with a brilliant and well-illuminated field of view, from 6 to 14 feet in diameter. Combined with the copper-plate sliders, it presents a novel and delightful mode of instruction and amusement. The Natural History and Astronomical Diagrams are painted in the very best style, and can be depended upon for accuracy and fidelity, and, with the Dissolving Views, are extremely popular.

A WONDERFUL CURE of WOUNDS, and a DEBILITATED CONSTITUTION RENOVATED, by HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—Mr. Mote, storekeeper of Gundagai, New South Wales, states that these medicines have effected a most astonishing cure on a settler in his vicinity, who was dreadfully afflicted with wounds in various parts of his body; his constitution was so debilitated that his death was considered certain; but the application of Holloway's Ointment and Pills has performed wonders, for the young man has been completely cured, and so extraordinary is the case that the editor of the "Sydney Morning Herald" has given publicity to it in his paper of Jan. 4, 1848. Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's Establishment, 244, Strand, London, and by all European and native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

MOURNING, COURT, FAMILY, AND COMPLIMENTARY.

THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or to the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

WORTHY OF PUBLIC ATTENTION!!!

CHAPMAN'S UNIVERSAL PILLS, a combination of the most approved virtues of the Vegetable Kingdom, blended together in such due and just proportions as to form an article which, they confidently venture to affirm, will be found superior to any thing of the kind hitherto made known; they contain not a particle of Mercury, or any other pernicious ingredients, but act almost imperceptibly, but none the less surely, as a gentle purifier of the blood and invigorator of the system. Their private use has been for many years co-extensive with that of the Universal Salve, to which they will be found most valuable agents.

The Proprietors might say much in their favour, and would enlarge upon their merits, were they not so anxious that they should stand upon their own, and not have the appearance of being (as is too commonly the case) puffed into notice. They will, therefore, content themselves by saying that, in all cases of Bilious Attacks, Indigestion, Constipation of the Bowels, Sick Head-ache, frequent Nausea, Chronic Rheumatism, Lumbago, violent Cold or Cough, Jaundice, and in short all Internal Diseases, their aid will be found to be invaluable. Sold in boxes, 1s. 4d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each. Wholesale Depot, 5, Swallow Place, Regent Street.

Be particular in asking for CHAPMAN'S UNIVERSAL PILLS. Agents:—Messrs. HANWAY and Co.; SANGER and Co., Oxford Street; and by most of the respectable Chemists in the United Kingdom.

LADIES TRAVELLING, or otherwise exposed to the scorching rays of the sun and heated particles of dust, will find ROWLANDS' KALYDOR a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity of the Skin. The numerous varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions, Sunburn, Freckles, Tan, and Discolorations, are pleasingly eradicated by the Kalydor, and the Skin rendered delicately soft and clear. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by the Queen, the Court and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and the several Courts of Europe; together with the "élite" of the Aristocracy, from the sultry climes of India and the drawing-rooms of Calcutta and Madras to the frozen realms of the Czar and the saloons of St. Petersburg and Moscow.—Price 4s. 6d. and 6s. 6d. per bottle.

Beware of spurious "Kalydors," containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and which, by their repellent action, endanger health.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL.—The unprecedented success of this discovery in restoring, improving, and beautifying the human Hair, is too well known and appreciated to need comment. The especial patronage of the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and of every Court of the civilised world; and the high esteem in which it is universally held, together with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits.—Price 3s. 6d., 7s.; family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, a white Powder compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the Oriental Herbal, of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the Teeth, strengthening the Gums, and in rendering the Breath sweet and pure. Its truly efficient and fragrant aromatic properties have obtained its selection by the Queen, the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

BEWARE OF SPURIOUS IMITATIONS—some are offered under the assumed sanction of Royalty and the Government Departments, with similar attempts at deception. The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS" preading that of the article on the wrapper or label. Sold by them at 26, Hatton Garden, London, and by all Chemists and Perfumers.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

ALTHOUGH the short interval of a week only has elapsed since the issue of the last Mail, our present intelligence places Mooltan affairs in a very different and a more satisfactory light. Two victories obtained over the forces of Moolraj, commanded on the last occasion by himself, appear, by their moral effect more than by the actual loss inflicted upon the enemy, to have virtually decided his fate, and, according to the latest accounts, the ex-Dewan had offered to surrender on the mere assurance of personal safety, of which the extremity of his condition seems to have justified the refusal, and he was told that he must expect no terms whatever, but surrender unconditionally.

The more detailed reports brought by this mail enable us to give a connected and exact narrative of the operations of the British and native commanders, which have brought this affair to so speedy an issue, and apparently disappointed the hopes of those who indulged the expectation of a campaign upon the banks of the Indus.

It appears that the forces of the Khan of Bhawalpore, about 6,000 horse and foot, with nine guns, under Futteh Mahomed, Ghoree, crossed the river at the Bukree ferry on the 30th May, and were followed by another body, commanded by Peer Ibrahim Khan, on the 1st June, both divisions having reached Jellalpoore on the 3rd. Meanwhile, about 700 cavalry and infantry in the service of Moolraj, on their retreat from Dera Ghazee Khan, which had been taken by the allies, attacked the village of Allespore Kulwan, and there encountered a small party of fifty Bhawalpore sowars, under Syud Deen Mahomed Shah, who had been sent to take charge of the village, and overpowered them, the Syud and his sons being slain. This was the incident which native rumours magnified into a defeat of the Khan's army. As the Bhawalpore Daoodputras moved up, the troops of Lieutenant Edwardes and Colonel Cortlandt crossed the Indus, with the view of joining them; the former officer having left a detachment of 300 horse and foot at Dhera Ghazee Khan, and also the Katar Mohie regiment, just arrived from Bunnoo. The British forces passed the river on the 10th and 11th June, and the Mooltan chief very judiciously determined, if possible, to prevent their junction with the Bhawalpore army. He accordingly passed the Chenab on the 14th, leaving a strong detachment on the other bank, which marched to Khan Ghur, but crossed the following day, in consequence of the advance of our force, Lieutenant Edwardes having, with the mounted portion, reached Khan Ghur the very day the Mooltaneees quitted it. On the 16th he was joined by the guns and infantry under Colonel Cortlandt, their camp being pitched about a mile from the Chenab, the enemy being encamped on the opposite side. In the meantime, the Bhawalpore troops had arrived within twelve miles of the enemy, and Lieut. Edwardes being unable to procure boats to cross the river, on the bank along which those troops were marching, retrograded to Gadsawallah, opposite to which place the Bhawalpore were encamped, about three miles from the ghat; and in the night he managed to pass about 3,000 of his new levies, who joined the Khan's camp, the enemy having encamped at Begunarah, only four miles distant. Early on the 18th of June, Lieutenant Edwardes crossed, with the remainder of his force (one account says in a boat, alone), leaving the horses and guns to follow, and had scarcely landed, when the enemy, who had marched from Bugurarah, opened upon him, and pressed so heavily against his raw levies, that, until the arrival of Colonel Cortlandt with the guns, and the Bhawalpore troops, the contest is said to have been at one time doubtful. The enemy had 8,000 men and ten guns; on our side, the numbers were, in all, 9,000, and eleven guns. The general action, which commenced soon after sunrise, lasted until two P.M. about nine hours, when the enemy, finding that the right of the Khan of Bhawalpore's force had fallen back, made a desperate onset upon Lieutenant Edwardes, whose guns had not yet come up, and whose position was one of some danger. At this critical moment, two of Colonel Cortlandt's regiments, with two guns, arrived, followed by four more; the Mooltanees were treated with a plentiful shower of grape and canister, and our regiments behaving bravely, under the resolute conduct of Lieutenant Edwardes, the enemy fled, leaving six guns, their baggage and stores, and were pursued for several miles, suffering a heavy loss; ours not exceeding in the whole 300.

The action, which took place five miles from Secjabad, is described as a well-contested one, the Mooltanees Sikhs having fought desperately. Several times during the day it was a hand-to-hand fight. The victory is mainly ascribed to the courage and conduct of Lieutenant Edwardes, who seems to have been excited by a recollection of the day, the anniversary of the Battle of Waterloo, to heroism. Writing an account of the affair, he observes that "no Englishman could be beaten on the 18th of June." He was always in advance, and had a narrow escape, a ball having passed through his sleeve under the arm.

The defeated army fell back upon the capital, where the Lahore gooroo, Maharaj Sing (who turns out to have been took to Bheer Sing, the gooroo who revolted from Heera Sing), having escaped drowning, perhaps to meet with a drier fate, had arrived, and supported the failing spirits of the insurgents by his holy succour and consolation, exhorting them to courage and confidence by the assurance that a happy immortality awaited all who fell in the cause.

The allies, who had received on the 20th the voluntary cession of the towns of Secjabad and Kote, on the 22nd were again in motion, and on the 26th reached the fort of Secunderabad, which surrendered upon a demonstration, the garrison coming out and craving for mercy. The forces resumed their march, and, on the 28th, Shaikh Emaum-ood-deen, the leader in the Cashmere insurrection (who had received a free pardon), joined Lieutenant Edwardes with 4,000 men. Lieutenant Lake also arrived and took charge of the Bhawalpore troops.

Moolraj, in the extremity of his affairs, found that the bitter animosity between his Sikh and Mahomedan subjects, and the insolence of the former towards the latter, rendered it indispensable that he should separate these two constituent parts of his army, and he dismissed the Mahomedans, most of whom, it is said, joined the advancing forces. The Dewan, seeing dangers surrounding him, determined to negotiate, and offered (as we before stated) to surrender person and possessions on condition that his life was spared. He was informed, with ominous brevity, that his surrender must be unconditional. He now summoned his councillors, bewailed his forlorn condition, and implored his few remaining friends to perform his funeral rites by anticipation. The Sikh gooroo, however, seems to have inspired him with more resolution; he likewise stimulated the religious fervour of the troops, and strove to revive their courage, by declaring that the 1st of July was a mohoorat, or day propitious to the Khalsa cause. Moolraj and his army, thus roused, determined to make another, a last and desperate, effort. A body of 6,000 men marched out of the fort and established themselves behind a strong breastwork. On the fatal day, the 1st of July, the allied forces made their appearance, about 18,000 in number, consisting of the troops under Lieutenant Edwardes and Colonel Cortlandt, the Cashmere Sikhs, under Emaum-ood-deen, and the Bhawalporeans, directed by Lieutenant Lake. Another general action took place, of great severity, near the village of Sadoosam, which lasted six hours. The insurgents, estimated at between 10,000 and 15,000, commanded by Moolraj in person, on an elephant, were beaten at all points, and the action ended under the walls of Mooltan, which is probably in our possession. The details of this last action are not given. A cannon-shot struck the howdah of Moolraj, who was knocked out, and mounting a horse, he fled with his discomfited army into the town. A letter from Lahore, dated 6th July, published in the Delhi Gazette's Overland Summary, says,—"The loss on Moolraj's side was not ascertained, but is considerable; on ours Captain Macpherson, for many years in the service of Bahawal Khan, was killed; eighteen besides, and about seventy wounded; two guns fell into our hands. The moral effect of this affair is so great, that numbers of Moolraj's followers left his camp for their homes. The enemy has shut himself up in the fort, and ere this I fancy the town of Mooltan is invested."

Thus has probably terminated the Mooltan campaign, which was to have called for a powerful British force of 30,000 men, under the Commander-in-Chief, but has, by the prompt energy of a spirited young subaltern (a cadet of 1840), been won with a body of raw native troops.

All remained quiet at Lahore. The Delhi Gazette states that the amount of property found at Lahore and Umritser, appertaining to Dewan Moolraj, and confiscated to the use of the State, consisted of Rs. 4,500, and a large quantity of lead, found at the capital, of Rs. 6,40,000, found with the gomastah at Umritser, and of Rs. 31,000 with some 2,000 golden ducats, in charge of various bankers at Umritser. Orders were issued on the 30th of June to certain corps, to hold themselves in readiness to proceed towards Mooltan, provided the Commander-in-Chief should sanction the move. The exiled Maharanee, still, it is said, banking after political intrigue, has been informed that, should she be again detected corresponding with any one in the Punjab, she will be sent to Chunar and there kept a close prisoner for life.

Letters had been received at Lahore from Lieut. Taylor, in Bunnoo, stating that every thing was going on well with him. He was busily engaged in raising a considerable body of Pathans, and providing against any possible contingency, by laying in stores for his new fort as fast as possible. News of the successes of Lieut. Edwardes had reached Bunnoo and Peshawur, and considerably strengthened the hands of the British officers in both these districts.

From Peshawur, the western Sikh capital, gratifying reports had been received of the tranquillity of the intervening country.

In Scinde, from whence the accounts reach to the 8th of July, the troops were in perfect health, and the country was perfectly quiet.

"Tranquillity prevails everywhere," says the Bombay Times, "and is not likely to be disturbed. That it can be in the slightest manner affected by the outbreak at Mooltan, is an utter impossibility. The frontier is under too able management for any one to have the least fear for it; and were an émoussé to occur, the overwhelming force in the country could not fail to crush it in the bud. As for internal disturbances, there is nothing to fear throughout the length and breadth of the land. One of the measures of Sir C. Napier's administration was that of disarming the population; not only as turning the minds of men towards useful and industrious habits, but as effectually securing the peace of the province at a time like the present. The consequence is, travelling is as safe as in any part of England, and life and property enjoy a security known in few parts of India."

The letters from Cabul state that an expedition, which had been ordered out by Dost Mahomed Khan against Mahomed Shah Khan, Ghilzie, had returned, the chief having made his submission. Fighting was still going on at Candahar between the Barukzye brothers.

A serious disturbance is said to have occurred at Khetree, in Rajpootana, a place taken by Major Forster some four years ago. It appears that Ram Nath, Perohit, sent about 200 men to surprise the place, but they were detected by the Ranaot's party, when a fight ensued, and more than 150 of them fell on the occasion; among the rest the Ranaot (the mother of the Rajah) was also killed.

At Hyderabad matters still go wrong; the minister is said to be in disgrace, but he sticks to his post. The Nizam held a durbar, to which Colonel Low, the resident, went, accompanied by Suraj-ool-Moolk; the Resident had a long audience with his Highness, but the minister was refused admittance! Other indignities have been offered, and submitted to with wonderful meekness, as the means of retaining place. Some change is expected upon the return of General Fraser from Calcutta, where he conferred with the Governor-General, and it is to be hoped that the Nizam's state will soon be placed under some wholesome control.

The domestic intelligence from the Presidencies is scanty. At Calcutta the weather had been very unusual for the season; scarcely any rain had fallen in that neighbourhood, while in other parts of the country the fall had been so heavy that the rivers had risen as high as they usually are at the end of August. Planters complained of the loss of much indigo upon the low grounds, but the fine weather was expected to abundantly compensate this deficiency, and the produce of the season is calculated as likely to reach, if not to exceed, the average.

The monsoon had diffused a dulness over Bombay, where fifty inches of rain had fallen—within fifteen inches of an average monsoon—and not half the season over.

The trade reports by this Mail, though not satisfactory, are not upon the whole more unfavourable than those which have lately preceded them. At Calcutta, there was little movement in either exports or imports, but the money-market seemed to be improving, and government securities maintained their value. At Bombay, likewise, transactions in the produce and import markets are limited (which is usual at this period of the year), but money was, in the phraseology of the Exchange, "easy."

BENGAL.

MOVEMENTS OF LIEUT. EDWARDES.

The following extract from a letter gives details of the proceedings of Lieut. Edwardes and its coadjutors:—

"LAHORE, 29th June.—Resuming my account of our doings in the Mooltan country from the date of Captain Edwardes crossing the Indus with his forces on the 10th and 11th instant, having left at Dera Gaze Khan two guns, 300 horse and foot, and also the Katar Mohie regiment, just arrived from Bunnoo. On the 14th the enemy crossed the Chenab, with the exception of about 1,000 men and two guns, which at first halted at Khan Ghur, but made the passage next day on seeing our onward movement. On the 15th Captain Edwardes and the mounted branch of our forces reached Khan Gur; also, on the following day, the guns and infantry under General Cortlandt joined him there. Their camp was pitched about half a koss from the Chenab, the enemy being encamped on the opposite side, but were expected to steal off during the night. Our force would cross as soon as the boats could be collected, for the purpose of joining Bhawal Khan's troops, who were within six koss of the enemy. The great point was to effect this junction before any attack should be made upon them, and much anxiety was consequently felt at the want of means to get across. However, finding that all the boats at Khan Ghur were in the possession of the enemy, our force marched down twelve koss to Gungawallah, opposite to which Bhawal Khan's force was encamped, about three miles from the Ghaut, and here there were some forty-five boats found available. At midnight we managed to cross some 3,000 of the new levies, who joined Bhawal Khan by early dawn. The enemy were now encamped at Bugurarah, some four koss from the Ghat, and two koss from the Nawab's force. Thus stood affairs till about half-past six A.M. on the 18th, when Captain Edwardes himself crossed. He had scarcely landed when the enemy, who had marched from Bugurarah (seeing Bhawal Khan's force on the move) opened on them with their great guns, which they returned, but were pressed so heavily that their 'right' was obliged to fall back. On their 'left' Captain Edwardes had posted himself with the new levies, who were all dismounted, sufficient boats not being at hand to cross the horses. With this handful of men (most of them boys), without cavalry and without guns, Captain Edwardes bravely held his position, and without yielding an inch. The enemy had ten guns, four regiments of infantry, and a large body of cavalry, in all about 8,000 men, while, on the other side, Bhawal Khan's force consisted of eleven guns, two regiments of infantry and cavalry, amounting nearly to 9,000. The action, which commenced soon after sunrise, raged incessantly till about two P.M., when the enemy, finding that Bhawal Khan had fallen back on the right, made a desperate attack on Captain Edwardes with the whole of their force, whose position was now one of imminent danger, his guns not having yet arrived, and only one or two of the Nawab's at this time were firing. Now turned the fortune of the day; for, at this critical moment, two of General Cortlandt's regiments, with two guns, arrived, speedily followed by four more, which did good service. The regiments behaved bravely, and the guns, with grape and canister, poured destruction on our foe, and, in fact, their timely assistance decided the action in our favour. We took six guns at the point of the bayonet; and followed the enemy several koss. Their loss must be very great; all their camp baggage and stores have fallen into our hands. Two guns they managed to carry off; the other two have not as yet been found, but are supposed to be secreted in a well or nullah. The remnant of their scattered force fled to Mooltan, which is only twenty miles distant. Our loss has been comparatively small, considering that the battle lasted from 7 A.M. till past 3 in the afternoon. Though Gen. Cortlandt and the men who were with him followed each other as fast as they could pour out of the boats, and literally running across the intervening space to join Capt. Edwardes, yet the two first regiments and guns may be said to have given the turn to the day and settled the affair; till these arrived the action was very severe and doubtful. Capt. E. worked hard, and was in advance of all, where, in fact, he had been the whole morning. He had rather a narrow escape, a ball having passed through his sleeve under the arm. The Sikhs fought desperately; they charged three times sword in hand. Our guns poured grape and canister on them, but it was a hand-to-hand fight several times during the day, and many were found amongst the dead who had received their death-blow by sword cuts. Thus ended the Waterloo of the Punjab, as it may well be called, being fought on the glorious anniversary, the 18th of June, and bringing (as in all probability it will) the Mooltan business to a close; certainly all idea of a campaign in the cold weather may now close 'in toto.' Moolraj is of course thoroughly disheartened. This force was hisself, he has more guns to be sure, but not any field pieces. Captain Edwardes and Colonel Oortlandt will push on to the very walls of Meekin, from whence they are not likely to move until the gates are opened for their ingress, and, by the time we join them, I hope to see Edwards a Major, and C. B. and Oortlandt a full General, in pay as well as names. I am sure they will deserve it. Lake and Lumsden have by this time joined them; and yesterday a medical officer, Mr. Cole, left Lahore by water for the same destination, &c. He is accompanied by an apothecary also, and is well-furnished with medical stores, &c."

AHMEDPUR, 13th June.—Accounts of an authentic nature have been received that the troops of the rebellious Dewan, who were at Koresheanwalla, opposite to the troops of Lieut. Edwardes, on the other side of the river, have, under orders from Moolraj, left that place and marched to Soojahad. On the 10th instant, Lieutenant Edwardes, with all his force, crossed the river, and entered Koresheanwalla, and by this time they will have arrived at Khanghur. The Nawab Sahib has issued orders to his officers to make a long march, and join their forces to those of Edwardes Sahib. When this junction shall have been effected, they together will pull up the very roots of the enemy's existence."

AHMEDPUR, 16th June, 1848.—"Several days since, Salla Dewee Sah, Salamut Rai, Lalla Kishan Chand, Peer Bux (Adaw-lutee), Munshie Futhih Mahommed, and Kadir Bukah Khan, represented to Dewan Moolraj the Rebellious, that no remedy remained but to fight the force of the Bawulpur Nawab, which, day by day, and march by march, were advancing nearer, before they could effect a junction with the troops of Captain Edwardes. and that it was to be hoped victory would be the result. They also said that no time was to be lost, as, when the Nawab's troops should join those of Edwardes Sahib, his forces would be more numerous as well as more powerful. The foolish Dewan gave his approbation to this advice, and immediately gave orders for the troops at Koresheanwallah and Ghurmaharaj, altogether 10,000 horse and foot, with eleven guns and forty zumbooraks, to proceed too Soojahad for the purpose of giving battle to the Nawab's troops. Moolraj's forces had arrived at a place named Kote Hassan Khan, two kos this side of Soojahad, where they have taken up a position on the banks of a nullah, and have thrown up breast-works, behind which they are in every way prepared for battle. The distance at present between the armies is but eight kos, so that one can now calculate by hours, instead of days, the time that they are likely to encounter each other. God grant that victory may be on the side of the Nawab, and that the enemy may be entirely defeated! Peer Ibrahim (agent at Bawulpoor) immediately wrote to Captain Edwardes to join him with his troops with all speed, and not to lose a moment. Muiz-ud-Deen has succeeded in joining the Nawab's forces near Soojahad, with 2,000 men. Nine bullocks laden with powder for the use of the armies were sent off. This day the Nawab, on hearing of the proximity of the armies to each other, became exceedingly anxious about it: he is sending off powder, lead, and troops also, to the other forces. It is most likely to-morrow or the day after a battle will be fought, at which time the Afghans in the service of the Nawab will have an opportunity of shewing their zeal for him, as they are anxious so to do."

[Translation of a Persian letter from Peer Ibrahim Khan, agent for the British Government at Bawulpoor, to Munshie Nirullah Shah of Ahmedpur.]

NOONABEE, June 18, 1848.—This day, in conformity with the request of Captain Edwardes, who was crossing the Chenab River with his forces, I marched with the whole of the Nawab's troops from Looree, where I was encamped, to this place, which is two kos from the former, and nearer to the Chenab, for the purpose of drawing off the attention of the enemy's force. I was joined by a few of the troops of Edwardes Sahib shortly after, on which the enemy, who were very near, commenced firing their guns. We arranged our ranks, and commenced firing also, but were so low that we could not make any impression on the enemy, or even see them; they being on a rising ground, and, at the same time, able to see us perfectly well. The battle commenced at eight o'clock in the morning, and two hours after, at which time we had sustained great loss both in men and horses, killed and wounded, Edwardes Sahib, with a regiment and six guns, effected a junction with us, and the cannonade was kept up on both sides for six hours longer. Muiz-ud-Deen Khan, Kardar of Khanpur, Captain Macferris (?) Sahib Bahadoor, Captain Jadaah Ram, Jemedar Surfuraz Khan, together with others of the Nawab's officers, were in such a state of trouble and confusion that I cannot write a proper description of. They were constantly boasting of their prowess, and what they would do, but you will soon hear from others of the state they were in. The Dadputrahs also, who were constantly bragging, did not join in the battle, but remained in their own places like so many rats. We were in this state, with no peace or quietness from the balls of the enemy, when Edwardes Sahib, with the Nawab's officers, made an attack on the enemy's forces, with whom they fought sword-to-sword and hand-to-hand, for near an hour; and altogether, after nine hours' hard fighting, the enemy retreated; leaving a great quantity of baggage, and the like, behind them, and six out of the nine guns which they had with them, in the hands of the furious heroes of this army. By the favour of Almighty God, I, together with the whole of my people, although we were in the battle, are all in safety. I never experienced such a time before, except at the battle in the Panjab.

AHMEDPUR, 19th June, 1848.—From accounts this day received of the battle, it appears that the Sikh troops (Dewan Moolraj's) shewed great bravery and valour, and for nine hours during which the action lasted, and for two hours of which a hand-to-hand fight was kept up, the ardour and spirit of the combatants flagged not for a moment. Captain Macferris (?), John Hall, Jemedar Surfuraz Khan, Muiz-ud-deen Khan, Abdool Khaleek Khan, Muiz-ud-deen Khan (Kitan), and other officers of the Nawab's army, performed such prodigies of valour, as brings to our recollection afresh the feats of Roostam of old. After some time, the enemy, seeing no remedy but retreat, retired in good order, and fighting for every inch of ground. Whenever the troops of the Nawab, or of Edwardes Sahib, charged them, they became dispirited and confused, and kept falling back. Six guns they left behind, and two others, which were drawn by horses, they endeavoured to carry off with them, but the artillerymen of the Nawab's and of Captain Edwardes' army directed their fire so well, that the carriage of one was shattered to atoms, and the gun fell to the ground; on which some of Edwardes' men made a rush and captured it; the remaining gun the enemy succeeded in taking with them. Some of the fugitives remained with Rang Ram at Soojahad; some returned, without any orders from him, to Moolraj; and others have dispersed themselves about the country. The victors remained the 18th and 19th in the field of battle, and on the 19th, Edwardes Sahib gave orders for the Nawab's officers to march on the 20th of June, and take up a position three kos on this side of Soojahad; and that he would join them two days after. In the heat of the fight, the magazine of Edwardes Sahib caught fire, and six of his men were blown into the air. Several of the Dadputrahs in the Nawab's service, and also the Belooches in Captain Edwardes's force, have been plundering the people of the country; in consequence of which the Sahib, as also the Nawab's officers, have issued a proclamation against it, under pain of most severe punishment: the stolen property has been returned to the rightful owners. Captain Edwardes Sahib ordered that the six guns captured from the enemy should be delivered over to the care of Courtland Sahib Bahadoor, but the Nawab's officers would not allow it to be done; and the Sahib has reported the circumstance both to the Resident at Lahore and to the Nawab. The number of killed and wounded in the late action is as follows, viz.:—Capt. Macferris' regiment, 24 killed and wounded; Capt. Jadar Ram's regiment, 12 killed; the troops of Muiz-ud-Deen, Kardar of Khanpur, 8 killed and 40 wounded; Sawars (Bazegaran), 2 killed and 22 wounded; Dadputrahs and other contingents, 20 killed and 40 wounded; a great number of horses and camels have also been killed and wounded; the loss of the enemy is said to be about 200 killed and 300 wounded. This day the Nawab Sahib sent off the army, 100 fine horses, 200 camels, 40 tents, and 15 maunds of sugar-candy, as a present to the army, and a gift of 500 rupees for the artillerymen; and arrangements for bringing the wounded to this place have been made. Lieutenant Edward Lake, agent from the Resident at Lahore, is on his way to Ahmedpur for the purpose of joining the army of the Nawab, a dawk has been laid for his use from Goorocanah to this, and two persons were sent off yesterday to conduct him here. I sent you, both yesterday and to day, the accounts of the battle by express dawk, and which I trust you will acknowledge the safe arrival of.

[From Noorullah Shah to Captain Neale.]

AHMEDPUR, 22nd June, 1848.—This day, at ten o'clock, an express arrived from the army, bringing intelligence that, after the victory had been gained, the victorious troops departed towards Kote Soojahad. On the second march the remainder of the force of Edwardes Sahib effected a junction, and at the same time a salute was fired to frighten the enemy. Near 3,000 of the rebel troops were in the town and fort of Soojahad, and on the appearance of the victorious army they evacuated it, and retreated towards Mooltan. After they had retreated, Rung Ram, who commanded at Soojabad, also evacuated it; leaving behind him some treasure, horses, camels, and other things. The soucars of the place came to the camp of the Nawab's army, bringing with them the keys of Soojabad, which the troops of the Nawab and Edwardes Sahib entered, without opposition, and a salute was fired to celebrate the event. This day, when the Nawab Sahib heard the good news, he became exceedingly delighted, and ordered a salute of forty guns to be fired in commemoration of the happy event. This news was sent off to the Resident at Lahore, and I also send you the good news of the occupation of Soojabad, for it is the gate of Mooltan. This day, also, 125 of those wounded in the battle arrived at Ahmedpur, together with the body of Keyat Mohammed Khan, the son of Abdool Karreem Khan (Khakane), who was killed in the action, and which was interred. It is said that the rebellious Dewan, with 8,000 men and ten guns, has come out of Mooltan to give battle to the Nawab's army.

AHMEDPUR, 23rd June, 1848.—I forward for your honour's information, the copy of a letter which I this day received from Peer Ibrahim Khan. From accounts received at the same time from the army, it appears that in the late action the enemy's troops lost 300 killed and 80 wounded; and of the troops of Edwardes Sahib, who, with him, joined the Nawab's force in the heat of the action, about 100 were killed and wounded. On the march of the forces to Soojabad, several Soucars of the place, together with Mohun Lall, came to the camp, and stated that the enemy's troops who were at Soojabad on the previous day had, at the request of Dewan Moolraj, returned to Mooltan. When the officers of the conquering army arrived near the fort, the Kiladar Kadir Bakh Khan came out with the keys; and soon afterwards the troops occupied the place, according to the orders of Edwardes Sahib and Peer Ibrahim Sahib. Jemadar Surfuraz Khan has been appointed commander of the place, and a great quantity of stores, &c. left in the fort by the enemy, has been given in charge to him. The defeated troops, on their arrival at Mooltan, related to Dewan Moolraj the account of the battle, at which he became astonished and dispirited. He said that he would fight another battle, and if he should not be victorious, that he would then retire with his troops in the fortress of Mooltan. Goolam Mustafa Khan said, that it would be more advisable to make peace, on which the Dewan answered, "The season of peace has long since passed; and even if such were to be the case, what hope is there of its being any good or benefit to me now?" This day the Nawab Sahib sent off 300 horse and 100 foot, newly raised, 100 camels laden with ammunition, and Rs. 18,000, for the use of his army. It is said that the force will remain for some days at Soojabad, until further orders are received from the Resident at Lahore.

[Translation of a letter from Peer Ibrahim Khan, Agent at Bawalpore, to Noorullah Shah.]

KOTE SOOJAABAD, 20th June, 1848.—This day, according to the orders of Captain Edwardes, I marched, accompanied by Jemadar Surfuraz Khan, and several Sowars, for this place. On the road we were met by several Soucars, who brought us the keys of the place; and on our arrival within a coss of the fort, the Kiladar Kadir Bakh Khan came out also, and conducted me there, and provided me with quarters in the residence of the late Mahommed Muzzuffer Khan. The people of this place have shewn obedience, and Jemadar Surfuraz Khan has been appointed to the command, and settlement of the place, until further orders are received from the Lahore Resident.

[From Nurullah Shah to Captain Neale at Shikarpur.]

AHMEDPUR, 25th June, 1848.—From accounts received from the army this day, it appears that Captain Edwardes and Peer Ibrahim are still at Kote Soojabad. The movements of the troops have been reported to the Resident at Lahore; and this day the Nawab received a letter from Captain Edwardes in which the Sahib states that the expenses for the troops are very heavy, and requesting a loan of 50,000 rupees until such time as treasure is received from Lahore; the Nawab, in conformity to Captain Edwardes's request, despatched the sum required. The Sahib has issued orders to the officers of the Nawab's army, to the effect that they are to march towards Mooltan in three or four days' time. The officers wrote to the Nawab respecting these orders issued to them by Edwardes Sahib, and the Nawab wrote back to say that they should attend to and obey any orders that might be issued to them by the Sahib, without referring the matter to himself at all. Three days since, the Bhaie Maharaj, who was defeated in the vicinity of Lahore by a British force, after losing all his baggage, and a great many of his followers drowned, arrived at Mooltan with 500 Sepoys. The rebellious Dewan caused a salute to be fired in honour of the event, and has given him quarters in his own private residence, and he goes every day to pay his respects to the Bhaie Maharaj. Between eight and 9,000 horse and foot have been sent to Soorjgund, which is three coss from Mooltan on the Soojabad road, under the orders of the Bhaie, several of whose followers and disciples arrive every day at Mooltan. Dewan Moolraj sometimes says that victory will be on his side this time, and, if not, he will retire into the fort with his troops. From Lahore I hear that Shaik Ali Hassan has been taken into service by the Resident, at 500 rupees salary per month, and has been ordered to join Edwardes Sahib as quick as possible. The Shaik was formerly in the service of Meer Ali Morad, and after that was employed at Mooltan, which latter place he had left before the breaking out of the rebellion in that province. It is said, also, that Boor Sing, with some thousands of troops, has left Lahore, for the purpose of joining Edwardes Sahib; and that Sirdar Shumseer Sing, with 2,000 men, has left Lahore, likewise for the purpose of rendering assistance to the Sahib. The wounded of the Nawab's army have been brought to this place, and each person has been paid at the rate of 20 rupees for each wound. The families of the killed have each received 100 rupees, and half-pay has also been conferred on them. The Nawab Sahib is as busy as ever in collecting lead and powder, and in enlisting fresh troops, both horse and foot.

[Translation of a letter from Noorullah Shah to Capt. Neale.]

AHMEDPUR, June 26.—From accounts received from the army, I hear that Dewan Moolraj has held a durbar, at which Goolam Mustafa Khan, Lalla Dewee Sah, Lalla Ranga Ram, Peer Bakh (Adawltee), Futteh Mahomed, Meer Moonshee, and others, were present. Moolraj said that nothing now remained but to fight, and that he did not wish to retire with the troops into the fort before he was obliged so to do; fearing that, from being shut up in the fortress, the troops might become discontented, and desirous of leaving his service; therefore that he would give battle to the enemy once more, either at Adeewallah or Soorjgundah; and then, if necessary, retire into the fort. Lalla Jowaher Mull and Dhonda Sing represented to the Dewan that it would be much better to discharge the whole of the Affghans in his service; for this reason, that they had sent their families to the Bawalpore territory, and for their sakes would not fight against the Bawalpore Nuwab, as they ought to do; and also that it was the Affghans who first, at the late action at Noonaree, retreated, and the Seiks of the force, seeing this, became dispirited, and without heart. Dhonda Singh, moreover, said that the Dewan must discharge all the Affghans and Musselmén in his service, otherwise that he and other Seiks would leave it. Lalla Ranga Ram and Deraee Sah said that it was all very true, for that they had lost all faith in Musselmén. The Dewan on this account sent for the Affghans, and told them that he did not require their services any longer, and that they must leave Mooltan. After this, Jemadar Mastan Khan, Jemadar Goolam Nubbee Khan, and other Affghans, left Mooltan, and have come to Soojabad, where they have been taken into pay by Edwardes Sahib. The day after all this, Dewan Moolraj sent a message, through Goolam Mustafa Khan, to Captain Edwardes, saying that he would come to him, provided the Sahib took oath that life and rank should be guaranteed, and a compact to that effect sent to him by Edwardes Sahib. On the 25th June, Goolam Mustafa Khan had an interview with Captain Edwardes and Peer Ibrahim Khan, and explained his business. Edwardes Sahib said that he would consult on the matter, and that an answer should be forwarded to the Dewan. On the 25th instant the army marched to Chouk, which is three coss from Soojabad; and 2,000 men, with ten Zumboorucks, were sent to Sikunderabad, which is six coss from Soojabad, both on the Mooltan road. The latter are sent to collect the revenue.

[Translation of a Letter from Moonshee Noorullah Shah to Captain Neale, at Shikarpur.]

AHMEDPUR, 27th June, 1847.—This day the victorious army will have marched for Sikunderabad, which is six coss from Soojabad, on the road to Mooltan. Peer Mahomed Khan, Atta Mahomed Khan, Shah Mahomed Khan, Deen Mahomed Khan, and Abdool Raheem Khan, who were in the service of Moolraj, came yesterday to Soojabad, and saw Capt. Edwardes and Peer Ibrahim Khan: the Sahib will, in all probability, take them into his own service. Goolam Mustafa Khan, who brought the message of the rebellious Dewan to Edwardes Sahib, was informed by the latter that the Dewan's life would not be spared; and, at the same time, advised Goolam Mustafa to leave the rebel's service. Goolam Mustafa said that now he had come to the Sahib, he was not desirous of returning to Mooltan: he had joined the conquering army. The poor Bhaie Maharaj has been preaching to and exhorting the Seiks in the Dewan's service not to turn back from the field of battle; for that to do in the cause they were engaged in would be a surety for their felicity and bliss in the world to come. Shaik Emaun-ood Deen, who arrived some days since at Millesee, is engaged arranging the affairs of that part of the country. Edwardes Sahib has despatched the Sowars, mounted on swift horses, with a message to the Shaik, requesting him to join him as quick as possible; he will no doubt effect a junction very soon. Edward Lake Sahib, Bahadoor, arrived here yesterday, and took up his quarters in the garden. Jemadar Ahmed Khan was sent by the Nawab to conduct the Sahib; and 125 rupees also were sent for the purpose of scattering among the people. Lalla Lall Chund after this was sent to inquire after the Sahib's health, and a present of 250 rupees, twenty plates of sweetmeats, and six baskets full of varieties, were sent for the Sahib's consumption, and which he graciously accepted. Kowajah Zain-ul-Abadeen was then sent to conduct the Sahib to the Nawab, and on his arrival near the kutcheree, Moonsee Chok Rai, Mahomed Kubeer, and Nawab Serwur Shah, came to the door to receive him; and when the Sahib came near to the musnud, the Nawab rose, advanced four steps to meet him, and seated him at his own side. After conversing on various subjects, the Sahib took his leave. The Nawab afterwards sent seven pieces of silk and a gold embroidered lungie to Lake Sahib; and this day he left to join the Nawab's army, as agent from the Resident at Lahore.—Bombay Telegraph.

Lieutenant H. B. Edwardes belongs to the 1st Bengal European Regiment; he is a cadet of 1840; his rank in the regiment is dated the 10th of November, 1843. He is first assistant to the Resident at Lahore.

LIST OF FAILURES IN CALCUTTA, DURING THE PAST YEAR, ALPHABETICALLY ARRANGED.

BIRLEY, CORRIE AND Co.—Their principal losses were from large purchases of bills drawn under London credits, which afterwards proved useless. Not a stain attaches to the name of any of the partners, but, on the contrary, a feeling of sorrow for their misfortunes.

CARR, TAGORE AND Co.—"Union Bank."

CHURCH, LAKE AND Co.—Brought down by the awful depreciation of India produce in the English markets. The only blame which can in any way be attached to them is over-speculating; nothing dishonourable has been alleged.

COCKERELL AND Co.—"Union Bank." At the same time it may be remarked that one of the partners in this firm wrote several years ago to the London house, that the concern here was rotten, and recommending its being closed, but this did not suit their purpose, as it now appears, by the statement of the affairs of Cockerell, Larpent and Co., of London, that they could not have gone on without the assistance of the house here in kite flying.

COLVILLE, GILMORE AND Co.—"Union Bank." Much of the injury in Calcutta was caused by the bills this firm sold under credits of Barclay Brothers, of London, who had good credit here, but it now appears without cause.

H. AND A. CROOKE AND Co.—Large sugar dealers, by the fall in which they have been ruined; no fault is, however, attributed to the partners.

EWING, AIRD AND ANDERSON.—A house doing a good steady business, but were completely ruined by the failure of Gower Nephews, of London, whose agents they were, for the purpose of drawing bills under credits for the supply of the Mauritius estates, which bills coming back caused their downfall.

B. T. FORD AND Co.—A young house, with quite sufficient capital for their trade, but unfortunately for themselves placing too much confidence in Rickards, Little and Co., to whom they shipped goods, and drew under credits; the goods were taken by the London house, but the bills were not paid.

HAWORTH, HARDMAN AND Co.—Ruined by the fall in sugars, coupled with bad bills purchased under London credits for remittances. At the meeting of their creditors unanimous sympathy was expressed towards them.

HICKEY, BAILEY AND Co.—Indigo and general brokers, "Union Bank." At the meeting of their creditors, severe strictures were passed as to the manner their accounts have been kept, and the unwillingness shewn by some of the partners to give any information to their creditors.

HUGHESBRO BROTHERS.—In consequence of the favourable accounts the principal partner in this firm heard of Messrs. Cockerell, Larpent and Co. of London, and finding on his return to Calcutta that bills under their credits were procurable at favourable rates, he was induced to enter into extensive exchange operations, which lost the house the confidence of their London friends, and ultimately proved their ruin. Some dissatisfaction was shewn by their creditors, on account of an apparent preference given to the representative of Messrs. Henderson and Co., of London.

LACKERSTEEN BROTHERS.—A house of undoubted capital, and brought down by several circumstances over which the most prudent could have had no control. Their creditors, one and all, expressed the greatest sympathy in their misfortunes.

LAKE, HAMMILL AND Co.—Brought down by the unprecedented fall in sugar and rice in the English markets, of which they were heavy shippers.

LIVINGSTON, STEARNS AND Co.—A house of long standing and respectability, ruined by the purchase of London credit bills, and serious fall in sugars, but nothing of "commercial immorality" was in any way alleged against them.

LYALL, MATHESON AND Co.—"Union Bank." However, their liabilities to that concern only came to about Rs. 80,000, not a large amount for a house of this standing; in other respects, their mercantile character remains unsullied.

OWEN, ALLENBUSH AND Co., agents for T. and H. Murray, to whose order they shipped considerable quantities of produce, and reimbursed themselves by drafts under credits, which, not being paid, caused their failure.

SAUNDERS, MAY, FORDYCE AND Co.—Men of capital, and highly respected, were agents for Reid, Irving and Co., under whose credits they drew for the supply of money to the Mauritius, and were consequently ruined. Every mercantile man in Calcutta will bear testimony to the unsullied character they ever have possessed, and do possess to this day.

SWARMAN, MULLENS AND Co., agents for Perkins, Schlusker, and Mullens, of London; brought down by their failure; the partners are highly respected, and not a breath of slander has been spoken against them.

SMITH, COWELL AND Co., agents for "Santipore Sugar Company," in which capacity they drew under credits from Messrs. Samuel Phillips, of London, and Murrays, of Liverpool, both of which houses having failed, they were made legally responsible for the drafts, and consequently obliged to give way. The partners here were men of capital, and lost their all by over-confidence in their London and Liverpool correspondents.

J. WERNHOLT AND Co.—Brought down by purchases of bills under London credits, and losses sustained in produce; nothing, however, against their character as mercantile men has ever been mentioned.—Calcutta Englishman, June 21

By which it appears that of the 88 majors in the cavalry and infantry regiments all are either in command of their regiments, on staff employ, or on leave, except 9, some of whom may be supposed lately to have returned from Europe, or to be in such states of transition as must exist in all large bodies of men constituted like the native army.

It is also worthy of notice that 48 other officers of a rank inferior to that of major were exercising separate commands on the date alluded to.—Delhi Gazette.

GOVERNMENT HOUSES AT CALCUTTA AND BARRACKPORE.

An announcement has just appeared in the papers that it has been resolved completely to re-furnish the two Government Houses, at an expense of two lakhs of rupees, and that the contract had been given to Messrs. Shearwood and Co. the "eminent" upholsterers of Calcutta. The intelligence has given rise to various conjectures. It might, we thought, after all, be only one of those periodical notices, which have been made during the last twenty years, within the first six months of every new reign, and which indicate rather the necessity than the probability of reform. Or, it was barely possible that the Court of Directors, moved, at length, by the representations which every traveller has given the world of the disgraceful appearance of the interior of those mansions in which their viceroy was lodged, had come to the determination of sanctioning the purchase of new furniture. Eight of the Directors have lived at this Presidency, and they must have some recollection of the state of dilapidation in which they saw the furniture, and they cannot be ignorant of the contrast it presents to their own well-decorated residences in Portland-place and Grosvenor-street, and the squares of London, or the Governor-General in Council might have resolved to order the long required reformation, of their own freewill and mere motion, trusting to that confidence which now subsists between Leadenhall-street and the Council Chamber in Calcutta, for a favourable consideration of this vast expenditure, in which case, we took it as a happy indication of the improbability of any Mooltan campaign next winter, or any Mooltan peerage. Unless some such resolution has been taken by the Government in India, we fear that this improvement in the movables of Government-house is not to be expected during the present charter. The Directors are very chary of any expenditure for mere shew or ornament; and although the despicable condition of the furniture in the Government-houses has been proclaimed in every country in Europe, we fear they are not likely to sanction so large an outlay. They may probably reason, that it has served the turn of no fewer than eight Governors General, from the days of Lord Minto to those of Lord Hardinge, and that, with a little patching, and some trifling additions, it may be made to last out the administration of our present chief. They may, moreover, be disposed to look into the great Record of the Indian Loans, and discover that they are twenty millions deeper in debt than they were when the furniture was originally purchased, and they will probably postpone the consideration of the matter till the struggle for a new lease of life comes on in Westminster, when they will have something more important to think of than tables and sofas.

But the fact cannot be controverted that the furniture of both houses is of the fashion which prevailed before the battle of Waterloo, and that it is mean and shabby in the extreme. Indeed, it would be difficult to discover a more striking contrast than that which exists between the magnitude of an empire, eighteen hundred miles long and thirteen hundred broad, and the furniture of the houses in which its rulers are lodged. Still it is not without points of peculiar interest. It is the relic of a former creation and may serve to shew us the state of the great art of upholstery in Calcutta at the beginning of the present century. But it is interesting, not only to the antiquarian, but also to the historian, who has thus presented to him memorials of the tenants who have consecutively occupied this viceregal caravansary. It is in Barrackpore-house more particularly that we are enabled thus to trace the successive bequests of our rulers. There may be seen, we believe, to this day, the "exercise-board" which Lord Minto brought for his grandchildren, and, till lately, there might be discovered in it the two holes for screwing down the chair on which Mr. John Elliot danced his children. To the same age belong the single wall-shades which still adorn the walls of one of the drawing-rooms, and which, however fashionable at the time, would not be tolerated now in the house of a second-class sectioner of the Home Office. That rickety and ill-favoured dining table, at which Lord Hardinge feasted Prince Waldemar, was introduced by Lady Hastings, when she swept through the rooms with two European pages sustaining her train, and was marshalled to dinner by a Baronet of the United Kingdom as Chamberlain of the Household. And thus might we go through the various apartments and point to one article of furniture after another as the contribution of the successive families which have inhabited it; chairs by Lady William Bentinck; sofas by Miss Eden; a carpet by Lord Ellenborough, all left with a feeling of warm benevolence for the benefit of successors, instead of being sent to the hammer with the Governor-General's carriages.—Friend of India, July 6.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF DELHI.

At a meeting of the Archæological Society of Delhi held on Monday, the 5th June, 1848:—

Present.—Sir Theophilus Metcalfe, Bart., president in the chair; Brigadier T. Palmer, vice-president; Henry Cope, Esq.; N. W. Elphinstone, 42nd N.L.I.; W. N. Lees, Esq., 42nd N.L.I.; J. I. Mainwaring, Esq., 42nd N.L.I.; Captain W. S. Monteath, major of brigade; and Major M. E. Loftie, 30th N.I., secretary.

The following donations were announced as having been received since the last meeting:—

From the Asiatic Society of Calcutta, No. 189 (for April, 1848) of their journal, two copies.

From the author, Memoir on the Delta of the Ganges and notes on the Geology of Southern India, by Lieutenant R. B. Smith, Bengal Engineers.

From the Madras Literary Society, No. 32 (Jan. to June, 1847) of their journal.

From Capt. A. Cunningham, Bengal Engineers, two copper coins of Kutluah Khan.

The receipt of the third number of "Picture Illustrations of Ancient Architecture in Hindustan," by Jas. Fergusson, Esq., was also announced.

The following papers were read:—

Some account of the rebellion of Saifu'd-din Muhammad Kutluah Khan, in the reign of Nasir-udeen Mahmud Ghori of Delhi, in A.D. 1255-1257, by Capt. Alexander Cunningham, Bengal Engineers.

Papers relating to the repairs of the Kutb Minar, near Delhi, effected in the year 1829, forwarded by J. Thornton, Esq., secretary to Government, North-Western Provinces.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ENGLISH MAIL of May 14th was delivered in Calcutta by Bombay express on the night of July 4, and the Procursor delivered her mails of the same date, on the evening of the 6th.

Messrs. BAGSHAW AND Co.—The affairs of this firm are in liquidation, the partnership between W. Clode Braddon, T. C. Cadogan, and James Church having been dissolved.

THE LATE MR. JOHN CURNIN.—We regret to hear of the sudden death of Mr. John Curnin, formerly assay master to the Calcutta Mint, who has left a widow and nine children. The circumstances under which Mr. Curnin was deprived of his lucrative employment, by the Court of Directors, for a reason which they now admit to have been insufficient, and the failure of the Bengal Government to follow the recommendation of the Court by providing him with employment, seem to have had something to do with the sudden attack of illness which caused his death. The unfortunate gentleman's decease took place the day before a meeting which had been called for the establishment of the Calcutta Reliance Assurance Company, an institution projected by Mr. Curnin. The meeting was held, and it is thought that the company will be established, in which case, we believe, the secretaryship will be given to Mr. Curnin's son.

THE COMMANDANT OF ARTILLERY, it is reported, together with his staff, will accompany the Governor-General to Simla.

THE CASE OF THE BOMBAY BANK has been decided against the shareholders of the Union Bank.

CAPT. MACGREGOR.—The Delhi Gazette has every reason to believe that circumstances have turned up to prevent the appointment of Capt. MacGregor to be London agent to the Agra Bank, and that this gentleman will on this account remain for some time longer in India.

A FINE DIVIDEND of 28 per cent. is payable on the estate of Mr. W. John Key at the office of the assignee of the insolvent court, Calcutta.

CAPT. C. E. BURTON, of the 40th B. N. I., has been transferred from the Kotah political agency as a personal assistant to the Governor-General's agent for the states of Rajpootana, his place being taken by the Honourable H. B. Doyereux, Bengal civil service.

Mr. Charles Hogg was re-elected to the Secretaryship of the Bank of Bengal on the 7th June.

SIR HERBERT MADDOCK, senior member of council, left Calcutta on a visit to Ceylon, per Haddington, on the morning of July 4.

A MILITARY CORRESPONDENT of the Englishman points out that though Canteens are the great cause of drunkenness in European regiments, there is another which he has noticed in stations where European Artillery are quartered, in which the violence offered by privates to their non-commissioned officers may and ought to cause less surprise, namely, there are men who for their sobriety and soldier-like habits are made corporals and sergeants, but who sell their liquor to those who have less self-control, taking from them on next pay-day cent. per cent.: the writer then asks, will not this produce in the one, if not a feeling of indignation, at least a degree of familiarity and want of respect, which may partly account for those acts of violence.

Dacca, June 29.—"This is dreadful weather for the blue, rain night and day for the last week or ten days; produce consequently low, twelve seers per vat, and the high land plant suffering greatly; I however anticipate a favourable outturn; Dacca district in general will do well this year; all the factories are hard at work."

THE GAZETTE OF JULY 7 contains two draft Acts—the first is entitled an Act to simplify indictments for forgery, the other an Act for avoiding wagers.

TWO SEROVS of the 50th N. I. who were among the conspirators at Lahore have been sentenced by Courts Martial to be hung.

THE EXAMINATION OF PLEADERS in the Sudder Court is fixed for the 25th September.

THE SERVICES OF LIEUT. D. VANREKEN, of the Artillery, revenue surveyor, which have been recently in request at Ajmeer and its neighbourhood, are, we are happy to learn, to be transferred to the Delhi district. He is to be engaged for the next two years in a minute examination and delineation of all the country immediately south of the town, besides other matters. What a glorious opportunity this would be for entering at the same time on the elaborate examination, so much required, of the ancient ruins in the vicinity of Delhi. Government, who afford pecuniary aid to the Asiatic Society to the extent of some Rs. 1,300 a month to assist in stuffing birds and beasts, and collecting a museum of economic geology, might surely devote some Rs. 600 or 700 a month in defraying the expense of such an archæological commission as we should like to see appointed aided by a first-rate draftsman; such a commission would, in conjunction with the proposed survey, leave nothing to be wished for, and produce a work becoming the British Government of India.—Delhi Gazette.

THE INDIGO MANUFACTURE AT KISHNAGHUR commenced at the latter end of June, the produce was good. The river Soane had risen for three days at the rate of three feet per diem.

THE RAINS set in in June, but in the latter end of the month suddenly ceased, and for eleven days up to the evening of the 7th July not a drop of rain fell. We had then a shower, and on Saturday another. During the night of that day we had one of those regular heavy and continued pourings down with calm, that indicated the return of the rains, which we trust will not again desert us as they did. We recollect no other instance of the kind.—Hurkaru.

THE OFFICIAL ASSIGNER'S OFFICE.—As some persons have expressed doubts as to the deficiency in the assignee's office, and have even gone so far as to say that it has been made good, we beg to refer them to the following official letter of a very recent date, by which they will see that dividends now payable are cut down more than half from this cause.

"Estate of Macleod, Fagan, and Co.

"Calcutta, 6th July, 1848.

"Sir,—I have received your letter of this date, sending a receipt for the second dividend due on a bill for 86½ 15s. 7½d. or Co's. Rs. 847-1-5, vis. Co's. Rs. 8-7-6. Had your receipt been presented before Mr. O'Dowda, the former assignee, became embarrassed, the amount would have been paid in full. You will now have to send your receipt for Co's. Rs. 3-4-5, being at the rate of 38½ per cent. on the above dividend; as the estate has only received from Mr. O'Dowda at that rate upon the bulk of the balances due by him to the different estates. The receipt and bill are returned.

"Yours faithfully,

Englishman, July, 10.

"J. GOSNOL, Assignee, &c."

THE RULE NISI to set aside the judgment for a scire facias against Mr. Willis, and other shareholders of the Union Bank, has been discharged. Nothing else of importance with regard to the Union Bank has transpired. The adjourned meeting that had been appointed for the 8th was postponed until the 15th July.

SALT IN THE N. W. PROVINCES.—After the 1st August no customs duty will be levied upon salt imported into the North-Western Provinces from any other provinces of Bengal.

A LETTER DATED BHANGULPORE, the 26th of June, states:—"The Ganges, including to-day's inundation, has risen to a fearful height; indeed, when I tell you that it is so high that the whole of the indigo plant on the alluvial deposit of last year's flood must be now quite under water, your own knowledge of such matters will enable you to judge of the destruction which must have taken place. Twenty-seven inches in one day is a trifle to the rise that has occurred, and all this before the end of June."

THE N. W. DAKHS.—The unusual stoppage of the N.W. daks has given rise to singular reports in the bazar—such as that the Sikhs had taken Delhi; or another, that Lahore was stormed and Sir Frederick Currie murdered.

THE RANKE left Saharanpore for Meerut on the 15th June.

E. I. U. S. CLUB.—The number of subscribers to the New East India United Service Club to be established in London is 2,085, or about a fourth of the whole number of officers and civilians in all the "services" of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS CONNECTED WITH THE PUNJAB.—The amount of property found at Lahore, and Umritsar, appertaining to Dewan Moolraj, and confiscated to the use of the state, is represented to have consisted of Rs. 4,500, and a large quantity of lead found at the capital, of Rs. 6,40,000 found with his Gomashta, at Umritsar, and of Rs. 31,000 with some 2,000 golden ducats in charge of various bankers at Umritsar.

According to a proclamation issued at Lahore, the Maharanee is not to be permitted to hold correspondence, either by word or letter, with any inhabitant of the Punjab. Should she, in spite of this order, be detected in treasonable communication with any one, and the same be proved, she will at once be sent to the fort of Chunar Kudda.—Delhi Gazette.

"CIVIL SERVICE ITEM."—Mr. Cartwright, it is said, will shortly proceed to the Hills or the Cape for sixteen months, —and during his absence Mr. Begbie will officiate in the Sudder at Agra. We believe it is not yet decided who will act for Mr. Begbie.—Mofussilite, June 27.

THE GOOROO, MAHARAJ SING.—As a good deal has been said of Maharaj Singh, a short account of him may be interesting to our readers. He is a Sikh, and was formerly the lagree or cook of Bhaie Bheer Singh, who, it may be remembered, was killed by the Sikh soldiery at what was at the time styled the battle of Nourungabad, nearly opposite Hurree-ke-puttan, during the administration of Rajah Heera Singh. Bheer Singh (of whom a further account may be found in Major Carmichael Smyth's recent account of the Punjab) had joined Uttur Singh Sindanwalah, on his return from our provinces, when he made an attempt to raise a disturbance. It was in this fight that Court's battalion got the soubriquet of "Gooroo-marks." When Bheer Singh was wounded he told his followers that his powers had descended on his servant (now become his disciple) Maharaj Singh, and bid them take him up and throw him into the Sutlej, which was accordingly done. Maharaj Singh was concerned in the Prema affair, since which he has been lying "perdu" skulking about the country. It is only since the Mooltan affair that he has again appeared. While near Deenanuggur he was joined by a party of Sikh horse, who had been disbanded some months ago by Maharajah Goolab Singh, and considerable numbers of Sikh villagers flocked around him. He appears to have been well supplied with provisions by the people wherever he moved. He gave out that, like our Saviour, he had the power of making a little food serve for large multitudes. To support his pretensions he became lavish of all he received, and thus secured a considerable amount of influence. All the vagabond fuqueers and some of the disbanded soldiery flocked to his standard. With money and time he might have become dangerous; therefore the authorities did well to lose no time in hunting him from his various haunts.—Delhi Gazette.

A SCHOOL has been set up at Rajshahi with the view of affording gratuitous instruction to seventy children in English and Bengalee. It has been chiefly promoted by Baboo Kishory Chund Mittra and Baboo Lokenath.

MEMOIR OF TIPPOO SULTAN.—Prince Gholam Mahomed will shortly present us with a memoir of his ancestor, Tippoo Sultan. As the prince must possess great facilities for such an undertaking, and has possibly a large collection of original documents in his possession, we hope we shall find it a valuable addition to our Indian histories.

HOOSHEERPOORE.—The "Gooroo," who was collecting a rabble near Deenanuggur, has given the troops that were sent after him the slip, and has gone to Mooltan or the jungles of Jum-moo. There is no other news. All this part of the country is perfectly quiet, and the rains have apparently set in.

A CASE has just been brought before the Supreme Court, in which the holders of a bill drawn by the unfortunate Major Pottinger, after the murder of Sir William Maenaghten, at Cabul, sought payment from Mr. Melville, the under secretary to Government, who had simply acknowledged to have seen it. The bill was drawn on Mr. George Russell Clerk, the Governor-General's agent in the Punjab. The claim was necessarily thrown out, as none but Mr. Clerk could be made responsible. This was evidently part of the sum of 144 lakhs of rupees which the British authorities at Cabul were constrained to pay to Akbar Khan and his associates for a safe conduct through the Khyber pass.—Friend of India.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S TOUR.—Adverting to the approaching departure of the Governor-General for the North Western Provinces, the Probhaker of the 22nd June has the following:—"It is a matter of great regret to us that no act of Lord Dalhousie since his arrival in this country does challenge a grateful recollection. Most of the regulations framed during his administration are hurtful to the people. We therefore beg respectfully to suggest that, if he is to visit the North Western Provinces, something be previously done which might be calculated to endear him to the people."

PESHAWUR.—Our Peshawur news-writer says the people of Gurree Lallabeg and Loharkee, having allowed some merchants to pass through the Khaibar pass at the request of the son of Meer Haidar Shah, residing near Lunkee Khana, the Afreedees were angered and stopped a convoy for which the Peshawur connections of the Meer had become security. A number of cattle having been carried off by the people of Zukhakhal the Muchneewallahs, to whom they belonged, pursued the robbers, attacked them, and killed three of their number. Khwaje Mahomed Khan, recently returned from Bunnoo, had been directed to return to that country at the head of small detachment of cavalry, and to march through the district of the Zergoon Khel, while his father, Sultan Mahomed Khan, was celebrating his marriage with the widow of Hajee Khan, Kakur.—Delhi Gazette, June 28.

JEREMIE'S OPIATE.—A death has just occurred from the use of Jeremie's opiate. A Mr. Oliver Brassy, living in one of the boarding establishments in Dhurrumtollah, was taken ill, and had recourse to this opiate for cure. He grew worse, however, shortly after having swallowed it, and became gradually so seriously affected, that it was considered necessary to send him to the native hospital. Here he died not long after his admission, and upon a post mortem examination, it was the opinion of the surgeon that the collection of too large a quantity of opium in the stomach had produced death. The coroner has ordered a warrant for the interment of the corpse.

DELHI.—In consequence of the Mooltan rebellion, tobacco, which is chiefly supplied to this part of the country from that province, has risen in price from six to ten rupees per maund. The members of the Archaeological Society of this place will be happy to learn that the Supreme Government of India have extended a considerable measure of patronage to their institution in the shape of a subscription for a large number of copies of the society's journal. We have no doubt this circumstance will have a material effect in stimulating the members and others to renewed exertions in the good cause. The party of the 2nd Grenadiers that accompanied the Maharanee from Umballah to Meerut, took Delhi on their way back, with the view of escorting some treasure to the N.W.

FIRE.—The new house of Mr. Charles Gubbins, magistrate and collector of Meerut, was found to be on fire about three o'clock in the afternoon of June 27. By the timely exertions of some of the clerks of the collector's office and of the bank the flames were got under, but a very large portion of the woodwork was destroyed. It was the opinion of several gentlemen who were on the spot before the fire was extinguished that it must have been the work of an incendiary, and that the house must have been set on fire in two or three places at once.

SIMLA, 30th June.—It is very probable the army head quarters will move from this soon, as the commissariat officer is said to be just now making arrangements about supplies, carriage, &c., but it is imagined the Commander-in-Chief will only proceed a short distance down country to meet the Governor-General. It is rumoured here that the Hill States have been or are to be again attached to the Government of the North-West Province and placed under Mr. Thomason.

NAINKE TAL, June 21.—There are between seventy and eighty visitors at the lake this year: twenty-three are ladies, and there are numerous children besides, with additions occasionally. The rainy season, we think, has proved most propitious, and the climate is allowed to be delightful. Dancing is all the fashion this year, and a bachelor's ball comes off on Friday, the 23rd instant.—Delhi Gazette.

ETAWAH.—Mr. Tyler, the commissioner of the district, has just arrived, having been ordered down "post haste" by the lieutenant governor at Agra, for the purpose of investigating certain doings of the late magistrate and collector (Mr. A., now on sick leave at the Cape,) that have been brought to light by Mr. C., the officer now acting for him. The weather is very hot at present, not having had any rain for the last fortnight or more.—Ibid.

LIEUT. CORFIELD, 47TH N.I., commanding a treasure party, arrived at Agra, from Mainpore, on the 23rd June.

SUICIDE AT AGRA.—A young man named Burton, an assistant in the Sudder Board's Office, shot himself with a double-barrelled fowling-piece, on the 17th of June. It transpired in the evidence taken at the inquest, that he had been observed to talk incoherently that morning, as he had been known to do on certain other occasions, when recovering from the effects of a prolonged indulgence in liquor. He had written that morning to the head of his office, requesting leave of absence for the day, and at about 1 P.M., taking care to send his servants out of the way, he sat himself down on a trunk, with his back against the wall, held the muzzle of the gun firmly to his mouth with his hands, and pushed the trigger with his toe. His death must have been instantaneous. The gun was heavily charged with large shot, the back of his skull was blown off, and such was the force of the charge that the cornice of the room, immediately over his head, was broken off, some of the shot lodging in the ceiling above. A verdict of "temporary insanity" was recorded. Mr. Denison, the joint magistrate, acted as coroner, and gave, I am told, great satisfaction to all by the manner in which he conducted the proceedings. I hear that the jury gave in a written expression of their gratification at the mode of investigation adopted in this case, it not having been always customary here to have a coroner's inquest sitting on the bodies of those who met with sudden deaths.—Delhi Gazette.

At Agra the weather has been intensely hot.

THE RANER arrived at Meerut on the 20th June, and departed thence on the morning of the 22nd.

JUBBULPORE, JUNE 22.—"A sharp shock from an earthquake was felt at this station yesterday morning at about five minutes to seven. It passed from west to east, and alarmed a good many of the residents who were in doors at the time; one friend, who was lying on a couch at the time, fancied some one was under it trying to lift him up; and another old gentleman who sits with a pillow behind him actually turned round to hit the person who he thought was pulling it away.—A very pretty little theatre has just been finished at this place, and opens for the first time on Monday evening next. Coal, and that of a very superior kind, can be obtained in any quantities a few miles from this merely for the digging, and will be of vast service when the rail runs through this to Bombay. I wonder some enterprising European does not start a bullock train from Allahabad or Mirzapore to Sangor. There is a fine pukka road all the way, and carts can travel all through the rains; the thing must pay, as the projector would get all the custom from Mhow, Indore, Jhansi, Sangor, Nowgong, Jubbulpore, Hossinghabad, Seonie, Nursingpoor, Nagpoor, and Kamptee. The Government are increasing the workshops at the School of Industry, and 400 people are employed at the manufacture of tents alone. I have been anxiously looking out for Mr. Ives' report of his experiments with the kyun solution for tents, but I have not yet had the pleasure of seeing it in your columns. The rain set in on the 25th of May, and we have had very heavy falls this last 4 days, which has made the weather very pleasant."

THE SANS SOUCI THEATRE is to be offered to public auction at an upset price of Rs. 32,000. It is singular to remark how uniformly unfortunate every effort has been to establish a theatre in Calcutta on a permanent basis. After the recapture of the town by Clive, the inhabitants built a theatre at the western corner of Writer's buildings, before they built a church; but it was burnt down. The same fate befel the Chowringhee theatre, and the Sans Souci is now offered for a sum which is, we believe, less than a third of what it must have cost.

A SEVERE SHOCK OF AN EARTHQUAKE was felt at Banda about a quarter to seven, A.M., of June 22. The bottles, tumblers, &c. danced about in good earnest for some seconds. It is understood some two or three houses tumbled down in the city. There had not been a good fall of rain: two or three storms and a sprinkling of rain sufficient to lay the dust, and no more. A shock of an earthquake was also felt at Nowgong on the morning of June 21. Its direction was from west to east.

MIRZAPORE.—On Saturday evening last the town of Mirzapore presented an unusually gay scene, it having been announced that two of its native residents, well known for their liberality and public spirit, were to be presented with kheluts and perwannahs in the great square of the cotwalee. Accordingly, about 6 o'clock nearly the whole of the European residents repaired to the spot, where seats were provided for them and many respectable natives under a handsome shahmiana, while the surrounding houses were covered from the roofs downwards by thousands anxious to witness the interesting ceremony. All being in readiness, the perwannahs were read, announcing the reason of the bestowal of the honours, and setting forth that the Right Honourable Lord Hardinge, late Governor-General of India, had, on a visit to the city of Mirzapore, been struck with the exceeding elegance of some of the public buildings, and, on inquiry, having found that they had been erected at the sole expense of private individuals, had determined that such a generous spirit should not go unrewarded, and consequently had ordered that Lulliman Moor, &c. &c., and Sri Mun Junghy Lal, at whose cost the said buildings had been respectively erected, should each be presented with a khelut, accompanied by a perwannah expressive of the gratification afforded to Government at witnessing such a noble display of liberality on the part of its native subjects. After the perwannahs had been read, C. R. Tulloh, Esq., the judge, at once invested the fortunate recipients with the kheluts, which consisted of handsomely wrought kinkhaub dresses and head-pieces, and Kashmiri shawls, making each of them a neat and appropriate speech, after which he explained to the surrounding native gentry that Government was always ready and willing to reward those who evinced that they had the interest of their country at heart, by displaying feelings of liberality and generosity like those had whose well-merited honours they had that day been called upon to witness. The meeting shortly after separated, and the crowd, which must have consisted of between 10,000 and 12,000 people, dispersed, evidently well pleased at the evening's tumasha.—Bengal Recorder, July 7.

LUKNOW, 10th June.—"As it is long since this Indian Gomorrah has attracted your attention, I send you these few lines, hoping you will not deny them a place in your valuable journal. Luknow abounds in people who claim alliance with some of the noblest families of the land and rejoice in the proud sobriquet of "Uhle Wassaeq." (Gentleman pensioners.) They live under the auspices of British guarantee, and the jurisdiction of the local authorities does not effectually extend to them. The only duty they have to perform, for the enormous pension they receive from the residency treasury, is to sign their pay-bill. Secure of impunity, corrupted by fortune and living in the midst of a confused multitude of women and parasites, they abandon themselves to the grossest pleasures of the Mehul. They set themselves up as little despots within the inaccessible walls of their palaces; and moved by their ungovernable passion oscillate between the two opposite extremes of the soft luxuries of an Asiatic seraglio and the hard-hearted cruelty of a barbarian. Reluctant as I am to descend to particulars, I must not let this occasion pass without making some direct allusion to these violators of the law of nature and humanity. A short time ago a cold-blooded murder was perpetrated in the palace of one of these rich pensioners not far from the residency. It appears that a silver silupchee or bowl belonging to the prince (for such is the pensioner, running up his genealogy to Nawab Saadut Khan) was stolen; a sorcerer was sent for to detect the thief, and the blood of an innocent youth was sacrificed to the superstitious credulity of this progeny of ancient heroes. To do him credit, however, I must say that he was not the wilful murderer of the man; but, as I have already said, his superstition, wealth and folly led him to the toleration of the deed. Another circumstance deserving the notice of authorities is the misconduct of the other sex of this race of noble progenitors. (The subject being of a delicate nature, I shall not give the details of the offence committed). The case of Rajmebul and other princesses, which lately agitated the court and the residency, and which I am sorry to say was hushed up without the offenders being made a severe example of legal correction, has been palpable enough to convince Col. Richmond of the disgraceful life they lead. The affair between Nuwab Mobaruk Mehul and Bundrussa is now before the resident, and we hope it will be determined in a manner as to prevent the recurrence of deeds of unblushing infamy now so generally committed under the British patronage. It is in the power of the resident, by mild persuasion and proper restraint, to give a new direction to the inclination of these rich inhabitants of the place, and open a new channel for the circulation of their wealth. What a blessing it would have been if, instead of erecting towering edifices in narrow streets, they were induced to turn their thoughts to making and clearing public roads, of which the city is much in want; if instead of supporting a pompous retinue they established schools for the education of their children and those of their indigent neighbours, to whom they are a perfect nuisance though capable of proving themselves father and patriot of their country. I could not avail myself of a better opportunity for the subject than the present, when Colonel Richmond, the friend of the poor, suffering plebeians, is the resident of the place. With regard to government I have very little to say. Things are evidently coming to a rapid crisis, unless the attention of the Governor-General be directed towards Lahore or some other more important points than Oude. The revenue has most awfully failed, and the minister justifies his conduct by a simple reference to the failure of his predecessor, Ameen-ood-Dowla. The resident is exerting all his power and influence to dislodge the eunuchs and musicians who have taken firm possession of the palace; and supported as they are by the influential natives in the residency, they look upon the grave remonstrances of the resident as mere empty threats held out with a view to intimidate the inexperienced king. Let Colonel R. institute a bold and strict inquiry as to who the man by the name of Purumsookh is, and whom he represents, who has taken the contract of the Elaqua Surdhpore (formerly leased to a favourite of Balkishoon, the Revenue Minister). The Elaqua has been given to Purumsookh in consideration of the annual rent of Rs. 6,890, and this fortunate lease has settled the several villages constituting the Elaqua to the under tenants, on the following jumma:—the village Surdhpore, Rs. 4,500; Putussia, 4,900; Uhmudpore, 2,500; Daleppore, 2,500; Chamunia, Rs. 6,500. The jumma of this last village alone covers the amount assessed by Government upon the whole Elaqua. This is one of the least items of income derived by people filling responsible situations in the residency; and this is too one of the least items of losses which the Oude Government sustains in its land revenue. How can the resident have confidence in the information conveyed to him through these corrupt functionaries, who have been the source of great evil to this Government, and who are sure ultimately to prove its ruin, is a serious question."

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

MEDICAL SERVICE.

Fort William, 5th July, 1848.—The following paragraphs of a military letter, No. 6, from the Hon. the Court of Directors to the Governor-General of India in council, dated 7th March, 1848, are published for general information:—

"Review of the Medical Establishment of the Bengal Army."

"Para. 1. The several suggestions made in this despatch have engaged our particular attention."

"6. We must observe that, agreeably to the existing regulations, the situation of superintending surgeon is considered a staff appointment to which only 'those fitted for it by a zealous and able discharge of their professional duties' shall be deemed eligible, and that it is declared that appointments to vacancies 'will be made without reference to the order of succession whenever it may be the opinion of the Government that such departure from seniority is required for the maintenance of the public interest.'"

"7. If this regulation be duly observed, no surgeon should be appointed a superintending surgeon who is disqualified by age, state of health, or the want of adequate professional talents, for the important duty of supervising the practice of the medical officers and the economy of the hospitals in the division to which he is attached."

"8. We would further observe that it is the duty of the medical board to watch with care the reports of the inspecting officers, and to bring to your notice any instances in which superintending surgeons may be found inadequate to the continued performance of their duties, in any such case it will be incumbent on you to place the medical officer in some other and less responsible charge."

"10. By the regulations it is prescribed that 'vacancies in the medical board shall be filled up by selection from the superintending surgeons of such as shall be most distinguished for professional science and the zealous discharge of their duties; due regard being had to seniority in the service, when the qualifications of the individuals appear to be adequate to the correct performance of the duties of the office.'"

"11. In calling your attention to the necessity for a due enforcement of this regulation, we will only add, that if, in your judgment, it has become necessary to enlarge the sphere of selection so as for instance to permit of the appointment of a surgeon of distinguished talents and acquirements in his profession to the appointment, on a vacancy, of 3rd or junior member of the board, we should have no hesitation in according our sanction to the measure. The appointment of such an officer in the vigour of his age to be the 3rd member would be calculated to infuse new energy into the board, and to render it more efficient for the performance of its various duties; in this case the 1st and 2nd members might be selected, as at present, from the superintending surgeons only."

"12. We observe, with satisfaction, that great care has been bestowed by your government in inquiring into the wants of the service as regards medical officers at the several stations, and in the several corps and departments. The results at which you have arrived as to the numbers of surgeons and assistant surgeons and native sub-assistant surgeons required at the several stations, civil and military, appear to be correct."

"13. The results, as regards the European medical officers, are as follow:—

Members of the medical board	3
Superintending surgeons	11
Surgeons	115
Assistant surgeons	230
	359

"14. The present authorized establishment, is surgeons, including members of the medical board and superintending surgeons 120

but in consequence of the urgent demand for additional medical aid during the military operations of 1844-45, supernumeraries have been kept up to the number of... 20

"15. The establishment as above described, amounting to 359 medical officers has our sanction."

"16. The number of native sub-assistant surgeons it is proposed to increase from 34 to 56. The increase to 56 has our sanction."

The promotions consequent on the increase sanctioned in paragraphs 13 and 15 of the foregoing despatch, will have effect from the 17th of April, 1848, the date of its receipt.

We do not hear of any reduction in freights as yet; quotations are, to London, £4. 7s. 6d. to £4. 10s. per ton; to Liverpool, £4. 10s.

COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

The Bombay Express, with London dates to 24th May, reached this late on the 4th. The Precursor, with the mail, arrived on the 5th instant.

The accounts do not confirm the expectations of a growing improvement in the aspect of political affairs in Europe, to be followed by a revival in commerce. The unfavourable result of the Indigo sale, and generally depressed state of trade, shew nothing but what is of a gloomy tendency.

The changes in business here during the past week are not important. Exports have continued in fair request—Sugar appeared likely to take another start when the express came in, but has settled down at about previous rates. For Silk there is a moderate inquiry—Corals are little wanted—Saltpetre remains quiet, and Rice dull.

The import market is without much alteration. Without any general accession of demand, Cotton Goods have not been sold so low as they were last week. Were the internal commerce in a sound condition, the reduced rates now ruling might be expected to attract an enhancement of demand. In Manchester Cottons a fair amount of business has been done, but for Glasgow Fabrics there is no symptom of improvement—Male Twist is certainly in better favour, and sales have been made above the lowest point. In Metals sales are to a fair extent.

INDIGO.—The sudden rise of the Ganges alluded to in our last issue has done less injury than might have been expected, the river having shortly after subsided, and at the date of our last advices from Bhagulpore (1st July) was still falling.

In Tirhoot, and the adjoining districts, there have been heavy falls of rain during the last week of June, but little injury is reported to have been done as yet.

At Bhagulpore also the rain has been heavy, and the produce of the October plant has fallen off in consequence. The loss of plant here from inundation has been considerable.

On the banks of the Bhagerutty and Malda the rise of the river caused manufacture to open rather prematurely, and the plant, which had to be cut as the water rose, being unripe, has yielded but little.

In Lower Bengal the weather has been generally favourable. There are complaints of too much rain from Jessore and Eastern Kishnaghar, but the latest advices are better. Manufacturing is now pretty general.

From the Upper Provinces we have received no late information of the progress of the season. The rains appear to have set in with much violence from Patna westward. The dawks were stopped for six days by the overflowing of the large Soane river.

On the whole, the damage done in Lower Bengal has been immaterial, and with fine weather for the manufacture during this month and the next, full estimates are likely to be realized, viz. 95,000 to 110,000 mds.

Exports from 1st Nov. 1847 to 6th July, 1848, are

	Cheats.	Fy. Mds.

France	2,933	10,532

SUGAR.—There has been a good demand for sugar throughout the week, and all white descriptions are saleable at full rates.

RAW SILK.—The inquiry continues moderate, and at prices showing no change. There is only a moderate supply at market.

SILK PIECE GOODS.—Demand for Corahs remains languid, and prices are without any alteration.

SALTPETRE.—There has been little business done in saltpetre for England. The Americans have been purchasers to a fair extent; and refined kinds have been sold at full rates.

IMPORTS.

COTTON GOODS.—The market for British Cottons during the past week has been a little more steady. The demand, though perhaps a little more active, is still far from general, but there has been rather more firmness shewn by importers. In Manchester Goods a very fair amount of business has been done.

SHIRTINGS.—The sales of Grey 40-inch have been large, and generally at prices shewing firmness, particularly for middling cloths. The quantity or ordinary quality at market is large, and for these offers are still very low, 45-inch Greys are in little demand. Bleached Shirtings of all kinds continue dull.

JACONETS.—Bleached have been in good demand, and some large sales have been made. Known makes have brought full rates, in some instances more than last week. Grey are not so saleable as they were, the supply by recent arrivals being rather large.

MADAPOLLAMS are without change, and Grey in fair demand.

CAMBRICS.—White continue very dull of sale.

BOOK MUSLINS.—No sales have come to our notice, prices remaining without amendment at Co.'s Rs. 1-0 for No. 1 kind.

TURKEY RED GOODS.—The market for all goods under this head continues extremely dull. The demand from the Upper Provinces at this season falls very short of its usual extent, and does not at present shew symptoms of being more brisk.

PRINTED GOODS.—The demand for Prints is still confined chiefly to Turkey Red 25-inch Chintzes of good colour, and of these, sales are at fair prices. Inferior colours it is however difficult to sell at any rates.

MULE TWIST.—There is a better market for Twist, and demand appears on the increase. No. 40 of good quality is higher, and for other numbers, the last prices obtained are somewhat above the lowest point. There is every prospect of improvement.

TURKEY RED TWIST.—The sales of Red Twist are unimportant, the market remaining dull.

COPPER.—The demand for Copper has been somewhat dull, arrivals have been large, and buyers have been holding off on the expectation of lower prices being taken.

IRON.—Old stocks of iron continue to be sold off, and about 8,000 maunds have thus been disposed of. Bar and Bolt at Co.'s Rs. 2-14 & 3-5 per fy. md. The value of fresh importations continues unchanged.

SWEDISH STEEL.—A large sale has been made at Ct. Rs. 5-12 per fy. md. In other metals no sales have been reported.

BRER.—Allsopp's has been sold at Rs. 65 per hd.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CASE OF DR. MOUTAT.—We believe our contemporary of the Crescent is mistaken in supposing that the object of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief's visit to Bangalore is for the purpose of "putting Major-general Aitchison in his proper place." It so happens, fortunately for the latter, that Sir George Berkeley and he were together for some time in the same corps—the Guards, and their intimacy has been renewed since his Excellency's arrival at Madras; and this indeed to such an extent, as to have led to the report, that even the faults and infirmities of the major-general have been regarded with an indulgent eye by Sir George. The affair now pending between Dr. Moutat and Colonel Key has also, we understand, been attributed to the same source, the good-natured colonel being only an instrument in the hands of his official superior. The trifling and almost puerile character of the charges alleged against so old and highly respected and talented a medical officer as the surgeon of the 15th Hussars, too evidently evinces the animus which has dictated and sustained such proceedings. We deeply regret the circumstance, not only on account of the surgeon, but also, as it is now but too obvious, that the colonel has acted precipitately in framing charges, which it will be totally out of his power to prove, on the subject of letters, reports, and returns. The matter is still under the consideration of his Excellency, and we much doubt if it result, notwithstanding all that has occurred, in a court-martial. We are assured, on what we consider rather good authority, that so flimsy and transparent have been the motives of the doctor's adversaries, that Sir George is unwilling to institute even a court of inquiry to investigate the charges, and yet is he also equally reluctant to offend the major by refusing Colonel Key the court-martial he solicits for the surgeon. The issue, however, will decide whether Sir George permit any private feeling to influence him in his deliberations on a point of public and official duty. One thing however is certainly required—that some steps be adopted by the authorities for the prevention of matters continuing in the same state as they have done hitherto at Bangalore. The frequent collisions between the medical and military authorities at that station furnish undoubted proof that there exists something radically defective in the mode of conducting the several duties of their respective departments. If the surgeon is to be thwarted, interfered with, and embarrassed in discharging his professional avocations—if the medical subordinates are to be harassed, distressed, and repeatedly taken from the performance of their appointed duties—and if the internal economy of the hospital is to be deranged by the gratuitous interference of those who cannot, from their position, be supposed to understand the rules and requisite arrangements that most efficiently promote the comfort, convenience, and welfare of the sick, it cannot be expected that that harmony and order will be preserved in hospital which render the surgeon esteemed and respected, and which alone are eminently conducive to the best interests of the service generally. We trust speedily to hear that this disagreeable affair has been amicably disposed of, and that measures have been taken to prevent in future the recurrence of such misunderstandings as the present. All that appears to us requiring immediate attention is the distinct line of duty being chalked out for these two departments of the service, so that there be no collision, or interference, which is unauthorizedly exercised by the one, and the influence of which embarrasses and cripples the energies of the other.—Circulator.

SUNSHINE.—To going to press, information reached us from Bangalore, that notwithstanding all that had been urged on the subject of the frivolous nature of the charges, and the too evident want of proper feeling which has actuated the accusers of Dr. Moutat, as well as the humiliating position in which it serves to place so old and experienced a medical officer as the surgeon of the 15th Hussars, his Excellency has decided on bringing him to trial for the alleged offences that have been laid to his charge. We entertain not the slightest doubt as to its result, yet we still cannot but regret that it was at all deemed necessary Dr. Moutat should be subjected to such an unpleasant ordeal.—Ibid. Supplement.

THE REV. MR. JAMES.—It is the opinion of some who have studied the statistics of perjury, that though there may not be found, on a comparison between Christian and Heathen testimony, as great an average amount of falsehood in the former as the latter, yet that there are cases of harder swearing amongst the civilized body. A few days ago we should have demurred to the truth of these assertions, but the results of the inquiry instituted by the Archdeacon of Madras into the conduct of the Rev. Mr. James, minister of the Black Town chapel, compels us, reluctantly, to admit their soundness. It has for some time been a matter of notoriety that the reverend gentleman we allude to, who is one of the Company's chaplains, was suffering under the imputation of charges brought against him by Mr. Price, clerk of the chapel. The offences with which he was charged were so gross and gratuitously immoral that it could only be concluded either that Mr. James was insane or was sought to be made the victim of an atrocious design. They were detailed, however, to many persons, with all the fervour of indignation, and the most careful attempts at the preservation of literal exactness, and, in due time, coming to the ears of the trustees, were preferred to the archdeacon, who felt himself bound to suspend Mr. James from the exercise of his priestly functions. A medical examination was ordered for the purpose of testing his doubtful sanity, and it was with no small regret that the friends of the Church learned that the report established beyond question his mental soundness. The notion that the asserted immoralities of conversation and manners were the consequences of a diseased mind was, early adopted by those who felt deeply the scandal which would attach to the Establishment, from a verdict of guilty being pronounced by the archdeacon; and a corresponding degree of pain followed the announcement that the trial must proceed. On Thursday last, the Court was constituted at the cathedral; and the proceedings were opened in due form. The reverend defendant was called upon to answer the charges. The citations served on the prosecutor were read, to which replies had been forwarded to the archdeacon and registrar. The prosecutor at first asked leave to withdraw the accusations, on the ground that he had never intended that they should be brought forward in public, and for other reasons equally valid. The archdeacon, in answer, firmly insisted on his appearance in court, as an act of justice—alike to the public and the defendant; to which, the man rejoined, by a confession of the entire and absolute falsehood of his various statements; volunteering at first, to sign any declaration to that effect in the public journals; and afterwards, begging that he might be permitted to escape with the loss of his situation as clerk, and offering to subscribe, further, the "most abject apology" to Mr. James! Nothing in the shape of a declaration of raciality could be more complete than the recantations read; and of course the venerable archdeacon had only to pronounce the full and entire acquittal of his "reverend brother;" which pleasing duty he performed with much emotion. Mr. James, who seemed greatly affected, was warmly congratulated by his friends; and we trust that their sympathy for his undeserved misfortunes will, in some measure, compensate him for his load of suffering. As for the unhappy man to whom he owes his peril, and who might have proved his ruin, it is impossible to divine his motives or compassionate his condition.—Athenæum, June 24.

MR. MACLEAN.—The Athenæum gives the following particulars respecting the arrest of Mr. Maclean, the third member of the Board of Revenue at this presidency, for the offence of infringing the provisions of the statute prohibitory of money dealings on the part of Company's servants with the rulers of native states. It would seem that the offence consisted in the exercise of his influence, and the use of his name, to obtain loans for His Highness the Nabob of the Carnatic. Mr. Arathoon, an Armenian merchant, was the lender; Gholam Moorteeza Khan, a Mahomedan gentleman, the agent through whom the transactions were managed. Money becoming scarce, the Nabob could not meet his engagements, and "repudiated"—averring that the loans had been made to Gholam Moorteeza Khan, and not to himself. The Act 37th Geo. 3, c. 144, constitutes Mr. Maclean's offence—the "being concerned in the lending of money to native princes—a misdemeanor, punishable by any court of competent jurisdiction. Mr. Macdonald, it appears, was committed by the police magistrate for trial at the Criminal Sessions of the Supreme Court. Bail was accepted; but, immediately on his liberation, he was arrested by the sheriff at the suit of Mr. Antheon, for a lakh and a quarter of rupees.

BOMBAY.

THE LATE LIEUT.-COL. JOHN SUTHERLAND, OF THE 2ND BOMBAY LIGHT CAVALRY.

The demise of Lieutenant-Colonel John Sutherland removes from amongst us one of the statesmen of the school of Elphinstone and Metcalfe, who will long be the pride of our country and glory of our history. He was a distinguished member of that class of politicians who consider the improvement of our possessions preferable to their extension where only one of these can be attended to; and who had seen too much of the selfish and engrossing nature of war and conquest to believe in the possibility of our devoting ourselves with energy to two such conflicting processes as those of domestic good government and external aggrandizement. Seeing how easy it was to pull down or uproot—how difficult to re-construct or raise, according to our own conceptions of things—what would be equally useful to those we desired to advantage or patronize with what we had destroyed, Colonel Sutherland followed the true English principle of endeavouring to make the most of every thing he met with,—holding it in most cases greatly preferable to re-adapt, re-adjust, and repair, rather than to renew the social edifice. He was a man of high intelligence, of the purest benevolence, and of the most unswerving integrity. He never suffered the native chiefs with whom he had to deal to be bullied or intimidated, inveigled, deluded, or misled. When a proposition was to be made to them, his first care was that they should comprehend it thoroughly, and appreciate the consequences likely to flow from it; and, having done this, that they should decide on it, according to the best of their judgment. His Court of Delegates from the Rajpoot states to settle every question of general importance, went not to extinguish those heart-burnings and intrigues—those jealousies and misunderstandings—which are the curse of Native courts. Colonel Sutherland entered the army as a cadet in 1800 at the age of 18, so that at the date of his death he was in his 58th year. He early distinguished himself for his devotedness to Oriental study and the proficiency he made in the tongues, history, and manners of the country. He was on the personal staff of the Honourable Mountstuart Elphinstone while governor of Bombay; and was subsequently employed in a high political capacity under the Bengal Government. He was in 1833 private secretary to Sir C. Metcalfe, then deputy-governor of the Northwest Provinces. He was after this appointed agent for the Governor-General in the Rajpootana states, where, through his means and those of his very able and zealous assistants, suttee, infanticide, the sale of children into slavery, and other monstrous usages, which had flourished from time immemorial, were abolished. Through him numberless valuable institutions were brought into existence: amongst others a medical college, to the establishment of which he contributed largely from his private purse. He was devoted heart and soul to the prosecution of the work in which he had long laboured so successfully; and, when spoken of as likely to be appointed Commissioner in Scinde, stated that he hoped to live and die in striving for the improvement of Rajpootana. Like many of our most eminent men in India, he rejoiced in the excitement of field sports: when engaged in hog-hunting some years since, he lost his cap, and, in galloping on without it, received a stroke of the sun, from which he never recovered. His health after this for some time continued to fail him,—his mind being occasionally affected. In the end of 1843 he spent some weeks in Bombay on his way to the Cape, and it pleased him then to resume his cavalry uniform, and revive old associations by once more taking on himself the duties of A.D.C. and receiving the forenoon visitors at Government House. A two years' stay at the Cape improved his health while it impaired his fortunes—he having speculated in land not likely to prove profitable. His strength was still but imperfectly restored, and in the hot season of 1847 he spent some months at Mount Aboo for the benefit of his health. He at one time proposed visiting his early and intimate friend Mr. Clerk at Bombay in October last. The Governor was at this time believed to be on the eve of visiting Scinde—as it proved he was preparing to retire from India altogether; so Colonel Sutherland returned through the desert without accomplishing his contemplated return to the earliest scenes of his exertions in the East. On crossing the desert, he expressed himself strongly on the unwisdom of the policy which thought to improve our power by extending it: had they pursued the route or examined the arid and inhospitable regions he had travelled, they would have thought of no better "defence from an army advancing from the west." He had many years ago drawn up an account of the political relations of the states on our north-west frontier with each other, and with the British Government. This was printed, but never published—government having merely distributed a few copies of it amongst their political officers. It was his purpose to resume the writing of this so soon as he returned from Aboo to Ajmeer, continuing the narrative down to the present time. Government had readily provided him with materials, and he expected to have had the work ready for press within the present year, to be published under sanction of the Court of Directors. He had never been an admirer of any part of Lord Hardinge's Punjab policy, save that which maintained the heir of our ancient ally, Runjeet Singh, upon the throne; and purposed availing himself of the opportunity the publication of his intended work afforded of expressing the views he entertained in opposition to it. The circumstance of the Mahrattas and Sikhs he considered wonderfully analogous. Our first great mistake he believed to be our entering into treaties or engagements with an infant, binding upon ourselves principally, when it would have much more satisfactory to have taken on ourselves the administration of the realm during the minority, conducting its affairs by a council of regency, as was the case in Cutch, when Sir H. Pottinger was resident; and as was subsequently the case with Jeypore and Joudpore. The error committed at Lahore in Feb. 1846, was, he conceived, similar to that fallen into at Negpore in 1817-18 under similar circumstances: we found ourselves almost immediately compelled to interfere to a much greater extent than we contemplated, and made our subsequent operations a series of make-shifts and expedients. Colonel Sutherland foresaw from the beginning, then, what others have only discovered after time has revealed what were secrets to so many, and felt beforehand what others have come to acknowledge, that the present resident at Lahore was not the man for the occasion or position. He considered that the death-blow was given, by the appointment of Sir Frederick Corrie, to the tranquillity of the country; and that, with Littler, Lawrence, Mackeson, and McGregor on the spot, it was altogether inexorable to have made it. Colonel Sutherland, like his friend Mr. Clerk, and his subordinates Major Ludlow and Captain Burton, was a zealous supporter of every establishment which had the good of the country or the advancement of the people in view: he was one of the largest subscribers to the establishment projected in Bombay for the tuition of native craftsmen in the improvement of arts and manufactures; and the example he set was promptly followed by those around him. His projected work has, we fear, made little progress. Though long past the prime of life, he was still as fresh as in his youth of vigour, activity, and zeal; and as devoted as ever to the good works in which he has for half a lifetime laboured: he had no wish to relinquish the task he had undertaken, or return to his native country,—and he has died with business on his back.—Bombay Times.

THE LATE MR. CHARLES FORBES.

In our last we shortly intimated the lamented death of Mr. Charles Forbes, of the house of Forbes and Co., which took place at Malta on the 16th of May. Mr. Forbes had for years been suffering from an affection in the chest, and about the beginning of 1847 alarming symptoms of pulmonary consumption made their appearance. These from time to time abated and returned on him till the only hope—a fallacious one as it has unhappily proved—of restoration for him, seemed a trial of the mild climate of Egypt and the south of Europe. He left Bombay in October last, and after spending some months in Egypt, where he appeared greatly to improve, proceeded to Malta, where his strength continued gradually to sink until his sufferings were closed by death. Mr. Forbes joined the Bombay civil service in 1835 and retired from it in 1840, when he was placed by his uncle, Sir C. Forbes, at the head of the house of Forbes and Co., there having been no resident partner in Bombay from the time of Sir Charles's own retirement. The opinion formed of his talents by a judge so severe as Sir C. Forbes in reference to a matter in which his own interests were immediately concerned, may be judged of by his being placed at the early age of twenty-one, when as yet he had had no training and no experience in mercantile affairs, at the head of the oldest, most extensive and successful mercantile establishment in Western India. Some months afterwards he in the course of business had occasion to subscribe an affidavit on the subject of the affairs of Dr. Forbes, a client of the house; the paper was a blundering and irregular one, and when the case came before the Supreme Court, Chief Justice Roper charged Mr. C. Forbes with the want of a proper sense of the obligation of an oath. When the fit of ill-humour in which this was done was over, Sir H. Roper explained that he had been guilty of nothing more than subscribing a somewhat irregularly drawn affidavit. Mr. Forbes felt the original imputation to be so unworthy and undermined that he turned his back on him who made it when advancing to accost him; to this the Chief Justice formally alluded on the Bench as one of the reasons why "a soothing and impartial judgment was not to be expected of him," on the motion being made to have the offensive matter, admitted by the Court to be excessive, expunged from the records. The fine sense of honour and integrity of Mr. Forbes were well known to the community, and the very unbecoming expressions of the Chief Justice were commented on by the press; and out of this arose "The Great Contempt Case" so much noised about in 1841. Mr. C. Forbes was a man of an unusually fine taste and powerful and highly-cultivated understanding. Deeply read in English and in Continental literature, he was well skilled in the Greek and Roman classics, and displayed singular felicity and feeling as a writer both of prose and poetry. But little of what he wrote has been printed; what little has been published has been mainly ascribed to other pens. Nor do we feel ourselves authorized, now that he is gone, to remove a veil he would if spared most certainly not have suffered to be withdrawn. He was eminent as a draftsman, and distinguished, indeed, by his proficiency in most intellectual accomplishments. Of great natural uprightness of disposition, he was feverishly sensitive to the slightest imputation or suspicion, and shrunk as from contamination from those he considered capable of doing what was disingenuous, mean, or dishonourable. He was naturally of feeble frame and sickly constitution; he was so near-sighted as scarcely to be able to distinguish his most familiar friends ten paces off; and these, conjoined with a great natural shyness and timidity of manner, and the attachments already alluded to, made him comparatively little known amongst us. To his nearest and most intimate friends only was his character, as above described, familiar, and to these, we feel assured, what has been given will appear but a feeble outline of his merits. To the world, who knew him not, it will, from what has been said, we trust appear that the demise of a man under most circumstances so likely to have risen to eminence ought not to be passed over with the short notice formerly given.—Bombay Times.

THE OVERLAND COMMUNICATION.

Every letter we receive on this subject paints the confusion introduced into our overland communication by the suspension of the Southampton line of mails, in a more striking and more mischievous light than that in which it had just before appeared. The following are the arrangements as they at present stand. The Bombay mails and passengers on reaching Alexandria find one of H. M.'s steamers ready to take them to Malta, and there drop them, the packet proceeding to Marseilles without loss of time. Passengers, if they feel disposed to venture on a trip through France, may proceed, if they like—making up their minds to ten days' quarantine at Marseilles. At present, we believe, most Englishmen and all Englishwomen would rather go a little out of their way than traverse the dominions of the new republic. At Malta, in this case, they must remain from two to four days in quarantine, when the Oriental Company's steamers from the Levant will pick them up about the 26th of the month, and so convey them home. So also it is with all parcels and goods from Bombay; they have no means of being conveyed save that just referred to. The troubles in getting home are, however, a trifle to those coming out. The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamers, in place of leaving Southampton, as was their wont, on the 3rd, leave on the 27th of the month: by them passengers for Bombay will find their way to Malta, but here they must remain for a week at least, till H. M.'s steamers from Marseilles, with mails for Alexandria, pick them up. Passengers, it is true, may come by the mid-monthly mail, which leaves on the 20th, and get straight on to Aden, taking, of course, the Calcutta ship from Suez. At Aden they will be picked up by our frigates; but then the accommodation for passengers in these ships is in the last degree scanty and uncomfortable. In the event of no other arrangement turning up, the Peninsular and Oriental Company contemplate running a steamer from Bombay to Ceylon, and conversely, for the conveyance of goods and passengers. The singularity of the present arrangement rests in this; that it inconveniences every one and benefits no one. The charge of the Peninsular and Oriental Company is materially less than the cost Government themselves incur on the Malta and Alexandria line. The whole postage on letters reaches M. M. Treasury; two-thirds of this on letters by Marseilles remains in France. Of course also increased charges diminish transmission, and tempt to smuggling. On this side it is the same, and we have no doubt whatever that our post office returns will be materially affected in consequence. Passengers, also, will abandon our packets in no inconsiderable numbers. It is no joke to be detained at Malta a week on the way out. Those of them who come by the Calcutta steamer to Aden will not only have to face the inconvenience of frigate conveyance, but diminish the proper income of the packets by the amount of fare paid from Suez to Aden. Yet all this is done with the principal mail from India—the only rapid or direct communication between Europe and the East—to humour the freak of some of the authorities, ignorant, most likely, of half what they are about, or of the consequences of their proceedings.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ARRIVAL OF THE ENGLISH MAIL.—The steam frigate Sesostris arrived from Suez on the night of Thursday, July 6th, with the English mail, via Marseilles, of the 7th June, which has thus occupied a few hours less than twenty-nine days in its transit from London to Bombay. The Sesostris left Aden on the 29th ult., the mails having been brought thither the day previous by the Atalanta, which left Suez on the 21st.

The Bank of Bombay has declared a dividend for the half-year ending June 30, of 8 per cent. per annum. The net profit for that period is Rs. 220,341, of which Rs. 209,000 are to be divided amongst the shareholders, the remaining Rs. 11,341 being added to the reserved surplus fund, which now amounts Rs. 67,773.

The Poona Chronicle,—a paper has been started under this title.

LIBERALITY TO CLERKS.—We are given to understand that four clerks, those longest in the employ of Messrs. Forbes, and Co., of Bombay, were, by order of Sir Charles Forbes, pensioned, a few days ago, on one hundred rupees each per mensem. This is the second act of munificent liberality on the part of Sir Charles noticed in these columns in the course of about six weeks.—Bombay Times.

THE LIBEL CASE.—The Supreme Court has granted a criminal information against Mr. Mackenna, the proprietor and editor of the Gentleman's Gazette, for a libel on Mr. Philip Stewart, of the Bombay Civil Service. The main feature of the libel consisted in an accusation of drunkenness. Mr. Stewart met this by affidavits proving not only non-addiction to intemperance, but positive abstemiousness of habits. Mr. Mackenna aggravated his case by putting in an affidavit stating, amongst other things, that though Mr. Stewart was not a drunkard at the time of the publication of the libel, yet he had been so at some former period of his life! On the perusal of this affidavit, the Puisne Judge observed that he had never seen so rhetorical a one before; and his remark will not appear strange when we state that it contained, with other high-sounding language, the following grandiloquent passage:—"And this deponent felt strongly, when the publication of the said alleged libel took place, that it was no time to trifle with questions of vital importance to the interests of any portion of the British Empire, when all Europe was convulsed, and many of its dynasties overturned by popular discontent, engendered in a great degree by the restriction of the liberty of the press, and that at the time when this deponent published the said alleged libel, the city of Surat was in a state of disturbance and excitement, which it was the duty of a journalist to endeavour to allay." Sir Erskine Perry refused to try Mr. Mackenna's case at the sessions.—Bombay Telegraph.

FAILURE OF A PARSEE.—We in our last accidentally omitted noticing the failure of the highly-respected Parsee merchant Dadabhoj Rustomjee, Esq., who has been compelled to call a meeting of his creditors, and place his affairs in the hands of trustees. Dadabhoj Rustomjee is the son of Rustomjee Cowasjee Banajee, Esq., of Calcutta, and nephew of our respected fellow-citizen Framjee Cowasjee, Esq. Both father and son are said to have been ruined by the failure of the Union Bank. The liabilities of Dadabhoj Rustomjee are variously stated at from fourteen to twenty lacs of rupees; the probable assets of the firm are reckoned at about three-eighths of their debts. Dadabhoj Rustomjee was broker to the firm of Macvicar, Burn, and Co., and was always held to be a man of the highest respectability.—Times.

SUKKUR, June 25.—The Satellite steamer left Sukkur several days ago for Ferozepore, at the requisition of the resident at Lahore; it is supposed she is to ply between the former place and Bhawalpore, with stores and ammunition. She had a guard of one hundred sepoys of the 9th regt., 2 guns, and a few Golundaze on board. We have since heard that she is not adapted for the Suttley, and that two more suitable vessels (the Maceo and Conqueror) are on their way from Kotree, under the command of Lieut. Christopher, to relieve her from the duty. All is quiet in Sindh; the inundation is very extensive; there is a large body of water between Sukkur and Shikarpore. The errors of the Bombay papers are the following:—No battery has lately arrived at Sukkur from Haidrahad, as stated in a recent number of the Bombay Times.—The seige train at Sukkur is not undergoing more repairs than are usual to keep such an armament in an efficient state for any service.—The Upper Sindh force has not been ordered to hold itself in readiness for service, although we are ready to be ordered.

ADDISCOMBE CADETS.—We have been requested to notice prominently the following case, which seems well worthy of all the prominence which can be given to it. In 1837 the Court of Directors having become alive to the great disadvantages under which cadets who went to Addiscombe laboured compared to those who proceeded direct to India, as the latter were counting their time as India service while the former were engaged in completing their studies, the time thus expended not being reckoned, in their period of service,—an order was passed, directing that the time so passed at Addiscombe after the students had attained the age of sixteen years should in future reckon as Indian service. The names of those entitled to this boon were published in our paper of June 24, but it has not been extended to cadets prior to 1837, although their case is a precisely similar one; therefore, taking the artillery as an example, the senior officers have now to serve two years longer than their juniors in the same corps; and after twenty-two years' service in India the cadet of 1837 is entitled to twenty-four, which gives him a major's pension, whereas his senior officer of 1836—supposing both to be captains—can only count twenty-two years' service, and is therefore only entitled to the pension of his rank,—viz., that of a captain! Surely it could never be intended that a junior should be entitled to a pension before his senior, or that he should be entitled to a higher one than he—both retiring from the service at the same time. The injustice of what has just been stated is so transparent, that we are convinced the case requires but to be brought to the notice of the Court of Directors by memorials from the parties aggrieved, to insure its immediate removal.—Bombay Times.

THE REV. MR. SANDYS.—We regret to have to announce the death of the Rev. Mr. Sandys, late chaplain at Belgium, who died on the 12th July. Mr. Sandys was a man of good talent, of a large amount of general and varied information, and of a very amiable disposition. He had naturally a taste for mathematics and the mechanical department of civil engineering, and was constantly engaged in designs and contrivances for the benefit of the native community. These were not mere dreams or jinn-cracks, but generally sound and sensible, such as promised success and advantage. His family had shortly before left for England. He himself breathed his last in the house of Mr. Inverarity, where every effort was made to soothe and relieve, and to supply, as far as could be done by strangers, the place of those who had left him.—Bombay Times.

AN EXTENSIVE SEIZURE OF "SHERRY."—A seizure of eight pipes of sherry wine, valued at about Rs. 5,000, was, we learnt, made a day or two ago by one of the officers of the customs' flotilla, from the Duke of Cornwall, in consequence of the omission on the part of her commander to enter them in the general manifest of the vessel. The commander was adjudged to pay a fine of Rs. 300.—Bombay Times.

RAJPOOTANA.—We are informed that the Lieut. Governor N. W. P. has nominated Lieut. Showers to the charge of the Rajpootana agency, until the orders of the Governor-general shall be received on the subject. We should have thought that this senior officer would, as a matter of course, have taken the office upon him, and are not surprised to hear that the nomination has caused much dissatisfaction. Dr. Coleridge has accepted employment at Jaespor. The Committee of Adjustment had not found any will of the late Colonel Sutherland, but it is believed that one exists, the provisions of which are pretty well known.—Delhi Gazette, July 8.

THE WEATHER.—The rains have resumed at last in good earnest, and have since July 15 been pouring in torrents. Along with the rain we have had tempestuous and violent winds, shifting from point to point, and frequently blowing with almost hurricane fury. July seems resolved to make up for last time both in humidity and breeze.

THE COMMERCIAL BANK has declared a dividend for the past six months at the rate of eight per cent. per annum. The net profits of the half-year amounted to Rs. 1,68,064, to which the sum of Rs. 33,616 was added from the reserve fund, to enable the dividend above mentioned to be divided amongst the shareholders,—Rs. 20,360 being recarried to the credit of the reserve fund, which now amounts to Rs. 92,208.

AGRA U. S. BANK.—It has been stated in the Telegraph and Courier that Mr. J. G. H. Brown has been permanently appointed to the situation of agent in Bombay for the Agra and United Service Bank, the duties of which has been so satisfactorily carrying on since the departure of Mr. Wood for England; and that this latter gentleman has been confirmed in the appointment of agent for the bank in London, in succession to Captain M'Gregor, who conducts the Calcutta agency. We have always heard Mr. Brown spoken of as a man admirably adapted for the duties required of him, and feel convinced that better selections for their London and Bombay agencies could not have been made by the directors than those just mentioned.

GRIGOR GRANT, Esq., C. S., Judge Sudder Adawlut, has been elected chairman of the bench of Justices of the Peace in room of Mr. M. Larken, C. S., who resigned the office on his appointment to the magistrature of that court.

RETURN OF CONFIDENCE.—We are glad to be able to notice considerable improvement in the value of Bank Stocks. Confidence in these institutions seems to be again increasing, and an advance of 11 per cent. upon Oriental Bank Shares, and 6 per cent. upon those of the Commercial Bank, has been established upon our quotations of Friday last.—Bombay Times, July 12.

UPPER SCINDE.—An order has been forwarded to Colonel Shaw, commanding the troops in Upper Scinde, directing him to prepare a detachment of 9th N.Y., with Golundauze, guns, and mortars, to proceed up the river towards Ferozepore, to be at the disposal of the Commander-in-chief.—Ibid., July 8.

THE GRANT BUILDINGS are we believe about to be passed into the hands of Government, who have purchased them with a view to their being turned into stores and offices. The loss to the Colaba Company by the sale of the buildings will, we hear, be heavy.

Mr. St. J. T. Von Geyer, late head clerk in the Kurrachee Commissariat Office, has been found guilty of being implicated in the embezzlement of sums of money from Government amounting to upwards of Rs. 20,000, and sentenced to seven years' transportation.

Mr. Courtney has been nominated Secretary to Government in room of Mr. Goldsmid, now on leave for one year to the Cape. The appointment is an acting one, held pending the absence of the present secretary. Mr. Courtney is a man of excellent talent, and extensive and varied acquirements: he succeeded Mr. Spooner as Political Agent at Sawunt Warree, from which he was transferred to the Post Office, Bombay, and thence to be Collector at Poona. He is considerably Mr. Goldsmid's senior in the service.

LORD FAULKLAND and Sir W. Cotton are at Poona.

SCINDE is now reported to be one of the healthiest stations for our troops in India,—at present the country throughout is hot, dusty, and disagreeable; scarcely a drop of rain had fallen at Kurrachee for fourteen months.

Mr. R. P. LAWRENCE.—Amongst our general orders will be found the result of the court-martial lately held at Kurrachee on Mr. Robert Parker Lawrence, late a local lieutenant and quartermaster in the Scinde camel baggage corps. Mr. Lawrence was brought to trial on five charges—the first three for embezzlement; the fourth for having signed and given in false statements regarding payments issued to the men; and the fifth for oppressive and tyrannical conduct towards, and having withheld portions of the pay of, the men of the corps. He was found guilty of the first (with a slight exception) and second charges, not guilty of the third and fourth, guilty of the 2nd, and not guilty of the 1st instance of the 5th charge. The sentence of the Court is, that Mr. Lawrence "pay a fine of Rs. 1000 to government, be imprisoned for one year, be dismissed from the Honourable Company's service, and be henceforth incapable of serving the Honourable East India Company in any office, civil or military; and, further, be imprisoned till the adjudged fine be paid." Mr. Lawrence is the third local lieutenant of the baggage corps who has been found guilty of the same crime; the first was sentenced to seven years' transportation to New South Wales; the second to dismissal; the third to imprisonment, and the payment of a fine, in addition to dismissal from the service. We trust the severity of these sentences will serve to deter others from forgetting the good old maxim that "honesty is the best of policy." Bombay Times.

LIEUT. BODNAM, Engineer, has left Malligam for Sholapore.

A SALUTE has been heard this morning in the direction of Khairpore; we conclude H. H. Meer Allie Morad is exhibiting his loyalty by thus rejoicing at the defeat of Moolraj.

INDIAN NAVY.—The general orders to be found in this day's paper contain the very judicious and long-waiting announcement that the medical supervision of the Indian navy shall, from the 1st of August next, devolve on the superintending surgeon of the presidency division—subject of course, to the superior control of the Medical Board.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

BRIGADE ALLOWANCES.

Bombay Castle, June 22, 1848.—To obviate doubts and embarrassments which have occasionally arisen, from the ambiguity attending some parts of the regulations which govern the grant of allowances for the temporary exercise of brigade commands, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to direct that the following rules be adopted from the 1st August next.

2. An officer in the temporary command of a brigade not specially appointed, or not confirmed by Government, is authorized to draw the allowances of a cantonment command only, viz., Rs. 520 per mensem.

3. In every case when two or more corps of the line are present in the command, the officer temporarily succeeding to the brigade will make over the regimental command to the next senior officer present, and draw the full allowances prescribed above when there are less than two complete corps of the line present: the officer succeeding to the brigade will retain the regimental command, and draw the difference of allowances only viz., Rs. 120 per mensem.

4. An officer in the temporary command of a brigade, specially appointed or confirmed by Government, on the recommendation of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, is authorized to draw the full allowances of a brigadier of the 2nd class, viz., Rs. 750 per mensem.

5. When the allowances of a permanent brigadier are sanctioned, the same are to be admitted as fixed for a second class, notwithstanding the predecessor may have been in receipt of allowances as a 1st class brigadier.

In consequence of the above arrangements, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to direct that from and after the above date the circles of superintending surgeons shall be arranged as follows, viz.:

CEYLON.

MESSES. ACKLAND, BOYD AND CO.—The Ceylon Examiner states that at a meeting of the creditors of this firm it was determined that the execution of a deed of trust was unnecessary, and it was unanimously resolved that the affairs of the house be continued to be wound up under inspection, and that Mr. Ackland proceed at once to England, in order to further the interests of all concerned.

SUPPOSED WRECK.—Yesterday Government received information from Mr. Clarke, the police magistrate of Bentotte, that a quantity of cotton (presumed to have been part of the cargo of a wrecked vessel), together with a number of planks and timber, had been washed ashore on the coast between Bentotte and Ambelangodde. It is feared that some mishap has fallen a ship in about the latitude and longitude of the Basses, and that the set of the wind and current has driven portions of the wreck and cargo to the northward. If it should unfortunately be ultimately found that these fearful rocks have proved the doom of some hapless ship and crew, we hope the event will at once force on her Majesty's government the absolute necessity of erecting a lighthouse on the Basses. It is a duty which the interests of humanity as well as of policy most imperatively demand without delay. Captain Biden has often given a warning voice on the certainty of the occurrence, sooner or later, of some disaster in the locality of the Basses, but we fervently trust his anticipations have not yet been realized. Probably further information on the subject may be elicited in a day or two. It is, however, our opinion, that some ill-fated vessel has been totally destroyed, although no clue as yet has been discovered, to lead to the knowledge of any particulars respecting her. Conjecture therefore is wholly at a loss, as it is impossible to say whether it be a Bombay or Madras cotton ship, or one of those which have been laden at Tutocoreen. We should not be at all surprised to learn that the heavy gale which visited us on Saturday week was severely felt at a considerable distance to the southward and westward, and that the wreck we mention has been one of its results.—Times, June 9.

SIAM.

Eminent appear to be the order of the day not only in Europe, but have extended their alarming influence to the "far east." By the Siamese bark Neptune we have received particulars of a disturbance having originated amongst the Chinese sugar-growers and workers, which at one time threatened to place the capital, Bangkok, in the hands of the assailants. The origin of the trouble, we learn, arose from the oppressive measures of the authorities, who, besides being greatly in arrears to the Chinese labourers, had attempted to reduce their pay. From the Prince T. Y. Chua fat Mongkut, brother of the King of Siam, the best detailed account has been received, and to the communication of so illustrious a correspondent we give deserved prominence. We have taken the liberty of revising the English in some parts, which did not appear sufficiently intelligible to the ordinary reader. They style of the letter does credit to an Eastern prince far in advance of any of his countrymen for intelligence.

"Palace, Bangkok, April 20, 1848.

"At the present time Siam is somewhat unhappy, owing to a disturbance of a rather serious nature, which has taken place amongst the Chinese in the village of Thrachin, on the banks of the second stream of our large river, distant from Bangkok about 17 miles. The Chinese rebelled against the Siamese authorities at that place finally on the 19th of March last, when they fired guns and killed a great number of the king's soldiers. After which his Majesty sent a great army to fight with them, and they fled to the Bang Nockkhuck, a Chinese village on the banks of the third western stream, distant from Bangkok about 30 miles, and gathered together with the former Chinese governor, who was appointed by the king, and prepared a large force to fight with the king's army. His excellency the general of the army has conquered, so that all their leaders and soldiers, about 600, were caught and brought to Bangkok, where they arrived on the 26th of March. These Chinese are still in prison awaiting judgment: there is very little doubt that some of them will be put to death, others imprisoned for life, and some be liberated. Moreover, several Chinese, more than 4,000, resident on the sugar estates on the banks of the eastern second branch of our great river, distant from Bangkok 27 miles easterly, have risen; they have ransacked several Siamese villages, and burnt or destroyed them; they have taken possession of a fort called Chu Sung San, mounting 60 guns. They have organized an army against the king, wishing to take possession of our city. They took possession of the fort Chu Sung San on the 15th of April. When the king heard of this event he sent his armies against them from two points, so that they were surrounded by Siamese troops in every direction. Some of them dreading the consequence, seized the ringleaders or heads of the secret society, and delivered them into the hands of the general, who had them securely bound and sent to Bangkok, where they arrived on April 18th. The troops have not yet returned, because that part of the country was not in its former quiet state, several of the Chinese parties still holding out, but I hope to hear of all being again tranquil.—Yours very sincerely,

"Prince T. Y. CHUN FU MONGKUT."

Since the above was in type, we have been favoured with the following extract from a letter to a commercial firm here, from which it will be seen that the number of killed, wounded, and taken prisoners is far in excess of our illustrious correspondent's account:—

"The disturbance we alluded to in our last has ended in an insurrection of the Chinese in the sugar districts, and Government has been necessitated to send over a large number of troops and men under the command of Chow Khew Bo din and Chow Khew phra Klang, the former being on his return from the war in Cambodia, where he has been for the last eight or ten years. The Chinese and all trading boats have been proscribed from going into the interior for the present; whilst the destruction of property by fire and the pillage and loss of life has been fearful. A large number of the mills have been burnt, and several villages razed to the ground. The quantity of sugar and cane destroyed is very great. The ringleaders of the insurgents have now, however, all been taken within the last few days and brought into Bangkok, since which the indiscriminate slaughter of the Chinese in those districts has ceased. It is estimated that about 400 Chinese have fallen, but we are inclined to think that the number is much more, besides the number of prisoners they have taken."

On Saturday last there was a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, to take into consideration the affairs of Siam and the perilous situation of merchants there. A letter was addressed to the hon. the Governor with reference to the despatch of a vessel of war, but owing to the state of the Bangkok river, there was no vessel of war at Singapore of small draught of water so as enable her to pass over the bar of the river.—Singapore Free Press.

The Straits Times publishes an account of an outbreak in Siam attended with serious loss of life. The Siamese authorities, being deeply in debt to their Chinese labourers, attempted to reduce their wages, upon which they rose in arms, but fled, on the approach of the Siamese forces, to Bang Nokkuk, where they made a stand, headed by the Chinese Governor of the village, and, being defeated, were, to the number of 600, thrown into prison. The Chinese who were settled on the Sugar Estates also took arms to the number of 4,000, and after an unavailing attack upon Bangkok itself, were dispersed by the troops, and totally defeated. The emeute seems chiefly to have arisen from the tyranny of the Siamese authorities, but it has been attended with an unexpected slaughter.

MAULMAIN.

TRADE.—We have received the statement of imports and exports for the month of May last. The former amounts to Co.'s Rs. 130,009-3-5, and the latter to 1,37,533-5-4. Of our staples, rice and timber, the value of the exports, for the past month, is but small, amounting together only to Co.'s Rs. 78,724. We trust this month's statement will show an improvement in that respect, as there are several vessels now taking in timber, and the lading of one or two have been completed since the end of May.—Maulmain Chronicle, Jan. 14.

CAPTAIN PHAYRE.—There has been a rumour afloat, for several months past, that it was the intention of Capt. Phayre to leave these provinces and go home to England, which we rejected as being more gup; however, from good sources, we are given to understand, that he contemplates quitting this place in October next, which we regret much to learn. His loss will be great, and most particularly felt by the cultivators of the soil.

The pains and trouble he has been at in reducing the system of the land-tax, so as to make it an equitable one, is but little known; and oft has it occurred, that, when the public voice has been raised in complaint at his absence from the bench, he has been working hard in the districts, or at his desk at home. The fruit of his labour and talents will be gathered after his departure, and when next cold season it is found that three times the number of vessels can be loaded to those that left the port the past season, let it not be forgotten who was the main cause of the prosperity of this hitherto neglected branch of our trade.—Chronicle.

PERSIA.

STEAM NAVIGATION ON THE PERSIAN GULF.—The voyage of the steamer Sir C. Forbes into the Persian Gulf has been successful as a first one. The time was comprised within 54 days, including all kinds of stoppages, and notwithstanding the rains of the last four or five days, which were felt to be so heavy as in some degree to obstruct the progress of the vessel. Another great obstacle was the non-arrival of the coals at the various stations in the gulf; this compelled the steamer to use her sails for some time, and also to burn wood whenever it could be found. Great surprise as well as pleasure was felt at various places in the gulf on seeing the steamer, and many have resolved to profit of the occasion of coming to Bombay on the next trip. The security of voyaging in the steamer contrasts strongly with that in bungalows, two of which lately sunk on their voyage in the gulf. The voyage from Bushire to Bombay may be performed in about 12 days. The steamer Sir C. Forbes came in 5½ days from Muscat, where she got coals, to this port, notwithstanding the inclemency of the season.

Preparations are, as we hear, about to be made for another trip to the gulf, and as there is much wealth in Persia, it is asserted that the people of that country will afford great encouragement to the steamers, particularly as they can go to Bushire by them in from twelve to fifteen days while they used in former to waste fifty days on the voyage alone.

The Sir C. Forbes on going up touched at Muscat, Banderabass, passed through the Clarence straits between the island of Kishim and the continent, calling at Bassadore, and proceeded to Bushire, where she stopped two days. From this she went to Mahomrah, on the Kauroon and thence to Bussora. The Captain did not think it necessary on this occasion to proceed to Bagdad—although there was abundant water in the Tigris.

There are some valuable horses on board, which have come down in the best condition, as having suffered nothing during the short voyage, and no doubt the trade in horses alone when they are brought in steamers will be greatly increased.—Bombay Gentleman's Gazette, June 17.

LITERARY & SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

Mr. H. M. Elliot, secretary to the Government in the Foreign Department, has brought to the notice of the Asiatic Society of Bengal that there exists in their Library an elaborate Essay, by Colonel Wilford, on the "Ancient Geography of India," which, he believes, has never yet been published. An Essay of his, with the same title, was printed in the fourteenth volume of the Asiatic Researches, but it is in no other respect identical with the one now noticed. Even where the names of places mentioned are the same, the manner of treating them is different, and the arrangement of the two Essays does not at all correspond. Mr. Elliot observes that "it is certainly not an early work of the learned author, for the ninth volume of the Asiatic Researches is quoted in it; so that although it abounds with the fanciful illustrations, conjectural etymologies, and forced constructions, for which he is celebrated, we may be sure that his notorious pundit had no concern in it." He adds: "Even the extravagances of such an author as Wilford are worthy of record, and his writings are still highly valued for the occasional glimpses of knowledge which they impart, even by those who are most competent to detect and expose their errors."

A large quantity of ancient gold coins (eighty-four in number), of the Indo-Scythic series, has been found in the bed of the river, near a village named Kussaraya, in the south-western part of the Monghyr district. The property in these coins is disputed; but as the finders cannot establish their claim to them, the whole will probably revert to the government. Analogies of some of the coins are published by Wilson in Plate xiv., Figs. 12, 13, 14, 19, 20, 21, and 22. They are rude in execution, but have all legends, which may be compared with other coins.

The Bombay papers mention the discovery, in the Deccan, of a bed of lithographic limestone, fifteen or twenty miles broad, and of great length, which is considered likely to furnish a valuable means of facilitating the instruction of the natives. "With but one variety of character," it is remarked in the Bombay Times, "and that peculiarly suited for printing purposes, provided plentifully everywhere with admirable penmen ready to give their services for the most moderate remuneration, and artificers perfectly competent to manufacture or make use of the printing press, the natives might, by means of this stone, speedily provide for themselves books in their own tongue at a price which, considering the smallness of their impressions, would make our cheap English editions appear extravagant. At Bombay we are disgracefully behind in these things; at Poona, and at some dozen of other out stations, lithography is practised with the utmost success. We have now only to wish for its wide and speedy extension as an engine for the diffusion of knowledge."

At the meeting of the Bombay Branch-Royal Asiatic Society, 13th July, Dr. Wilson, on behalf of Captain Christopher, I. N., presented to the Society a collection of ancient coins made by that gentleman during his late voyages of research and experiment on the Indus. These coins had been assorted and arranged by Dr. Wilson. A great number of them belong to the Bactrian and Indo-Scythian and Kanauj dynasties, including one of Heliocles, one of Azes, nine of Soter Megas, seven of the Kadphises group, ten of the Kanerki, fourteen of the Kanauj or ancient Hindoe series, eleven not yet identified, but of which something may be made, and twenty-one much defaced. There were also 121 with Arabic and Persian characters, which had not yet been examined. On the most remarkable of these coins, and the Parthian coin lately exhibited by Dr. Buist, and some specimens from Dr. Wilson's own collection, some notes were read by Dr. Wilson.

M. Zollinger, in a communication to the Batavian Society, giving an account of the customs of the inhabitants of Lombok (or Sasak), describes a new mode of suttee amongst that people.

Compulsory burning alive, it appears, is confined to the widows of rajas; others may be burned, or krised first and burned afterwards, according to their choice. Having been a spectator of one of these barbarous scenes, in which one of the three widows of a gusti, or high officer of state, at Ampenan, insisted upon being krised, in order to accompany her deceased husband in the other world, he thus describes it:—

"The woman was young and beautiful. The day after the gusti's death, she took many baths, and clothing herself in her richest apparel, passed the day with her relatives and friends in eating, drinking, chewing of sirih, and praying. In a space before the house two scaffolds or platforms of bamboo were erected, three feet from the ground, under which was dug a small pit to receive the blood and water. In a small house on one side were two others. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon, men brought out the body of the gusti, wrapped in fine linen, and placed it on the left of the two central platforms. A priest removed the cloth from the body, upon which water was thrown, and after it was washed, and the hair combed, the whole corpse was covered with cham-paka and kananga flowers. The priest, holding a silver cup, filled with holy water (chor), on which he strewed flowers, first sprinkled the body, and then poured the water, through a white net, upon the body, which he blessed, praying, singing, and making various mystic motions. He then powdered it with flour of coloured rice and chopped flowers, and placed it on dry mats. The widow of the gusti was brought out by women, clothed with only a piece of white linen, her arms crossed, and her hair crowned with flowers of the Chrysanthemum Indicum. She was calm, betraying neither fear nor sorrow. She stood before the body of her husband, and raising her arms, ejaculated a silent prayer. Women approached her, and presented to her small bouquets of flowers, which she took one by one, and placed them between the fingers of her hands, raised above her head; after which the women took them away. On receiving and returning each, she turned a little to the right, so that when she had returned all, she had moved quite round. She prayed again in silence; bent over the corpse, kissed it on the head, the breast, the navel, the knees, and the feet, and returned to her place. Her rings were then taken off, and she crossed her arms on her breast. Two women held each an arm. Her brother (by adoption) placed himself before her, and asked her, with a soft and gentle voice, if she was determined to die, and upon her giving a sign of assent with her head, he asked her forgiveness. Thereupon, he seized his kris, and stabbed her on the side of the left breast, but not deeply, so that she remained standing. He then threw down his kris and ran off. A man of rank approached her, and buried his kris to the heart the breast of the victim, who sank down without uttering a cry. The women placed her on a mat, and endeavoured by rolling and pressure to cause the blood to flow quickly. The victim not being dead, she was stabbed again with a kris between the shoulders. They then laid her on the platform near her husband, and after the same ceremonies had been gone through with her corpse as with her husband's, both were covered with resins, enveloped in white linen, and placed in the side house, to remain until they should be burned together. The native spectators around me saw nothing shocking in this cold-blooded slaughter; they laughed and talked as at a common occurrence, and the man who gave the last stab wiped his kris, and rested it to its place, in as cool a manner as a butcher after killing a sheep."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

THURSDAY, August 31, 1848.

It is a very disagreeable office which is thrust upon nations, as well as upon individuals, whose expenditure has outrun their resources, and who have "fallen into difficulties," to set about a system of retrenchment, and it is in both cases very perplexing to know where to begin and what to pare down. The small items are so small, and the large ones so indispensable; it is so difficult to decide what are necessities and what are superfluities; in some comfort is so much involved, in others character; that the distractions of debt are often submitted to in despair. Our Government has, however, taken the painful but honest course of "looking into its affairs," and having surmounted the first difficulty, and determined to economize, with the help of a committee of friends, it has cut down the national expenditure to within a trifling two millions of the national income. The ultra-economists in the House of Commons, like thrifty members of a family, have endeavoured to pinch a little more. Prudent housekeepers know that the small items are the treacherous chinks through which the income oozes out, and Mr. Hume, who is reputed to be a frugal housekeeper, acts upon that hint. Leaving to the higher intellects of such men as Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright the total annihilation of our naval and military estimates by the sublime doctrine that this huge charge is for a mere superfluity;—that the disarmament of England would diffuse a spirit of Quakerism throughout the world, and that war may be extinguished by a kind of moral or philanthropical vaccination,—he and his co-economists pursue the humble but not inglorious course of gathering up the crumbs and candle-ends, and revising the list of petty disbursements. Amongst other small charges, they have attacked the vote for the new British settlement of Labuan, in Borneo, and the establishment of his highness Rajah Brooke.

Now it is certainly, at first sight, somewhat startling to find an establishment of governor and commander-in-chief, lieutenant-governor and magistrate, master-attendant, post-master, surveyor, &c. at an expense of 10,000*l.* a year, set down for a place almost in embryo; but no one denies that it is desirable to have such a place; Labuan has been given to us, and if it is to be maintained, somebody must be paid for maintaining it. When we say no one denies that Labuan is a covetable acquisition, we must except Mr. George Thompson, who, with a simplicity which, in a gentleman endowed with so much practical sagacity, however amiable, is unexpected, is convinced by the high authority of Mr.

Midshipman Marryat, that the establishment of Labuan will tend to the infliction of the greatest calamities upon the "peaceful aborigines" of that quarter of the world—the tender-hearted prahu-men and their gentle confederates on shore.

The ostensible ground upon which the establishment on Labuan was justified by the Government is, that it may hereafter become a nucleus of an extensive legitimate commerce, like Singapore; and especially that it would tend to extinguish, partly by force and partly by moral influence, the practice of piracy in that quarter, which is prosecuted upon a large scale, as an authorized trade, to the utter destruction of all other traffic, and is attended with a vast amount of human suffering. There is another consequence likely to result from the success of this experiment, which the Government, probably, did not deem it discreet on their part to notice.

Few persons are aware of the rapid strides already made by our commercial rivals, the Dutch, in Archipelagic India, which is silently falling beneath their influence if not their dominion. The superficial area of that part of maritime Asia (excluding the Malay peninsula) is estimated at 31,428 geographical square leagues, and, according to a demi-official statement, published in Holland, by Baron Melvill van Carnbee, an officer in the Netherlands service, no less than 25,272 geographical square leagues, or nearly five-sixths of the whole, are regarded as "Dutch possessions," including all Sumatra (except Acheen and Siak), three-fourths of Borneo, and the whole of Celebes, Bali, Lombok, &c. The Dutch, in short, are imitating, legitimately enough, our example in Hindostan, and by treaty, by cession, by force, and by encroachment, are extending their authority throughout the Archipelago. They, moreover, claim, as we do, to have established their power over the native people by the mildness, beneficence, and equity of their rule.

We, of all other nations, are the least entitled to evince jealousy, on the score of territorial acquisition in the East, towards a rival; but we need not make so ostentatious a display of our magnanimity as to refrain from profiting by any fair opportunity of securing possessions in the Archipelago which will afford the means of enlarging and protecting our trade, and of exerting a political and military influence in those parts, in the event of a war, which, however remote in imagination, may be near in reality.

In addition, therefore, to the advantages which Labuan offers as the site of a commercial dépôt, and as a station whence we may, in conjunction with other European nations, cleanse the Archipelago of pirates,—the "peaceful aborigines" of Mr. George Thompson,—it will enable us to snatch some portions of the vast island of Borneo from the grasping cupidity of the Dutch, who, out of 12,700 square leagues of superficial area, have already appropriated to themselves 9,300.

For this object, we do not think 10,000*l.* a year, until the settlement can contribute to its own support, too much. Those who share in the avowed opinion of Mr. Cobden, that colonies and settlements which do not maintain themselves are burthensome to the mother-country and ought to be cast off, will, of course, think differently; but these theorists must be few, and we doubt whether Mr. Cobden himself is not too absurd a man seriously to cherish so absurd an opinion.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, AUG. 21.

Labuan.—In a Committee of Supply, on a vote of 9,827*l.* for maintaining the Government of Labuan for the year ending the 31st of March, 1849,

Mr. Hume thought it too much to begin, at such a place, with such salaries as "governor and commander-in-chief, 2,000*l.*; Lieutenant-governor and magistrate, 1,375*l.*;" to say nothing of "master-attendant and postmaster, 600*l.*; surveyor, 500*l.*." He moved that the vote be reduced to 3,000*l.*

Mr. Hawes observed that Labuan was very important in reference to our trade in that quarter; and the merchants in this country had urged the Government to take possession of a station there. Expense was necessarily incurred at starting, but he believed that Labuan would become a second Singapore, and this estimate would be reduced as revenue accrued.

Mr. Osborne considered the vote extravagant; it was pretended to be only "to begin with," but, once voted, it would never get less. Next year there would most likely be a bishop; a colony never started with a governor and commander-in-chief without ending with a bishop.

Mr. Mackinnon hoped there might be a bishop there some day; nothing was so likely to keep a colony in order and in due subjection to the mother-country as an ecclesiastical establishment. Labuan was an important position. Borneo ultimately, in all probability, might belong to this country.

Mr. Gladstone was a little alarmed at the comprehensive view of his hon. friend; considering the portion of the earth that we had got; he was more anxious for the cultivation of the field already ours, than for the extension of it, though ready to allow that to establish a post at Labuan might be very wise. But the estimate before the house was certainly large. Labuan was in its infancy, and it would be premature to frame establishments for it on the idea that it would be a second Singapore. If Rajah Brooke, having such a salary as would be reasonable for a governor giving his whole time to Labuan, was unable to do so in consequence of having a sovereignty of his own to attend to, there ought surely to be carved out of his salary the necessary allowance for a lieutenant-governor.

Lord J. Russell considered this a question of experiment. He did not agree that Borneo would be a desirable acquisition for this country; but with respect to Labuan, Rajah Brooke had pointed out the prospects of commerce and civilization in that part of the world. That very remarkable man, by his own genius, activity, and resources, had laid the foundation there of a considerable trade. He asked him, when in Europe, whether he thought that trade would be large. He said he thought it would in time, but did not expect it to grow up very rapidly. The question was, whether it would not be advisable, as an experiment, to foster Labuan for the purposes of commerce. As a station to which our ships might have recourse, it was of considerable importance. It certainly was worth the experiment, and if it failed, he would not propose a further establishment.

Mr. Hume admitted the importance of the position, both for commercial purposes, and in order to put down piratical proceedings; but he thought the establishment had been framed on a most reckless scale. He had no doubt a corporal's guard would be quite sufficient for the place.

Mr. Hawes said it was quite impossible to reduce the vote to the extent proposed. Not less than 3,500*l.* of the estimate was occasioned by public buildings, the erection of which was necessary during the first year of the establishment. The expenditure would be most vigilantly watched.

Mr. G. Thompson admitted the extraordinary exploits of the Rajah in the Indian Archipelago, but he deprecated the establishment of Labuan; believing that it would tend, not to the promotion of peaceful and honourable commerce, but to the infliction of the greatest calamities on the population of that part of the world. Every humane man must shudder as he read the proceedings of our ships of war, and the indiscriminate massacres that had taken place, directly or indirectly, in connection with their proceedings at Labuan. It would be much better to leave the interests of commerce in private hands, such as those of Sir J. Brooke.

Lord Palmerston said, if it were possible for the ingenuity of man, ignorant, as the hon. member was not, of the circumstances under which that establishment had been formed,—to make a statement in every respect the very reverse of the fact, it would be such a statement as he had made. What was it that obstructed the increase of the peaceful commerce of Europe and Asia in those islands but the prevalence of piracy? The peaceful aborigines! Why, a multitude of those islands were filled with nests of pirates, who preyed on the peaceful aborigines, and destroyed commerce in those distant seas. The object of our naval expeditions had been to put down the most detestable and diabolical system of piracy that ever existed on the face of the globe. Those pirates went out frequently in fleets of 12,000 men, armed, requiring a very considerable force to repress them. We were not the only people taking measures to put them down. The Spanish Governor-General of the Philippine Islands had sent a large naval and military expedition for the express purpose of rooting them out; and it was only after a very obstinate resistance that he had been enabled to complete his purpose. Here was a quarter in which commerce was capable of a great and important development. That could not take place without adequate protection against this most extensive and formidable system of piracy; and he did hope that one of the beneficial consequences that would result from the establishment of Labuan would be the extinction of these pirates, partly by the exercise of military force and partly by the moral effects of civilization; and thus the interests of commerce in Europe and Asia would be materially advanced.

Mr. G. Thompson denounced the employment of our naval force in scouring those seas for the extirpation of pirates, and referred to the details of massacres of the natives, given in the journal of Mr. Midshipman Marryat, of her Majesty's ship Samarang. Labuan was a mere job.

Admiral Dundas could not help observing that Sir J. Brooke was a much better judge of what was proper to be done in the Eastern Archipelago than Mr. Midshipman Marryat.

ACCIDENT TO A CADET.—On the 6th August, the evening of the arrival of the Indus at Alexandria, two young cadets, Messrs. A. F. M. Campbell and J. Barnes, on their way to India to join the East-India Company's service, were playing together in their cabin, when Barnes, who had his drawn sword in his hand, wounded Campbell in the abdomen. Campbell is now lying in an hotel at Alexandria, and although he has been declared better to-day (August 9), he is still in a precarious state. Barnes, who is quite a youth, has remained at Alexandria to attend upon the wounded man, and in the deposition taken by the English consul, Campbell declared that he is perfectly certain that the wound was inflicted by mere accident, and added that Barnes always was his greatest friend on board the Indus on her way out.—Times.

PORTRAITS OF THE RACE OF AKBAR.—One of the lots at Stowe was a set of seventeen portraits of the descendants of the race of Akbar, and one of Tippoo Sultan, painted by Indian artists. H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS,
&c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavour to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.
All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.
N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12 lb. saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9 lbs., at present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. P. cannot be accountable for any damage the same may receive after shipment.

MOURNING,—COURT, FAMILY, AND COMPLIMENTARY. THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

The advantages of this Society are as follow:—

A lower and more economical scale of Premiums for Life Assurance than hitherto demanded by the established Offices in India.

The Tables of Premiums have been accurately prepared, after reference to all the various and best reports and statistical documents recently available, and particularly that last prepared by Mr. Griffiths Davis in 1844, and the investigations of Mr. Woolhouse, Actuary of the National Loan Fund Life Assurance Society.

To the actual or mathematical risk thus deduced, an ample per-centage has been added to the scale of Premiums for the safety of the Society, and the benefit of the assured; and it will be found by reference to the subjoined Tables that, notwithstanding a considerable per-centage thus added, the rates of Premiums will be cheaper at all ages to the holders of Policies than those hitherto offered to the public in India.

EXTRACT FROM TABLES OF PREMIUMS.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 Rupees on a single life for the whole term of life.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanent residence, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

AGENTS IN INDIA.
Calcutta Messrs. Robinson, Balfour, & Co.
Madras Messrs. Lane & Co.
Bombay Messrs. Ritchie, Stewart, & Co.
Ceylon Messrs. Ackland, Boyd, & Co.

The following peculiar advantages are offered by this Company:—

1. Their policies cover the risk of living and voyaging over a far larger portion of the globe than do those issued by any other Company in existence. They allow the assured to reside in the Australian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow to the assured for the whole of life one passage out and home to any of these colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged, and the premium is reduced to the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence.
2. Premiums may be paid, and claims settled at Sydney, where there is a Board of Directors and Trustees; and at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, where there are Agents.
3. A third of the premiums may remain unpaid for five years; nor is it necessary for the maintenance of the Assurance to pay up the premium at the end of that time, but the unpaid third may remain as a debt against the policy, if the interest be regularly paid upon them as the renewal premiums fall due.

ANNUITIES.

The Annuities offered by the Company are on a more favourable scale than those offered by any other Companies, having been calculated with reference to the rates of Interest obtainable on Colonial Investments. Annuity also participate in the profits.

SUMMARY OF THE PROSPECTUS.

The principal features and conditions of this undertaking are as follow:—
 The Company will be incorporated by Royal Charter or Act of Parliament, and the Hon. the East-India Company guarantee 5 per cent. as a minimum dividend for 55 years, besides making a free grant of all lands necessary for the railway and works.

The shares will be limited to £5 each, and be applied to the section from Bombay to Callian. The calls will extend over three years, and not exceed 10s. at any one time, and the 5 per cent. will commence at once, and be payable half-yearly upon the calls as respectively made. If the whole sum be paid at once, full interest will be allowed. Where the shares are fully paid up, interest coupons will be attached, payable to bearer; and in every case the utmost facility will be given in the payment of dividends.

In the event of any obstacle to prevent the constitution of the Company, the deposit moneys will be returned to the contributors, the interest being estimated as sufficient to cover current expenses.

The caution-money (£50,000) has already been duly lodged with the East-India Company, and interest is meanwhile accruing upon the same.

The line commences at the port of Bombay, where there is a population of 300,000 inhabitants, and proceeds 35 miles towards the producing districts of the interior, by Tannah to Callian—places of considerable population and resort, on the route of one of the greatest channels of traffic in India.

The gradients being for 8 miles level, and the remaining 27 miles averaging only 1 in 1,365, the cost of construction and expense of working will be necessarily light.

The original scrip shares already issued, upon which 5s. per share has been paid, will be consolidated into shares of £5, and rank as wholly paid-up shares entitled to full dividend. Or such scrip shares may be commuted, and credit given for the 5s. already paid, provided that these alternative options be declared in writing on or before the 31st August ensuing. If not so declared by the time stated, the option will cease, and the shares become absolutely forfeited.

The quantity of merchandise-traffic on the route of this railway is ascertained from official data to be at the present time 152,000 tons per annum, conveyed at a charge of from 4d. to 6d. per ton, and which at 3d. per ton per mile would give a receipt of £45 per mile per week, or £28,000 per annum, exclusive of passenger traffic.

Besides the certainty of a good return for the capital invested, this undertaking recommends itself as a scheme of the highest national importance. The following brief extracts from papers just laid before Parliament may serve to show this judgment authoritatively:—

"The great desideratum which prevents the infinitely greater development of the resources of India, is the great want of speedy, cheap, and convenient transport to and from shipping ports. The constitution of railways will alone obviate the present insuperable disadvantages under which India is paralysed by the obstruction to speedy and cheap transport."—Report of the Board of Trade to the House of Commons, 1848, p. 355.

"The consequence of this deficiency (of railways) is severely felt, and traffic is conducted at an enormous cost of money, labour, and time. It is impossible to urge too strongly upon all who are in any way interested in Indian affairs, the necessity of special and early attention to this important subject."—Report of Committee of the House of Commons on the Growth of Cotton in India, 1848.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 12th May, 1847, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

PHANTASMAGORIA.

CARPENTER & WESTLEY'S PHANTASMAGORIA LANTERN has been so much improved, and is used with such increased facility, that it may be recommended with the greatest confidence, as being the best that is made, giving a perfectly defined figure, with a brilliant and well-illuminated field of view, from 6 to 14 feet in diameter. Combined with the copper-plate slides, it presents a novel and delightful mode of instruction and amusement. The Natural History and Astronomical Diagrams are painted in the very best style, and can be depended upon for accuracy and fidelity, and, with the Dissolving Views, are extremely popular.

Strand, near Somerset House.—Mrs. WHITE begs most respectfully to recommend to her friends (more particularly those resident in India) her most beautiful make of Lisle Thread Hose and Half Hose for Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear; their lightness, durability, and comfort can only be appreciated by those who have tried them. She also strongly recommends a beautiful description of Merino Vest and Drawers adapted for the East and West Indies.

Mrs. W. takes this opportunity to thank her friends and the public for the liberal support she has received for the last six years, and begs to assure them that as she devotes the whole of her time and attention to her business, that the best attention will be paid to all orders she may be favoured with by either ladies or gentlemen, enclosing an order for payment on a bank or any house of known responsibility in London, will meet with immediate attention.

A WONDERFUL CURE OF WOUNDS, and a DE-

LADIES TRAVELLING, or otherwise exposed to the scorching rays of the sun and heated particles of dust, will find ROWLANDS' KALYDOR a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity of the Skin. The numerous varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions, Sunburn, Freckles, Tan, and Discolorations, are pleasingly eradicated by the Kalydor, and the Skin rendered delicately soft and clear. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by the Queen, the Court and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and the several Courts of Europe; together with the "elite" of the Aristocracy, from the sultry climes of India and the drawing-rooms of Calcutta and Madras to the frozen realms of the Czar and the saloons of St. Petersburg and Moscow.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

Beware of spurious "KALYDORS," containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and which, by their repellent action, endanger health.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL.—The unprecedented success of this discovery in restoring, improving, and beautifying the Human Hair, is too well known and appreciated to need comment. The especial patronage of the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and of every Court of the civilised world; and the high esteem in which it is universally held, together with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits.—Price 2s. 6d.; 7s.; family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, a white Powder compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the Oriental Herbal, of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the Teeth, strengthening the Gums, and in rendering the Breath sweet and pure. Its truly efficient and fragrant aromatic properties have obtained its selection by the Queen, the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe.—Price 2s. 6d. per box.

Beware of SPURIOUS IMITATIONS—some are offered under the implied sanction of Royalty, and the Government Departments, with similar attempts at deception. The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS" preceding that of the article on the wrapper or label. Sold by them at 30, Hatton Garden, London, and by all Chemists and Perfumers.

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. S. W. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

THE readers of the last Mail will have observed that the intelligence contained in it was later than that of most of our contemporaries, who were not apparently aware of the second victory gained by Lieutenant (now Major) Edwardes over Dewan Moolraj, on the 1st of July, which brought the British troops and their allies under the very walls of Mooltan. Having forestalled, in so important a particular, so much of the news brought by the present overland mail in our last issue, we have not much to add beyond a confirmation of the fact, and the details, of the battle of Sadoosam, which forms the chief topic of the overland summaries.

No official report of the operations of Lieutenant Edwardes has yet appeared; but some private reports, and a few extracts of his despatches to the Resident at Lahore, which have struggled into light, shew that the accounts published in the last Mail were perfectly correct. The united forces of the Lieutenant, of Colonel Cortlandt, and of the Khan of Bhawalpore, arrived within three kos of Mooltan, when the Dewan marched from his camp with, some say 12,000, others 7,000 men, and eleven guns, to attack them. According to one account, the combined army, amounting to 18,000 men, was encamped on the banks of a fordable nullah, and on the approach of the enemy, a cannonade took place, which was severe on both sides. Before, however, Lieutenants Edwardes and Lake could get their men across the nullah, a shot having struck the howdah of Moolraj, the enemy became panic-struck, and fled, leaving four of their guns behind. According to another account, the affair was a slight one, the enemy having moved off before our troops could close with them; which is, however, at variance with the following extract from a despatch of Lieutenant Edwardes to Sir F. Currie:—"The Sooraj Mookhee regiment of infantry finally decided the day by a most brilliant charge against two guns, which they captured in a style which British troops alone could excel. They were led on by Mr. Quin, a young man, but old soldier, whose conspicuous bravery deserves special notice. A rush of the whole infantry and cavalry followed, and the broken enemy fled from the hard-fought field in irrecoverable disorder."

In a letter from Mooltan, Mr. Quin is stated to have been of great assistance to Lieutenant Edwardes:—

"On his way down to join Captain Edwardes, hearing that the army was very short of carriage, he pressed into service eighty good carriage-camels, and ten boats and boatmen, and without raising himself any delay worth noticing, crossed both the Attock and Chenab rivers with them during the night, from Dhera Ghazee Khan, both dangerous currents, and which boats never venture to cross by night, but induced them to cross, partly with money and partly by force. He however arrived too late by thirty hours for the first battle fought on the 18th of June. On his joining, General Cortlandt gave him the offer of leading on the Sooraj Mookhee regiment, which he accepted, and led his men right under the enemy's battery, and remained for four or five hours under a very heavy fire."

The loss on our side was only eighteen killed, and about seventy wounded. The fall of Captain Macpherson, of the Bhawalpore service, is confirmed. Shah Mahomed Khan, one of the Nawab's native officers, was likewise killed,—both by cannon-shot. The loss of the enemy was not ascertained.

It would appear that Major Edwardes, though he invested the place, was quite unprepared to attack it, being unprovided with any ordnance heavier than field-pieces. Burnes describes the fort, which stands on a mound, as an irregular hexagon, its longest side being 600 yards; the wall, substantially built of burnt brick, about forty feet outside, but only four or five feet from the ground inside, with no ditch; Masson, however, says it has a ditch faced with masonry, which is correct, the ditch being from thirty to fifty feet wide, and fourteen deep. It is obvious that such a place, defended by a strong garrison, must be able to defy the puny efforts of an irregular army with a few light field-pieces. Major Edwardes, accordingly, wrote to Sir F. Currie, the Resident at Lahore, for a reinforcement and some heavy artillery; but Sir Frederick, unwilling to take such a step on his own responsibility, prepared a force of 6,500 men, of all arms, with thirty guns, to be in readiness to march, and meanwhile referred the Major's application to the Commander-in-Chief, by whom it was again referred to the Governor-General at Calcutta. It would appear from the concurrent statements in the papers of that presidency, that the application was negatived. According to the Englishman, an extraordinary council was held on the 11th of July, at which it was determined "not to send reinforcements of any kind to Lieutenant Edwardes."

The force ordered to be in readiness by Sir F. Currie comprises the following corps:—

Horse Artillery:—4th troop 1st brigade (Native), Capt. Murray Mackenzie, from Lahore; 4th troop 3rd brigade (Native), Capt. John Anderson, from Ferozepore. Foot Artillery, for the service of the siege-train of 30 guns:—4th company 2nd battalion (Capt. Sissmore), from Ferozepore; 3rd and 4th companies 3rd battalion, from Lahore (under command of Major Garbett); 6th company 7th battalion (Native), from Lahore. Lieut. P. Christie to act as commissary of ordnance. Sappers and Pioneers:—The head quarters, and all companies present, from Loodiana. Light Cavalry:—The 11th regiment, from Ferozepore. Irregular Cavalry:—The 7th (Capt. Wheeler's), from Lahore; the 11th (Capt. Master's), from Ferozepore. European Infantry:—H.M.'s 10th foot, from Lahore; H.M.'s 32nd foot, from Ferozepore. Native Infantry:—The 8th, from Lahore; the 31st, from Ferozepore; the 32nd, from Ferozepore; the 49th, from Ferozepore; the 73rd, from Lahore.

Making a total of about 500 artillery, 1,500 cavalry, 1,500 European, and 3,000 Native infantry.

Major-General Whish is to command the force in person; the portion proceeding from Ferozepore is to march down the right bank of the Sutlej. Lieut.-Col. Augustus Abbott, principal commissary of ordnance, was expected immediately at Ferozepore to superintend the embarkation of the siege-train, but apprehensions were entertained that the number of boats required would not be available for many days to come.

The last accounts from Lahore state that orders had been received to put the force in motion for Mooltan. A letter, dated "Lahore, 21st July," says:—

"After many conflicting orders and counter orders, the left or Ferozepore column, has received orders to proceed by the right bank of the Sutlej, by a route compiled altogether from native information. The route lies viâ Pakpattan, Ubee, Moolsee, and Adam Ballar, on the right bank of the Ghurra, opposite Bahawalpore, and we shall reach Mooltan in about twenty-four or twenty-six marches.

"Siege-train and engineer stores, accompanied by the 32nd foot, 4th co. foot artillery, 2 co.s sappers, and 3rd company of pioneers, to drop down the Sutlej on or about the 26th of July. H.M.'s 10th foot to proceed by the Raree on the 25th; the remainder of the Lahore column, composed of artillery, 8th and 52nd N.I. and 7th Irregular Cavalry (Wheeler's), to commence its march on the 20th, if possible. The 11th light cavalry crossed the river last night; the 4th troop 3rd brigade h. art. (Captain Anderson's), 51st and 72nd N.I. cross to-night (the 21st), and the 11th light cavalry, sappers, and pioneers, cross to-morrow night; and the whole move off from right bank in progress to Mooltan on the 20th or 21st. The weather is fearfully hot, but, although so late in the season, we have had scarcely a drop of rain."

Up to the 25th of July, however, it is said that the force had not moved from Lahore; that part of it which was proceeding from Ferozepore had crossed the Sutlej, to march down the right bank of that river, and it had been joined by a detachment from Lahore.

Considerable confusion seems to have prevailed at Ferozepore in consequence of the apparent indecision of the authorities at Lahore regarding the route which the troops were to take. The Delhi Gazette, July 26th, states that the march of the artillery from Lahore to Ferozepore had been attended with considerable loss of life. "A letter before us says:—'The Europeans who have just arrived from Lahore look like ghosts; they lost seven men.'"

Meanwhile the position of Major Edwardes is considered in some quarters rather critical. His army, termed a "rabble force," is attached to him only by personal considerations, and although Rajah Shere Sing and other Sikh commanders had joined him, with about 10,000 men, they were (except their sirdars) disaffected, and Major Edwardes was obliged to keep as sharp a watch upon their camp (situated about a mile from his own), as upon that of Moolraj, lest they should attack him or go over to the enemy. Rumours were in circulation that another action had taken place on the 15th July; that the allied troops had been obliged to fall back; but none of these rumours were credited. The last authentic advices left the allied forces (British, Bhawalporean, and Sikh) in the vicinity of Mooltan, Lieutenant Lake collecting beldars to commence the construction of batteries. A body of 2,500 Mooltanis were encamped opposite the allied camp; but Moolraj kept within his walls.

The inhabitants of the province generally appear indifferent to the cause of the rebellious Dewan, which is an important advantage to us, inasmuch as, if actuated by hostile feelings, they might be formidable antagonists.

The province of Mooltan is inhabited principally by Jats, the descendants of the Scythian invaders of India, who offered a fierce resistance to the Mahomedans, and since its conquest by Mahmood of Ghuzni, in 1026, it has repeatedly asserted its independence. In 1780, the immediate ancestor of Runjeet Sing made vain efforts to get possession of the fortress of Mooltan. Twenty years later, when the distractions began in the Affghan empire, upon which this province was nominally dependent, Runjeet Sing endeavoured to annex this and other dependencies of that empire to his growing dominions; but he was foiled by the skill and bravery of the Affghan governor, Mozuffer Khan. After reiterated attempts, he at length, in 1818, succeeded by a kind of chance. An Akali fanatic, inflamed with opium, led a few companions to attack the Affghan garrison, who, daunted by their audacity and oppressed by fatigue, gave way, and the place was won.* By the treaty of 1838, Mooltan was ceded by Shah Shooja to the ruler of the Punjab, who placed it under Sawan Mull, as Dewan,—a man of great ability and moderation. Upon his death (by the hand of an assassin), in September, 1844, his son, Lalla Moolraj, succeeded to the Dewannee.

The Punjab generally was tranquil. Inquiries are still going on into the late conspiracy at Lahore. Two sepoys of one of our native regiments have been hanged, and the names of eighteen or nineteen men now with the force, and one or two native officers, are known, who were privy to it. Several arrests had taken place of minor Sikh chiefs who had been discovered from the papers of the Gooroo to have been implicated in the plot. Amongst them are Jowahir Sing, a native of rank; Sirdar Cheyte Sing, a high Sikh chief, but not of the Durbar; a banker in the city, and the vakeel of General Khan Sing, who went to Mooltan with Messrs. Anderson and Vans Agnew. A letter has been discovered containing the plans of the conspirators and the parties to be employed; the plan was to detain and imprison Vans Agnew and Anderson (not murder them), on their arrival at Mooltan, and Dewan Moolraj was to raise his standard; on the force at Lahore being weakened by the moveable brigade being detached against Moolraj, a rising was to have taken place. Letters from the Rani, and some from Moolraj, have been also found, distinctly proving the complicity of these parties. An itinerant Bhae, named Atcham Sing, who has been crusading the country, trying to stir up the soldiery, having made his appearance at Peshawur, was seized by order of Major Lawrence.

The Mofussilite learns by a letter from Calcutta that some change will take place in the government of the Punjab during the ensuing cold weather, Lord Dalhousie being reported to be dissatisfied with the present arrangements.

At Cabul, Dost Mahomed was still engaged in preparations for his hostile march to Balkh, but it was surmised that he would not carry out his plans. Yar Mahomed of Herat had advanced to a place called Laush, on the high road to Candahar, and laid siege to the fort. He had invited the Candahar sirdars to help him, but they, not regarding his near approach with complacency, had privately aided the chief of Laush to beat off his assailant. These sirdars, after fighting among themselves about the division of territory and revenue, have at length made an arrangement, by which Kohun Dil Khan is to keep possession of Candahar and his brothers are to be pensioned off.

A kassid from Cashmere to Cabul is said to represent the rule of Maharaja Goolab Singh as very hard; and that a chief named Shere Mahomed Khan is about to raise the standard of rebellion against Goolab. Some European officers had arrived at Cashmere.

At the Nizam's capital, General Fraser has resumed his office of resident, and there were expectations of some important improvements being sanctioned by the Indian government. In the meantime, financial disorder has reached an extreme point, and even the pensions of the Nizam's own family are stated to be two years in arrear. Among the changes reported to be in contemplation in the territories of the Nizam; is a very comprehensive reduction of the contingent, resolved on (it is said) at the interview between General Fraser and the Governor-General. This reduction will extend to a large diminution of staff appointments, and a disbandment of one regiment of cavalry. The total retrenchment will amount to between six and seven lakhs. The local officers of the Nizam's army are in great perturbation at the prospect of being pensioned.

The local incidents at Calcutta are few. The never-ending topic of the Union Bank affairs still predominates. It appears that it has been found necessary to modify the scheme of the income assessment, by omitting the condition precedent to the release of a shareholder, that 15 lakhs should be realized before his exemption, and it is now resolved that 20 per cent. should be paid within two months. The subject of the misappropriation of moneys of the Commercial Bank of Bombay has produced some strong measures; Mr. L. Clarke having by his report affixed blame to Mr. Abbott, the then secretary, Mr. J. R. R. Campbell, and Mr. J. S. B. Scott, the broker employed by the Union Bank in disposing of the Commercial Bank's bills, and having recommended that Mr. Scott should be prosecuted, the latter has been advised that Mr. Clarke's letter is a libel, and is about to commence a civil action against him. In the meantime, a part of the debts due to the bank are sold by the sheriff, and its remaining property is threatened with the same fate. The out-turn will thus be small, and the deficiency claimable against the solvent shareholders far greater than they anticipated.

The Englishman reported that the Governor-General was seriously ill; we are glad to find this statement denied, though his lordship was not well.

In the domestic news from the subordinate presidencies of Bombay and Madras we find little to notice. Advices from Goomsoor, which reach to the 22nd of July, are favourable, affording ground for hope that, with care and vigilance, no recurrence of the abominable rites will take place this year. An outbreak had occurred in H.M.'s 84th regiment, at Secunderabad, in the course of which a Goa priest was attacked, and his chapel pulled down by some of the soldiers. The Spectator states that a court of inquiry has been held at Secunderabad to ascertain the causes of the outbreak, and that the discoveries made by the court shew the Rev. Terence MacSwiney (a Roman Catholic priest) and his brother (not yet in holy orders) to have been the ostensible instigators and directors of the outrageous proceedings of the soldiery.

An insurrection appears to have broken out in the interior of Ceylon, which was viewed with some alarm. A strong force was despatched to the island from Madras, on the requisition of Lord Torrington, and this demonstration of power, with the explanations given by the Colonial Secretary to a deputation of Kandian chiefs, respecting certain new taxes on guns and dogs and the enforcement of personal labour (the origo mali), would, it was hoped, put down the insurrection, which had proceeded so far that the insurgents had proclaimed a king, and, mustering in considerable numbers, had committed several outrages.

Singapore papers contain a notification announcing that her Majesty's colony of Labuan would be open to settlers and other immigrants after the 1st of August, and that all persons well and peaceably disposed, residing within the colony and its dependencies, shall receive the protection of the laws as subjects of the Crown of Great Britain. Labuan is to be a free port, without any duties on imports or exports, and without any tonnage or anchorage duties on vessels of any description.

BENGAL.

CIVIL SERVICE BONUS FUND.

At a meeting of civilians held at Simla on the 14th of June, 1848, to consider the plan proposed at Agra, and circulated to the civil service by Mr. Denison, the secretary, the following gentlemen attended:—Mr. G. H. Smith, the Honourable J. C. Erskine, Messrs. H. G. Astell, C. Le Bas, W. Edwards, W. Wynard, W. Ford, and R. H. Greathed; Mr. G. H. Smith was requested to take the chair. The following resolutions were then passed:—

1st. The meeting approve generally of the proposition made at Agra for establishing a bonus fund for the acceleration of promotion.

2nd. The majority of the meeting, without pledging themselves to any particular scheme, are willing to subscribe to any well-considered fund that may hereafter be established with a view to the above object.

3rd. The majority of the meeting are agreed that the bonus should be claimable by all who have signified their adherence to the fund.

4th. The meeting propose that a committee be formed at Agra for the purpose of receiving such schemes as may be submitted to them, and of basing on them such rules as may seem to them best, to be submitted to the service at large for their approval.

5th. The majority of the meeting propose that the following gentlemen be requested to form a committee for the above-named purpose, and that Mr. Denison be requested to act as secretary to the committee, Messrs. Boulderson, Robinson, Allen, Edmonstone, and G. Riddell.

6th. The meeting presume that the share to be paid up in the event contemplated in No. 4 of the vote paper circulated by Mr. Denison is to be paid by the whole of the subscribers to the bonus fund, and not by those only who are promoted.

7th. The meeting beg to forward to the committee the following suggestions:—"The grand object to be attained by the scheme being an additional inducement to men, eligible to retire, to retire quickly, the meeting think it a sine qua non that the amount of bonus should decrease proportionally as men remain after their twenty-five years service; and that after twenty-nine years, should cease altogether;" this suggestion was concurred in by the majority of the meeting.

8th. It was suggested by the chairman, and concurred in by some members of the meeting, that the object contemplated by the above suggestion would be met by a rule that the balance of fine payable on obtaining an annuity should be made good by the bonus fund; a self-adjusting process by which those retiring earliest would benefit most, and vice versa.

9th. As there are some members of the service who will in all probability succeed military men, and as their promotion is in no way influenced by the fund, i.e. the military men have no inducement to retire sooner through its instrumentality, and the civilians getting promotion only get it as they would if no fund existed; it is suggested that the committee take such cases into their consideration, with a view to obviate the losses these men would suffer without obtaining equivalent rapid promotion.

10th.—The meeting see no sufficient cause for the exclusion, in vote 2 of Mr. Denison's circular, of provisional governor, and member of council; or of residents, secretary to Government of India, and officers who may be called to fill other lucrative appointments, and suggest to the committee that the subscription shall be payable on their promotion by all who have joined the fund.

11th.—The meeting suggest that the whole service N. W. P. elect a committee, resident at or near Agra, and that the committee now proposed take steps for the election.

12th.—The meeting suggest that the Agra committee request the Government N. W. P. to allow members of the civil service to send and receive letters regarding the proposed bonus, free of postage, on the public service.—Delhi Gazette.

PLEADERS IN THE COURTS OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

The class of pleaders in the courts of the East-India Company are not, as the term "pleader" may popularly denote, solely advocates; advocates they are, but they are also legal draughtsmen; they draw the plaints, pleas, and other written proceedings, and besides do the duties which in English practice belong to the attorneys. There is no technical law to prevent the pleader also being the general agent in the cause as well as the legal agent; and the pleader often, in fact, fills three characters: that denoted by his name; that of vakeel, which properly means attorney, and denotes an inferior kind of legal agency; and that of agent or muktear. The Act No. 1, of 1846, opens the office of pleader

"to all persons of whatever nation or religion," subject only to the following restriction, viz.; that no person shall be admitted a pleader unless he has obtained a certificate that he is of good character and duly qualified for the office. But barristers are excepted: they are entitled as such to plead in the Sudder (chief) courts of the East-India Company. If, however, a barrister chooses, as some have done, to establish themselves in these courts, to exercise the miscellaneous function of pleaders, it would appear that they would be subject to the same rules of the court as the pleaders are. By this Act the pleader is allowed to settle by private agreement the amount of his fees or remuneration; but adverse parties under a decree for costs are only to be charged according to the rates fixed by an old Regulation, and which are graduated according to the value of the matter in litigation, and varying from five per cent. to one per cent., but restricted in the aggregate to 1,000 rupees (100*l.* sterling.) As barristers are allowed to practise only as such, it would appear to follow that all the essential rights and privileges of their status are preserved to them; and therefore that their remuneration retains the character of a quidam honorarium, and cannot be made the subject of bargain, nor enforced like that of the pleaders by suit or action. We state these propositions as inferences. If this were the plan for expressing our opinion, probably it would be in favour of the principle of allowing all remuneration to be the subject of bargain, as really the most economical to the suitors and public, and not at all derogating from the honour of the profession, according to any just theory or standard of morals, and adapted to put an end to illegitimate bargaining in India, where the professional rule is, 'make money any how you can.'—Calcutta Review.

BRIGADIER STACY.

THE present mail brings intelligence of the death of this brave veteran at Neemuch, on the 18th of July.

Brigadier Lewis Robert Stacy, C.B., A.D.C. to the Queen, was colonel of the 43rd regiment of Bengal Light Infantry, and commanded the Meywar field force. He was a cadet of 1804, and had resided ever since in India, a period of nearly forty-five years. He distinguished himself greatly on the return march of the British troops from Cabul, at the battle of Maharajpore in 1843, and at that of Sobraon in 1846. In the latter action, in which the British army stormed the very strong intrenchments of the Sikhs, defended by 30,000 of their best Khalsa troops, and a formidable artillery, Stacy's brigade was appointed to commence and head the attack, and, upon the fall of Major-general Dick, at the beginning of the action, the command of the division devolved upon him. This gallant officer conceived that his services, during the difficult negotiations with the Khan of Kelat, which he brought to a successful issue, had not been properly appreciated and suitably rewarded by the Government; and he drew up, and recently published, a narrative of his services, in a frank and soldier-like style, which, as a history of three active years of his life, and a striking portrait of native manners in Beloochistan, possesses considerable interest.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ARRIVAL OF THE MAIL FROM LONDON.—The Bombay express, with a portion of the mail from London, June 24, was delivered in Calcutta on August 3. The Bentinch arrived on the 5th August with a mail from India of the same date.

TRADE OF CALCUTTA.—Mr. Wilkinson's Commercial Annual gives a mournful report of the trade of Calcutta during the past year. The net decrease in the value of imports for the past mercantile year, 1847-48, on a comparison with those of the preceding year, is Rs. 1,07,52,159, and the net decrease in exports Rs. 1,15,09,249. The decrease on merchandise imported was Rs. 78,65,153, in treasure Rs. 28,87,001, together as above Rs. 1,07,52,159; on merchandise exported Rs. 1,23,03,569, from which an increase in treasure of Rs. 7,94,320 being deducted, shews the net decrease on exports, as already stated, Rs. 1,15,09,249. The articles on which the decrease is principally manifested are, in imports, Twist, in which the decrease is Rs. 36,29,448, Cotton Piece Goods Rs. 59,32,224, Bullion and Specie, Rs. 28,87,001; in exports, Silk Korahs Rs. 8,82,745, Indigo Rs. 17,34,116, Sugar and Khaur Rs. 5,71,620, Raw Silk Rs. 21,49,222, Opium Rs. 61,80,805. In the amount of decrease the trade with Great Britain shares, in imports 66.6 per cent., exports 46.1 per cent.; China, imports 8.3, exports 24.8; France, Singapore, and North America, amongst them 10.7 in imports and 12.7 in exports. In the trade with Great Britain there was a decrease on merchandise imported of Rs. 83,87,306, and an increase of treasure imported of Rs. 13,54,876; net decrease in imports Rs. 70,32,930. In exports there was a decrease of merchandise to the amount of Rs. 41,66,396, and an increase of treasure Rs. 11,03,228, leaving a net decrease of Rs. 30,63,167. The loss to the revenue from sea customs, caused by the falling off in trade during the year, was Rs. 2,92,722-0-3, of which Rs. 1,90,401 was in import duties, and Rs. 1,02,330 in export.

INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—The report of the Directors on the India General Steam Navigation Company to the Proprietors, at their eighth half-yearly general meeting, held on the 17th July, 1848, states,—"Your Directors, in meeting you on this occasion, have the pleasure to lay before you the accounts in detail of the Company's working for the past half year, duly verified by your auditors, and they note with much satisfaction the minute made by those officers, wholly unsolicited, as to the state in which they found the accounts, vouchers, &c. Before entering upon the present position of the association, your Directors take the opportunity of remarking, that since the last general meeting in January, it has been considered right to call for the 7th instalment, and give notice of the dates on which the remaining instalments of the capital stock of the Company would be required. The motives which led your Board to adopt this course are explained in a communication put forth with the call, and circulated to every shareholder in the Company. The gross earnings of the boats for the past half year, as far as the accounts received shew, amount to Co.'s Rs. 1,07,817-4-1. This sum, although in advance of the previous half year's earnings, by nearly twenty thousand rupees, is far less than your Directors anticipated would have been shewn when they last met you, owing to the derangement of all commercial affairs in Calcutta, which have seriously interfered with the up-country trade. Your boats have on several occasions been forced to proceed with considerably less than full cargoes; in addition to which, this disadvantage, the navigation of the Ganges during the last dry season has presented unusual impediments and difficulties, entailing a serious loss of time to the boats, and consequently additional expense."

THE UNION BANK.—On the 12th July, the Chief Justice made absolute the rule that had been obtained to set aside the verdict in the case of R. T. Allan v. Russell, secretary of the Union Bank. This was an action upon five Union Bank post bills, three of which had been issued for the purpose of raising money for the use of the bank, and the other two for the accommodation of Cockerell and Co., and Colville, Gilmore and Co., respectively, for the purpose of enabling them to carry on indigo factories before then mortgaged by them to the bank. Mr. Hastie had paid full consideration for the whole to Messrs. Hickey, Bailey and Co., who had paid the amount to the bank, and the plaintiff held the bills as his agent, he having delivered them endorsed in blank to the plaintiffs, who were his attorneys after they fell due. For the defence it was contended that Mr. Hastie had full notice of the deed of partnership by which the issue of bills of this nature were expressly forbidden; and that the plaintiffs, being merely his agents and receiving them after due date—stood in the same position. The plaintiff contended that Mr. Hastie never signed the deed, and had no notice of its provisions. It was, however, proved that though he had refused to sign, yet his name had been regularly registered as a proprietor at his own request, and his name had been entered in the memorial—and that he had given the instructions under which the shares were subsequently transferred from his name to that of another party. At the trial on the 21st of June, the Chief Justice expressed his opinion that Mr. Hastie must be treated as a shareholder, the Act not requiring signature to the deed before entry in the memorial, and that the plaintiff stood in the same position, having received the bill after due date, this case standing on the same footing with Ferguson v. The Bank: a verdict was, therefore, entered for the plaintiff pro forma, with leave for the defendant to move to set aside the verdict on the above grounds, that the points might be fully argued. A rule nisi had been obtained accordingly for the plaintiff to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a verdict entered for the defendants.

In his judgment, the Chief Justice observed: "It is the duty as well as the interest of every shareholder in concerns of this kind, not to sanction any, even a slight deviation from the partnership deed in an unauthorized manner. Such deviations grow by little and little, and in time every security may be practically impaired. The inferior officers seeing how lightly their superiors regard limitations on their authority, may follow the pernicious example to fatal lengths, and mere breaches of trust may lead to the commission of crimes."

In the Supreme Court, on the 29th of July, in the case of "the Secretary of the Union Bank against Messrs. W. P. Grant, W. R. Lackersteen, John Storm, John Lyall, Henry Holroyd, and Rustumjee Cowasjee," Messrs. Grant, Holroyd, and Rustumjee, suffered judgment to go by default, and a verdict for Rs. 4,20,000 (the amount claimed) was given against the others. This amount was claimed on the balance due in respect of certain advances made by the bank to the defendants, who united together in September, 1846, to form a club for the purchase of Union Bank Shares.

OPIMUM.—An extraordinary rise in the price of opium from Rs. 900 to more than 1,100, the chest, took place on the morning of July 31, in consequence of private advices by the Ann of an increase of the price in China.

THE MESMERIC HOSPITAL at Calcutta is likely to be re-opened, Government providing furniture, instruments, and medicines.

THE MAULMAIN CHRONICLE contains an account of an attempt to smuggle a large quantity of silver on board a ship, the exportation of silver being against the laws. After about 9,000 ticals had been conveyed on board, information was given to the authorities, who promptly seized the whole, and sent it, as usual, to the King of Ava.

A CASE recently came before Baboo Russomoy Dutt, being an affidavit of debt against Mr. Keelan, a music master, due to McFarlane and Co., one of a series of debts incurred by the defendant in Calcutta, and for which he had been arrested at the Sandheads. The Englishman gives an amusing account of the articles he has thus obtained, among which were 13 dress and 9 surtout coats, a few handsome ball vests, 11 dozens of cambric fronted shirts, 13 dozens of "unmentionables," 24 pairs of opera boots, and a few little flannel comforts (as he calls them), of too domestic a nature to be dwelt upon.

TIKHOOT.—A letter from Tirkoot reports that the anticipations of the indigo planters are almost overthrown by the long draught, and that in many estates there will be no produce this year.

SULSAMUDEAH FACTORY.—The Englishman relates one of the most extraordinary instances of daring violence that have lately occurred in Bengal. The particulars are as follows.—A body of five hundred Assamese, acting under the orders of a baboo of Calcutta, entered and plundered the Sulsamudeah factory. Information was immediately forwarded to the magistrate of Poocha, who arrived just as the men were departing; they, however, turned and attacked him, and killed his darogah and two peons in his presence, and then decamped. There is a current proverb that when the Governor-General's carriage breaks down, the road is immediately repaired, and the saying may be applied with equal force to such a case as the present. The plunderers, when caught, will doubtless be visited with exemplary punishment, inasmuch as they have ventured to attack the chief authority in the district.

COLONEL SLEEMAN will, it is reported, shortly resign his office of commissioner of the Saugor and Nerbudda territories, to which an officer of high standing will be appointed.

CAPT. RADISAY, joint deputy commissary general, the Delli Gazette states, is expected in the north-west to take the place of Lieut. Col. Thompson, the latter officer having received an intimation from government that his employment with a field force is considered inexpedient, while he is under such heavy arrears of accounts, exceeding, it is believed, a crore of rupees—one million sterling.—Friend of India.

SIR F. CURRIE has applied for six young men as assistants for the Punjab. Mr. Fendall Thompson, assistant to the magistrate at Agra, and Mr. Lushington, jun., of Moradabad, are among those selected. The other names have not yet transpired, but the salary is fixed at Rs. 600 per mensem.

CHOLERA has broken out Cawnpore, in some cases fatally.

COLONEL LOW, it is reported, is to succeed Col. Sutherland as Governor-General's agent for the Rajpootana states.

EXTRA COMPANIES IN THE INFANTRY.—Head-Quarters, Simla, July 1, 1848—His Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, deeming it desirable that but one practice should prevail in the distribution of extra companies in the infantry throughout the army, is pleased to decide that a regimental staff officer is not to be considered entitled to a second company, until every duly qualified officer, not a regimental staff, shall have had a double charge assigned to him.

HUSSAR SADDLES.—July 8.—The Governor-General of India in Council is pleased to sanction the introduction of "hussar saddles" and "cloth shabraques" in lieu of the "cavalry saddles" now in use with the native cavalry of this presidency. 2. The military board will take measures for supplying the new equipments to replace those of the present pattern, as soon as the latter have served the prescribed period, and are condemned in the usual manner. 3. The new equipments are not to be renewed under the periods laid down for saddles and their components in government general orders No. 361, of the 14th October, 1842, namely, five years. 4. With reference to general orders by his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, dated the 26th May, 1847, the cloth shabraque will be required to last three years before renewal.

YOUNG OFFICERS JOINING REGIMENTS.—Fort William, 29th July, 1848.—With the view of obviating the delay and inconvenience at present experienced in despatching, under the arrangement sanctioned in para. 5 of the G. O. No. 103 of the 27th March, 1846, young infantry officers, who have been temporarily attached to regiments at Benares, to join the corps to which they are permanently posted, the Right Hon. the Governor-General in council is pleased to direct that for the future, whenever an ensign doing duty at that station may be posted to a regiment above it, he shall, if entitled to the indulgence under the terms of para. 7 of the G. O. above specified, be required by the officer commanding the station, in communication with the post-master, to join immediately by dawk at the public expense.

2. Young officers posted to the regiments below Benares shall, in like manner, either be sent off at once by dawk to their destinations, or, at the discretion of the commanding officer, directed to continue doing duty at that station, until passage can be secured for them on the first available government steamer proceeding down the river.

MILITARY.—The Englishman states, that orders have been issued to all corps to recruit up to 800, and if above that number to maintain their complement, a measure which seems to overshadow some approaching movement.

COLONEL RICHMOND, Resident at Lucknow, it is said, will shortly quit India for England, and thus render vacant another important post.

FATAL ACCIDENT TO F. R. DAVIDSON, Esq.—We regret to announce from the Mofussilite the death of F. R. Davidson, Esq., collector and magistrate of Saharunpore, who, while playing with a Newfoundland dog, was pushed by the animal over precipice at Landour, and died in a few hours from the injuries received in the fall. Yet it is stated that the precipice was only about eighty feet, and it appears to have been a gentle declivity, for a friend of his ran down after him.

CAPTURE OF A GANG OF FORGERS.—A letter from Jahanaabad, in the district of Hooghly, dated 19th July, gives the following information:—"On the 4th instant we captured a member of a notorious gang of forgers of Oddygunge, Thanah Ghuttal. They are also proprietors of the corresponding shop in Baboogunge, Hooghly. The fellow's name is Jodoonath Ghose, and he was captured almost in the very act, together with one Damoder Patuck, a Vakeel of the local Moonsiff's court. Amongst other seals there is one purporting to be of Mir Jaffer Ally Khan, Viceroy of Bengal—it has been very well executed, and bears the following inscription—'Mir Mahommed Jaffer Khan Bahadoor, Mahabut Jung, Sooja ul Moolk, Hushamud Dowla, Fidbee Allumghire Badsha Ghazee, 1110—1113.'"

THE STEAMER PATNA was lying, on the 1st July, near Bhaugpore, in about eighteen inches water, the river having fallen as rapidly as it rose.

THE GRZLONG, Captain Wyse, left Cooley Bazar on the 5th of December, discharged her cargo at Liverpool, took in another of salt, and reached Cooley Bazar again on the 14th of July, having been seven months and nine days in making the voyage home and out.

A SUBSCRIPTION has been set on foot on behalf of the widow and family of Captain Chaplin, of the Nusser.

CONOLLY AND STODDART.—The following extraordinary paragraph appeared in the Bengal Hurkaru of July 12, from which paper it was copied into the Gentleman's Gazette of July 24.

"It will be highly interesting to some of our readers, and the friends of 'Conolly and Stoddart,' to hear, that an inhabitant of Bokhara has lately presented himself to Sir F. Currie, for the purpose of giving information concerning these ill-fated victims. He swears to have seen them alive fourteen months ago, and is ready to prove the veracity of his assertion, under promise of future remuneration, by returning to Bokhara and procuring their hand-writing, which, when delivered to Sir F. Currie, and attested to by their friends, will entitle him to his reward. He describes their situation as most woful, subject to the closest imprisonment, with a sight of Heaven only once a year, during which temporary release the informer obtained a sight of them." Fudge!

DINAPORE.—This neighbourhood has been visited with fearfully heavy rain. For ten days there was scarcely one hour's intermission, and I must confess that I began to feel sceptical, thinking that we were going to be drowned by a second deluge. This heavy and incessant rain has destroyed a great deal of property in the shape of houses, &c. I have just learnt also that the Bund of the river Soane has burst, destroying the Arrah road and several bridges.

THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONERS have, the Englishman states, chosen Mr. Becket as their clerk, on trial, the appointment to be confirmed on proof of his qualifications for the office.

LIEUT. SHOWERS has been appointed by the lieutenant-governor of the north-west provinces to the agency of Rajpootana till the orders of the Governor-General are known.

THE 4TH N. I.—The Delhi Gazette asserts that after the late action at Kineree, between the forces of the Dewan, and those of Edwardes, General Cortland found among the booty, the clothing of the 4th Regt. N. I., which had been taken in the beginning of the Sikh war on the road from Sukkur to Ferozepore.

PURNA.—The Calcutta Star informs us that the station of Purna having been almost carried away by the rising of the river Ichamutta last year, the residents applied to Government for an engineer to devise some means of restraining the current; but the stream is again rising, and some are fearful lest the whole station should be carried away.

THE NATMOO STEAM SAW MILL has been consumed by fire, with 500 tons of plank; the building was uninsured, and will, according to the Moulmein Chronicle, cause a loss of at least a lakh and 20,000 to the creditors of Cockerell and Co.

ACCIDENT AT BHAUGULPORE.—The following account of a serious accident at Bhauulpore has just reached us:—"Major and Mrs. Napleton, another lady, and two other gentlemen, having made an excursion in Major N.'s boat to visit the Patna steamer, were returning under all sail, when a sudden gust of wind capsized the boat and precipitated the whole party into the water. The accident would have proved fatal had not Captain Hall, of the Patna, and his chief officer providentially come to their rescue; one of the ladies was obliged to be pulled through the window of the boat, and she is much bruised in consequence. Happily all lives were saved."—Friend of India, Aug. 3.

THE INDIGO CROPS at Jessore and Purneah are likely to be good, the weather having been unusually propitious.

PROPERTY OF MOOLRAJ.—The Delhi Gazette states that the property of Moolraj confiscated at Lahore and Umritsur consisted of Rs. 4,500 (and a quantity of lead) at the former city, Rs. 640,000 in the hands of his Gomashata at Umritsur, and Rs. 31,000 with 2,000 gold ducats in trust with several bankers. We understood that these latter had explicitly denied the possession of any money belonging to the Dewan. But there can be little doubt that the property belonging to Moolraj in their hands greatly exceeds the amount returned, and they will be happy to avail themselves of the demand of the British Government, to refuse repayment to the Dewan, thus confiscating the sums for their own especial benefit.

OPIMUM.—The result of the opium sale, held July 11, was more favourable than the last; 1,705 chests of Behar sold at an average of Rs. 899-6-7, and 775 chests of Benares at Rs. 860-7-8.

THERE IS YET MONEY IN CALCUTTA.—The Bhaskar is extremely happy to perceive that Calcutta is not as yet altogether money-less. It is evident from the purchase of Pathara by Rajah Sutt Charan Ghosal Bahadur for Rs. 2,39,000, and from other purchases on the same day to the amount of Rs. 1,23,000, that commerce may ere long flourish again. The Bhaskar, therefore, recommends his countrymen to lose no time in making proper investment of their capitals.

KASHMERIAN ARCHITECTURE.—The lovers of antiquarian lore will be happy to learn that Capt. A. Cunningham, whose services in the cause of Indian archaeology are of the greatest importance, is at present engaged in drawing up an account of the Kashmerian architecture that will somewhat surprise the literati of the European world, who have been accustomed to the grotesque decorations and rude shape of the pure Indian architecture. We are assured that the Kashmerian columns are fluted, and have real capitals and bases. The temples have pediments too, and altogether there is said to be much more of Greece than of India in what will be proved to be really a new order of architecture. Our informant has ascertained that the temples, of which Capt. Cunningham has had drawings made by measurement, are, with their vast colonnades, quite as worthy of admiration as those of Pæstum. The great difference is the high pitch of the pyramidal roofs, which in Kashmere were made to throw off the rain. We are also told that Capt. C. has been successful in discovering the dates when all the temples (excepting one) were erected. Thus, the celebrated temple of Martland was built about A.D. 400, during the reign of Ranaditya, whilst its colonnade was not added until two centuries later.—Delhi Gazette, July 29.

MAHARAJ SINGH.—As a good deal has been said of Maharaj Singh, a short account of him may be interesting to our readers. He is a Sikh, and was formerly the Lagree or cook of Bhaie Bheer Singh, who, it may be remembered, was killed by the Sikh soldiery at what was at the time styled the battle of Nourungabad, nearly opposite Hu-ree-ke puttun, during the administration of Rajah Heera Singh. Bheer Singh (of whom a further account may be found in Major Carmichael Smyth's recent account of the Punjab) had joined Utter Singh Sindanwallah on his return from our provinces, when he made an attempt to raise a disturbance. It was in this fight that Court's Battalion got the soubriquet of "Gooroo-mars." When Bheer Singh was wounded he told his followers that his powers had descended on his servant (now become his disciple) Maharaj Singh, and bid them take him up and throw him into the Sutlej, which was accordingly done. Maharaj Singh was concerned in the Prema affair, since which he has been lying "perdu" skulking about the country. It is only since the Mooltan affair that he has again appeared. While near Deenanuggur he was joined by a party of Sikh horse who had been disbanded some months ago by Maharajah Goolab Singh, and

He appears to have been of Sikh villagers flocked around him, people wherever he moved. He gave out that, in the vour, he had the power of making a little food serve for large multitudes. To support his pretensions he became lavish of all he received, and thus secured a considerable amount of influence. All the vagabond Fuqueers and some of the disbanded soldiery flocked to his standard. With money and time he might have become dangerous, therefore the authorities did well to lose no time in hunting him from his various haunts.—Delhi Gazette, June 24.

HINDU HOLIDAYS.—Of all the Hindu Holidays, says the Gyandharpan, the Dole, Chorack, and Ruth, are the most mischievous. The tomfoolery, indecency, and loss of life on these occasions loudly call for a reform. The editor seems to believe that such practices are inconsistent with the true spirit of the Shastras, and, therefore, exhorts the bigotted portion of his countrymen to take care betimes, and prevent the necessity of Government interference in the matter. That Government is nothing loth to interfere is evident from the order for removing the sacrificial posts from before the shrines of Kâli.

BHAUGULPORE.—The following is an extract of a letter from Bhauulpore of 8th instant:—

"The Indigo prospects in this neighbourhood are most ruinous, the rise of the Ganges, eight feet in twenty-four hours, regularly inundated the low lands; they do not expect beyond twelve annas of last year. The Patna continues high and dry, and will require six feet rise to get off; her passengers are all up here."—Englishman, July 14.

MESSRS. HUGHESDON AND CO.—In the Insolvent Court, July 10th, Messrs. Hughesdon and Co. came up for their discharge. They were strongly opposed by Messrs. Eglington, McLure, and Co., but their discharge was given, the Chief Justice remarking on the suspicious and reprehensible character of certain sugar transactions, and concluding, "there has been secrecy and suppression in the dealings between Mr. Heugh and Mr. Hughesdon, and on the whole much that I think deserving of condemnation, but not sufficient to justify me in committing Mr. Hughesdon to jail as a fraudulent debtor."

PROMOTION OF ASSISTANT-SURGEONS.—A contemporary says, that the promotion of nine assistant-surgeons to the rank of full surgeons is shortly to take place, and that it will include Dr. Vos, who will thus lose his appointment in the marine department, unless it is otherwise determined, in consideration of that gentleman's numerous patients. We should suppose that the government would be more inclined to give consideration to the claims of some of Dr. Vos's brother officers, who would probably like to take a turn at the presidency.—Hurkaru.

A GENERAL COURT-MARTIAL was to assemble at the main-guard in Fort William (says the Englishman) for the trial of Lieut. Conroy, who has been absent at Bombay for nine months without leave. It moreover appears that this gentleman answered an application from the secretary of the Bengal Military Club for arrears of subscription by sending a challenge. The secretary was unwilling to let Mr. Conroy pay his shot in this way, and told him so, when the gallant officer proceeded to the club and gave the secretary a horsewhipping. This is the fourteenth court-martial this year on officers of the Bengal army.

MR. THEOBALD, secretary or clerk to the Commissioners for the Improvement of the Town of Calcutta, has resigned his place, and the papers contain an announcement that application for the appointment will be received up to Tuesday the 18th July.

TIRHOOT.—A letter of the 16th July from Tirhoot states that the indigo manufacture had been progressing favourably in that district since the 25th ultimo, and that the produce was generally good, the rise of the rivers having done no injury to the plant.

MR. PLOWDEN.—We learn that Mr. Plowden, late of the Bengal Cavalry, and recently dismissed by sentence of a general court-martial, has been appointed by Mr. Mansell an assistant in the Accountant General's office. Lieut. Russell, also formerly in the service, has been employed as an assistant in Mr. Bushby's office.

THE LATE MR. CURNIN.—A private subscription has been opened for the widow of the late Mr. Curnin; it has amounted to Rs. 6,000.

THE 8TH REGIMENT LIGHT CAVALRY, stationed at Loodheanah, received orders on the 18th of July to march the following evening, Wednesday, for Ferozepoor, to take the place of the 10th regt. light cavalry proceeding towards Mooltan.

A LETTER FROM LAHORE, dated the 17th of July, mentions that the 52nd regt. N. I. are ordered to hold themselves in readiness to proceed to Mooltan in the place of the 73rd N. I.; Lieut. Pollock, assistant to the resident, was to accompany the Ferozepore force as the political.—Englishman.

CAPT. MACPHERSON.—The Mafusilla of the Bhawalpore force, was mentioned in the action of the 1st at Mooltan.

TRANSFER OF STATIONS.—There is a report at Jubbelpore to the effect that Jhansi, Nagoda, and Nowgong are to be made over to the Madras troops.

THE SHIP NASSAR, 600 tons, Captain Chaplin, bound to the Mauritius, was upset on the outer floating light, on the 16th July. Mr. Ransom, of the Magna pilot vessel, succeeded in saving nine of the people, who state that the ship was struck by a heavy squall and instantly capsized. They could give no account of the commander and officers. Mr. Spence, the pilot, and the landsmen reached Kedgeree on a part of the wreck, after being twenty-four hours in the water. Mr. Porteous, of the Treasury, was, we regret, among those supposed to be drowned.

COURTS MARTIAL.

2ND LIEUT. HUNTER RICHARDSON FARNDEN, AND 2ND LIEUT. HERBERT HENRY VAUGHAN, 1ST BATT. H.M. 60TH RIFLES.

Head-Quarters, Simla, July, 1848.—At a general court-martial holden at Kurrachee, on Monday, April 10, 1848, Second Lieut. H. R. Farnden and Second Lieut. H. H. Vaughan, H.M.'s 1st batt. 60th royal rifle reg., were arraigned on the following charge, viz:—

For disgraceful conduct, unbecoming the character of officers and gentlemen, in the following instances, viz:—

First instance.—In having, at Kurrachee, on or about February 4, 1848, taken possession of a pair of boots, the property of Dhoky, boot and shoe maker, valued at four rupees, and by their subsequent conduct endeavoured to defraud the said Dhoky of the value of the said boots.

Second instance.—In having, on or about February 9, 1848, when the superintendent of bazaars at Kurrachee was investigating the circumstances set forth in the first instance of the charge, with fraudulent intent denied having purchased any boots from the aforesaid Dhoky, well knowing that they, Second Lieutenants Farnden and Vaughan, had taken possession of a pair of boots, the property of Dhoky, valued at four rupees, without paying for the same.

Third instance.—In having, at Kurrachee, on or about February 11, 1848, when before a court of inquiry, of which Captain Yonge, of H.M.'s 60th royal rifle regiment, was president, with fraudulent intent adhered to the statements they, Second Lieutenants Farnden and Vaughan, had made to the superintendent of bazaars at Kurrachee, on the 9th inst., well knowing that they, Second Lieutenants Farnden and Vaughan, had taken possession of a pair of boots, the property of Dhoky, valued at four rupees, without paying for the same.

Additional charge preferred against Second Lieut. H. R. Farnden, and Second Lieut. H. H. Vaughan, of H.M.'s 1st batt. 60th Royal Rifle regt.—For conduct unbecoming the character of officers, in having, on or about February 12, 1848, on the road from Muggur Peer to Kurrachee, ill-treated and beaten, and permitted their attendants to abuse, Soolimain Namdar Khan and Shaik Calloo, bakers and camp followers, who, in endeavouring to avoid such ill-treatment, lost three rupees and fifteen annas, and several articles of clothing.

Finding and Sentence upon Second Lieut. Farnden.—Not guilty of the first instance of the charge. Not guilty of the second instance of the charge. Not guilty of the third instance of the charge. On the additional charge, guilty. To be placed at the bottom of the list of 2nd lieutenants in the regt., from this date, and to be severely reprimanded.

Finding and Sentence upon Second Lieut. Vaughan.—Guilty in the 1st instance of the charge. Guilty in the 2d instance of the charge. Guilty in the 3rd instance of the charge. On the additional charge, that he is guilty.

The Court does adjudge him to be cashiered.

Revised Finding and Sentence upon Second Lieut. Farnden.—Not guilty of the 1st instance of the charge. Not guilty of the 2d instance of the charge. Not guilty of the 3d instance of the charge, and also acquit him of the preamble of the charge. On the additional charge, guilty, with the exception of the words and "Shaik Calloo."

To be severely reprimanded, and to lose one step in the regiment from this date.

Revised Finding and Sentence upon Second Lieut. Vaughan.—Guilty of the 1st instance of the charge. Guilty of the 2d instance of the charge. Guilty of the 3rd instance of the charge, also of the preamble of the charge, guilty. On the additional charge, that he is guilty, with the exception of the words, "and Shaik Calloo."

To be cashiered.

Confirmed.

(Signed) GOUGH, Gen. Com.-in-Chief, East Indies.
Head-Quarters, Simla, 5th July, 1848.

Remarks by the Right Honourable the Commander-in-Chief in India.—His Excellency Lieutenant-General Sir W. Cotton, G.C.B., is requested to report for the information of the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief to the military secretary and to the Adjutant General of Her Majesty's forces in India, the date on which the sentence, awarding Second Lieutenant Vaughan to be cashiered, is published to Her Majesty's 60th rifles, from which date that officer's name is to be struck off the returns of that regiment.

The officer commanding the 60th Rifles will administer a suitable reprimand to Second Lieutenant Farnden, and order him to return to his duty.

Second Lieutenant Farnden's name is henceforth to be inserted, in all returns, next below that of Second Lieutenant B. Ward, of the 60th Foot.

LIEUT. WILLIAM HENRY HOWARD ELLISON, H.M. 86TH FOOT.

Head-Quarters, Simla, July 6, 1848.—At a general court-martial holden at camp, near Deesa, May 30, 1848, Lieut. W. H. H. Ellison, of H.M. 86th Foot, was arraigned on the following charge, viz:—

For highly disgraceful conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, in the cantonment near Deesa, on the night of April 13, 1848, struck Ens. Bowen, of the same regiment, a blow in the face.

Finding.—Guilty of the charge preferred against him, with the exception of the word "face."

Sentence.—To be cashiered.

Not confirmed.

(Signed) GOUGH, General,
Commander-in-Chief, East-Indies.

Head-Quarters, Simla, July 1, 1848.

Remarks by the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief in India.—The Commander-in-Chief has abstained from confirming the sentence, because the court had, at the commencement of this trial, become incompetent by the loss of a member, and its proceedings are thereby invalidated. Lieut. Ellison is to be released from arrest, with a severe and public reprimand, and an admonition to be most careful henceforward to refrain from personal violence, which among officers and gentlemen cannot be tolerated.

LIEUT. WILLIAM SHAND, 69TH BENGAL NAT. INF.

Head-Quarters, Simla.—At a general court martial assembled at Meerut, on Thursday, June 22, 1848, Lieut. W. Shand, 69th N.I., was arraigned on the following charges, viz:—

1st. For having at Meerut, on January 18, 1847, been drunk at the mess dinner of the regiment, notwithstanding that, in a public letter to the adjutant, dated January 1, 1847, he had promised his commanding officer that he would "never again appear in a state of inebriety at the mess of the regiment, or any other public place;" his inebriety on several previous occasions at Meerut, between December 24, 1846, and January 2, 1847, having been then overlooked in consideration of his writing that letter.

2nd. For having failed to redeem his solemn pledge to resign the service, from June 1, 1847, made in a public letter to the adjutant of the regiment, dated January 21, 1847; in consideration of which pledge charges for his drunkenness at mess on the 18th of that month, and on previous occasions, were not preferred against him, and leave was granted to him in General Orders, dated February 10, 1847, to proceed to Calcutta, preparatory to submitting an application to resign the service; he, Lieut. Shand, having, instead of so doing, obtained furlough to Europe on medical certificate, granted to him in Government General Orders, dated February 26, 1847.

Finding.—Guilty of both the charges preferred against him.

Sentence.—To be dismissed the service.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) GOUGH, General,
Commander-in-Chief.

Head-Quarters, Simla, July 12, 1848.

Remarks by the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief.—The sentence is to take effect from the date on which this order may be published at Meerut, of which a report is to be made to the adjutant-general of the army, and to the assistant-adjutant general at the presidency.

COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

The prospects of commerce at home continue most discouraging. While money remains easy—the home trade sound—and the Bank well stocked with bullion, the energies of trade are paralysed by the continued ferment in Continental Europe, and growing alarm as to the issue of the republic “experiment” in France. The East-India houses are in as depressed a state as ever—and rumours prevalent of failures continue to prevent any restoration of confidence in those connected with the East.

These gloomy accounts are sincerely to be deplored, coming, as they do, after so long a period of unparalleled losses in all branches of business—while our commerce is suffering from the want of a proper adjustment of the balance of trade—when our Export trade is contracted within unwholesome limits, reducing exchange to the level of a bullion remittance, and destroying the fairest prospects of a healthy market for Imports.

The Export market during the week has not undergone many changes. It is, too, early, since the express arrived, and commercial advices by it were so meagre, that the effect of the news has not been seen yet—our remarks have reference to previous transactions. The inducement to ship produce, from the difficulty of securing good bills, has been great, but, on the whole, there was scarcely so much done, as during the previous week, partly from the expectation of the Home news. Sugar has been in general and large demand, all sorts commanding full rates. In Silk transactions are not great, but the enquiry preparatory to purchase was good. Corahs do not move, and lower prices would be taken—Saltpetre has been in better enquiry for England. Rice, too, has attracted some little demand from the state of freights. Shell Lac and Lac Dye sell, for America in good quantity. Safflower sells slowly, being too highly priced. Linseed is in good enquiry—and Jute of good quality is wanted.

Money remains very easy, and accommodation on good security is readily procurable in the bazaar. Company's Paper continues to improve.

The state of the Opium market during the week has been one of high excitement. Neither the Dido, nor the Mor, brought the much desired China news, which came at last per Rob Roy on the 2nd inst. The previous rumours were confirmed, Patna Opium having been really 720 drs. and when the mail left was quoted at Canton 695 drs. These accounts have caused a further rise here, and on the 2nd, the highest point yet, or 1,220 rupees was reached. Subsequently there have been hourly fluctuations, and quotations are now Rs. 1,160 a 1,180, there having been few real transactions, pending the sale on the 9th—all accounts agree in stating that the rise in China is purely the result of gambling operations. The impetus given here to Opium dealing and gambling by the large profits a few have secured, promises to have a most pernicious effect. It is reviving all the latent spirit of speculation in this drug, which few natives of wealth are without, and which has only been in abeyance for a time, from the effect of the great Opium case of last season.

Exports from 1st Nov. 1847 to 3rd August, 1848, are Chests.	Fy. Mds.

Great Britain	20,363	78,195
France	2,933	10,532
North America	1,116	3,551

Other places	56	214
Total	26,179	98,276

Manchester Cottons continue in steady demand, and the sales of the week are again large. Glasgow Muslins shew more reported sales, but arising more from the anxious wish of holders to sell than from any revival of actual demand. Mule Twist is a shade lower for 50 and 60, but the inquiry continues fair, though sales have not been quite so extensive. For Metals there has been a little more lively demand,—accounts have been received, announcing rain at last in the Upper Provinces; and the fears of a famine being over, dealers are coming forward more freely. A large sale of Copper has occurred, and more would be sold, if holders would take present rates. Spelter is kept down by the home quotations, and Iron, having lately been largely sold does not move with much spirit, for most sorts.

IMPORTS.

COTTON GOODS.—The sales of Manchester Cottons continue large. The accounts from the Upper Provinces announce that the rains had at last set in, fears of the consequences of drought had been allayed, and the market has a firm appearance. There is no change for the better in the value of Glasgow Muslins, though holders have been more anxious to realize. Turkey Red Goods, with which the market has been quite overdone, continue at wretched prices. The demand for Prints is also on a much reduced scale this season, and although imports are small there are few styles for which fair prices are obtainable.

SHIRTINGS.—40-inch Grey Shirtings of all qualities are in extensive demand, and sales are at full prices—midding cloths are most wanted. There is more doing in White Shirting, and sales to some extent have been made.

JACONETS.—Bleached of all qualities continue in good demand, and sales are at full prices. Grey are in but moderate inquiry at present, and with a good supply at market from recent arrivals, prices have declined.

MULLS.—The common qualities No. 3 to 5 continue in some inquiry, but we have not heard of any sales. Fine 45 inch Mulls are saleable, but at rather lower rates.

LAPPETS.—More sales are reported this week, but chiefly owing to holders being desirous to realise their advances as there is scarcely any demand.

LAPPET SCARFS.—A further large sale has been made at continued low prices.

BOOK MUSLINS.—A sale is reported as low as 14 annas for No. 1. There is no sale for the Burmah qualities, nor can any better state of affairs be expected, until the Rangoon trade is again opened.

TURKEY RED GOODS.—The prices of Twills 25, 33, and 36 inch continue very low; six-quarters are more saleable, and eight-quarters will also sell, though the value is reduced by some late low sales. Cambrics are at very low rates, but 33 inch is saleable at these. Mulls have been sold from Co.'s Rs. 5 to 5 7 per piece. The stock is larger than was ever known, and price proportionately low. Fancy goods 20 or 5 yds. are little wanted.

PRINTED GOODS.—There continues to be little of the active demand usual at this season. There is a demand for fine German Turkey Red Chintzes. Bengal and Neutral stripes are wanted, and some descriptions of Couch Chintz are also in fair inquiry.

MULE TWIST.—The sales this week are moderate, prices being but indifferently supported for all counts, while No. 50 and 60 are decidedly lower.

TURKEY RED TWIST.—Common Dye has been sold, but the general demand is dull.

COPPER.—A large sale of South American Ingot has been made at Sa. Rs. 34-10 per fmd. Sheathing is wanted at last Co.'s Rs. 38-4, but holders will not sell. China Copper cash have brought Co.'s Rs. 21 per f. md. There is a better enquiry for all kinds of Copper.

SPLTER.—Remains dull, a few small sales are being made.

LEAD.—A large sale of Pig is reported at Sa. Rs. 7-15 per f. md.

IRON.—The demand for English Bar is not brisk, fresh goods are saleable at about Co.'s Rs. 3 per f. md.

The transactions in other Metals are not important.

BEVR.—The price of Bass and Allsopp's remains Co.'s Rs. 60 per hhd. but demand is very languid.

SALT.—The price of Liverpool stored continues at Co.'s Rs. 80 per 180 hhd.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BANGALORE.—The Athenaeum of July 15th asserts that the state of feeling among the officers at Bangalore has been at length noticed at head-quarters, and supports his assertion by the fact that several officers have been sent from Madras and Cannanore to attend the court-martial upon Dr. Mount. Its members are not to be taken from those resident at that station.

THE KOTAGHERY TRAGEDY.—A report of the investigation into all the circumstances of the Kotaghery tragedy (see p. 498) has been for some time in the hands of the advocate-general, to whom it has been referred by the Government, with a view of ascertaining if there be grounds for proceeding criminally against any of the parties who have been so long under the surveillance of the police. The suspicions are so grave, and the doubts so perplexing, from the nature of the contradictory statements given in evidence, that it may not be deemed advisable to bring the inculpated persons to trial, in which case no authorized publication of the facts would be given to the public. There are a thousand minute circumstances which arouse the most dreadful suspicions. There are records left by the unfortunate woman which speak of the agonies endured by a lost soul, oppressed with the weight of guilty secrets. There is enough of moral guilt proved to visit on the head of the chief actor the state's sternest displeasure, and the world's bitterest scorn, but too much, we fear, is left in the shade, and too many interests are at stake to allow us to cherish a hope of further progress in the work of discovery.—Athenæum, August 5.

MR. MACLEAN, of the Madras civil service, and member of the Revenue Board, accused (see p. 527) of being illegally concerned in money transactions with the Nawab of the Carnatic, has been fully acquitted on all the counts of the indictment against him.

SECUNDERABAD.—We had an affray at this station on the 12th instant, but happily no bloodshed; and, as I have reason to believe that garbled and exaggerated statements have gone abroad, I send you a true version to the best of my belief of what occurred on the above evening, between the Catholics of H.M.'s 84th foot on the one part, and the bricks, tiles, timber, images, crowns, ornaments, &c. of a little Catholic chapel in or near the lines of the 8th native infantry on the other. The chapel in question was erected some five or six years ago by one of the Irish priests, with the aid and co-operation of the 36th native infantry, which then occupied the lines wherein the 8th regiment are now located. Some of the Catholics of the 8th have attached themselves to the Goa priests at Secunderabad, and claimed the right of introducing them into the chapel, such being, as they alleged, in their lines and in their possession. To prevent the intrusion of the Goa priest, the Right Rev. Dr. Murphy ordered that the chapel should be locked. The Rev. Mr. Fernandez, the Goa priest, complained to the brigadier that he was locked out. The superintendent of police, under the brigadier's orders, wrote a letter to the Rev. Mr. McSwiney, Catholic chaplain, commanding that the lock should be removed. On McSwiney's refusal to comply, further correspondence took place between him and the assistant-quarter-master-general, and he had a personal interview with the brigadier. The brigadier set aside his right over the chapel, on the ground that no one without authority had a right to interfere in the native lines. On returning home, Mr. McSwiney informed the brigadier by letter that the Right Rev. Dr. Murphy was about to forward a representation to Government, and pending a reply must decline delivering up the key. The door was opened on the 11th by the assistant-quarter-master-general, who sent the lock to Mr. McSwiney, but he again locked up the chapel and applied to the superintendent of police for peons to protect the place pending the reference which had been forwarded to Government. The door was again opened by the authorities on the morning of the 12th, and peons were placed to prevent Mr. McSwiney's further entrance. On the evening of that day some men of the 84th regiment, in conjunction with such of the 8th native infantry as were unfavourable to the pretensions of the Goa priest, demolished the buildings. The authorities here have, it is said, reported to Government that the parties to this outrage were headed by the Rev. Mr. McSwiney and the Rev. Mr. Quinn, but it is only generally believed amongst all unprejudiced persons that these clergymen, so far from countenancing or encouraging the rioters, did their utmost to prevent the destruction of the chapel, and it can be proved that McSwiney's brother went to the lines and succeeded in driving away a party and preventing their doing injury to the chapel, until they were met in returning by another and a larger party of the 84th, who would not listen to persuasion, and, rushing onward, levelled the chapel to the ground in a few moments. I also happen to know that the priests lost no time in hastening to the spot, but were too late to prevent the work of demolition. The authorities here affect to be in great fear of an affray between the two regiments, but there is not the slightest apprehension of that. It is purely a religious dispute, and those who are ill-disposed to the Catholics have made the most of a matter that is regretted by all moderate parties of either persuasion.—United Service Gazette, July 25.

THE 31st N.I. arrived at Madras from Vellore on the morning of Aug. 7.

MR. GEORGE NORTON.—The Madras United Service Gazette mentions that Mr. George Norton is expected to resign the advocate-generalship of that presidency, and return to Europe.

THE NABOB'S DEBTS.—The appointment of a committee for the adjustment of the Nabob's debts is understood to have been recommended to the home authorities by the executive at Madras.—Spectator.

THE NIZAM'S CONTINGENT.—We understand that strong reports are still prevalent that the local officers of the Nizam's contingent are to be pensioned off volens volens.—Telegraph, July 22.

LOSS OF THE GREENLAW.—Extract of a letter from the master attendant of Coringa to Captain Biden.—"Having returned yesterday afternoon from the wreck of the barque Greenlaw, Captain Owen, I have now to inform you of the particulars. The Greenlaw from London, last from the Cape, bound to Calcutta, ran ashore on the coast about three-quarters of a mile north of the wreck of the John Fleming, at 1.45 A.M. on the 10th instant, steering at the time between north and N.N.E. with a whole sail breeze from the eastward, intending to make Coringa Light; the surf was high at the time, and hove the vessel broadside on. There were three ladies and two gentlemen passengers, and 5 ayahs: the captain and crew got safe on shore in the long boat, except three seamen drowned; two by the upsetting of a boat, and one by throwing himself overboard to swim ashore. The mainmast cut away, which took with it the fore and mizen topmasts, the sailors' chests, and part of the captain's and passengers' baggage were thrown overboard and washed on shore. One young lad going to join the pilot service, I believe, lost every thing. The cargo consists of copper, iron, flour, and sundries. The vessel has sunk considerably in the sand, and the sea was breaking over the stern; she lies now with her head in shore, and if the weather continues so rough as it is just now for a few days, there is no hopes of saving any of the cargo, as she is considerably inside the outer surf; should the weather be favourable before the cargo gets covered with sand, some property might be saved. This is an unfortunate affair; the captain has lost most of his private property."

Master Attendant's Office, July 28th, 1848.

Coringa, 13th July, 1848.

Passengers per Greenlaw, were Mrs. Owen, Miss Brede, Dr. Spear, Mr. Thomas, Mr. Goodman, one European female servant, and five native ayahs. Ship's crew, three officers, three midshipmen, boatsmen, carpenter, and eleven Europeans.

COL. C. W. YOUNG.—The Spectator gives currency to a rumour that Lieut. Col. C. W. Young, formerly of the 14th reg. N.I., is to be restored to the service and to undergo his trial before a general court-martial.

THE 51st N.I.—The removal of the 51st N.I. to the Straits has been countermanded; the corps will, in all probability, remain at Madras until next year, and then relieve the 21st at Singapore.

DR. ALDRED, an assistant surgeon, has been dismissed the service pursuant to a sentence of a general court-martial. His offence was abusing, threatening, striking, and kicking Lieut. Nelson, of the 2nd E.L.I. The court-martial recommended him to mercy, but Sir George Berkeley has not thought proper to give effect to the Court's wishes.—Athenæum.

CAPT. VON STRENG, of H.M.'s 15th hussars, has appeared before a board of medical officers at the presidency, convened to report upon his state of health.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

ARMY.

July 25.—With the sanction of the Right Hon. the Governor General of India in Council, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to direct the promulgation of the following rules, supplementary to, and in continuation of, those under the head of "Army" (as revised by G. O. G. No. 251 of 1846), in section 9th of the code of pay and audit regulations.

The general officer on whom the command of the army devolves on the occurrence of a full vacancy is designated provincial commander-in-chief, and is entitled to a military secretary on a monthly staff salary of Rs. 445 As. 12 P 4, with allowance for one horse (Rs. 30) (in addition to to pay and full regimental allowances) and to an additional aide-de-camp, on the allowances of an aide-de-camp to a general officer.

When, during the absence beyond the limits of his command of the commander-in-chief, it is considered expedient to appoint a commander of the forces, the senior general officer of the staff is to be so appointed, and will receive an addition of Rs. 875 per mensem to his own staff allowances, but no additional staff will be allowed to him.

This cancels the rule in para. 1 "Absence," in section 9th of the code of pay and audit regulations as regards commanders-in-chief hereafter appointed.

During the absence beyond the limits of his command of the commander-in-chief of the army, on private affairs, or on medical certificate, he is subject to a monthly forfeiture equal to the expense caused by his absence,—viz., Rs. 875, the amount claimable by the officer exercising temporary command, as a commander of the forces.

MOVEMENT OF TROOPS.

The following movement is ordered:—

The 34th regiment of light infantry, from Vellore to the Presidency, preparatory to embarkation on field service to Ceylon.

EXAMINATION OF ARMS.

Aug. 8.—The Right Honourable the Governor in Council directs the publication of the following instructions to be strictly observed in the examination of arms, whether by a committee of survey or otherwise.

Parties intrusted with the examination of arms will have before them as a guide either a new arm or one that has been but little in use.

The arm to be examined will be taken to pieces, and each part, barrel, stock, lock, and bayonet, be examined separately.

Should the barrel be found, reduced in thickness, or unequal in thickness, or indented, or bulged, or be in any way objectionable, it should be stated in the report and it should be tested, by firing from a fixed stand to ascertain the degree of accuracy of its line of fire, the result should also be stated in the report.

Should the stock be found cracked, on the shaft near or in line with the pin holes or near the lock plate, or worn away round the lock plate, or shrunk from the barrel, or warped, or the brass mountings much reduced, or the pin or bolt holes enlarged, or the stock be in any way objectionable, it should be stated in the report, and an opinion be offered whether it can be rendered serviceable by repair.

Should the lock plate be found bent or broken, or the pan broken, or any of the interior fittings require to be exchanged, or the lock be in any way objectionable, it should be stated in the report and the lock should be tested by firing and the result should also be stated in the report. If flint locked arms are under examination, care should be taken that the flint is so fixed as to ensure a good production of fire and free opening of the pan, these may generally be obtained by fixing the flint so as to strike the hammer one-third of its length from the top.

Should the bayonet socket or blade be broken, or cracked, or much bent, or the bayonet be in any way objectionable, it should be stated in the report and an opinion be offered whether the bayonet can be rendered serviceable by repair.

The report will be forwarded to the military board as prescribed by paras. 12 and 13, Section IV. Ordnance Regulation, who will issue such instructions thereon as they may deem desirable and call for indents either for the exchange or repair of arms as they may consider necessary.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ARRIVAL OF THE LONDON MAIL.—The Acbar, with the London Mail of July 7, reached Bombay Aug. 3.

LUSUS NATURÆ.—On the 2nd inst. a native female was delivered in the Civil Hospital at Poona of twins, still-born. The infants were joined together side by side from the shoulder to the hip. This extraordinary freak of Nature consisted of two heads, one body, three arms—one on each side and one behind,—and four legs.—Bombay Times, Aug. 5.

SATARAH.—There appears, according to the Bombay Telegraph, to be much doubt among the people of Satarah as to their future rulers; the people earnestly desire to be under the immediate rule of the British Government.

THE COURT MARTIAL on Mr. Von Geyer, late editor and proprietor of the Scinde Gazette, has resulted in a verdict of guilty, and a sentence of transportation for seven years.

THE BARQUE "MINERVA."—Accounts reached Bombay yesterday of a mishap which has befallen the barque Minerva, which took her departure from this port on the 14th instant, bound to Liverpool. We learn that the vessel met with very boisterous weather and was obliged to come to anchor on the 18th near Kelva Mahim. She had been driven thirty-five miles to the northward of Bombay by a very heavy gale from the S.W. by S., and as it was found impossible to weather the land on either tack, and the ship was drifting fast on shore, the captain resolved on letting go his anchor, which he did with 200 fathoms cable. The vessel continued to drive, and it was consequently thought advisable, for her safety and that of the crew and cargo, to cut away the foremast and maintopmast. This measure had the desired effect of arresting her further progress. It was expected, however, up to the 25th (till which day the violent weather continued, that the vessel would founder, or part from her anchor, every moment. On the date mentioned, there was a lull, and the captain and crew took the opportunity of getting on shore about noon at Kelva Mahim, from which place the ship was distant about five miles. When the Minerva was left, she was making a good deal of water; and early assistance was thus deemed imperatively called for.—Telegraph, July 29.

THE RESIDENTS OF MUTTRA are following the laudable example set them in many of the small stations of the N.W.P. (Shajehanpore, Dhera, Saharanpore, Mainpore, &c.) and are seriously thinking of building a church for the use of the Christian community. Resolutions were passed at a meeting held to take the proposition into consideration, and as a proof that the residents of Muttra are in earnest, they have already subscribed Rs. 2,080 amongst themselves.—Delhi Gazette, July 26.

FREIGHTS.

As the present prices of Cotton offer no inducements for shipments to England, rates may be considered merely nominal. The chief part of the vessels loading are going to China, and in consequence of the number on the berth the rate continues depressed. Our quotations are to London 2l. 10s.; to Liverpool, 2l. 15s.; to China, per Candy, Rs. 6½.

THE MONEY Market continues easy, and Government Securities have advanced in value.

COTTON YARN.—Stocks are small, and we do not look for any decline.

DYED YARN is inquired for; improvement has already taken place.

METALS.—British Bar Iron declines in value, stocks are small from the low prices in England, large quantities are anticipated. Swedish Bar is much inquired for, it is scarce. In other kinds we have no change to notice. Copper, Sheathing, Raised Bottoms, and Tiles, have slightly advanced in value. Steel and Lead remain as last quoted, while Spelter has experienced further advance.

BEER.—Alsopp's remains steady, and we have heard of sales to the extent of 275 bds. at Rs. 70. In Bass the same quantity is reported as sold at the same price.

SPIRITS.—Brandy has advanced in value again, and a further advance is probable. Gin Rs. 3½ per gallon at good request. Rum, 4,000 gallons, sold at Rs. 1½.

EXPORTS.

COTTON WOOL is unchanged in value.

OPIMUM has advanced owing to the advices from China, and the very small stock on the spot. Prices Rs. 1,550 to 1,600 per chest.

CEYLON.

INSURRECTION IN THE INTERIOR.

The Lady Mary Wood, P. and O. Co.'s steamer, arrived at Madras yesterday, with despatches to the Governor in Council of Madras, from Lord Torrington, conveying a requisition for troops from this presidency, for the purpose of quelling an insurrection which is said to have broken out amongst the Kandians in the interior of Ceylon. A meeting of the council was held yesterday, and three companies of H. M.'s 25th regiment, consisting of 330 rank and file, are to embark this morning; 220 in the Lady Mary Wood, and 110 in the Hugh Lindsay; the whole under the command of Col. Young. An express was also despatched to Vellore, with orders for the 34th N.L.I. to march instantly for Madras, where they will arrive on Monday next, and embark on the following day, the 8th instant.

There is a mode of arousing the hostility of a people, which is equally efficacious when adopted in Paris, and in the Kandian jungles. It is to interfere with their common and ordinary privileges, to harass them with petty exactions, which add perhaps in reality little or nothing to the wealth of the exchequer, whilst they are capable of being converted into means of almost unbounded oppression. Of this kind were the miserable taxes on guns and dogs, and the bungling ordinance for compulsory labour on the roads. So great was the opposition to those enactments at the outset, that a man of discretion would have seen the propriety of retracing his steps, but Lord Torrington has the vice of courage exerted in the wrong direction, and perseveres as unwisely as he originates. There will of course be much loss of life amongst the natives, and some loss of national pride amongst our own countrymen, but there is not the slightest doubt that the insurrection will be put down by the military.—Athenaeum, Aug. 3.

By the Seaforth we have received the Ceylon Times of the 4th of August. The private reports of the previous evening were unfavourable,—a rising in Doombera, the focus of the last rebellion, being apprehended; several influential head-men, who had hitherto held aloof, having proceeded to raise the country. The public authorities are of opinion that the outbreak is nipped in the bud, by the gallant actions of our troops at Matelle and Kornegalle; yet, far-seeing people, well acquainted with the character of the Kandians, feel that the calm is only the prelude to an organized resistance, only to be put down by the most decisive and vigorous exertions.

Advices had been received of two further attacks on Kornegalle, which were repulsed by the rifles.

The firm of Gibson, Read, Davidson, and Co. of Ceylon has failed. This is the oldest house in Ceylon, and its downfall is owing to the depreciation in the value of its estates. The liabilities are 100,000l.

CHINA.

Governor Barham had visited the northern ports in H.M.'s steam ship Medea.

Piracy continues rife in the neighbourhood of Shanghai.

The schooner Spec, Captain Cole, has been seized by H.M.'s brig Childers, Captain Pitman, on account of her having fired upon and captured a junk, killing and wounding several of her crew, under the impression that she was a pirate.

A young Chinaman educated at one of the Missionary schools was convicted at the criminal sessions of the Supreme Court, of having forged the signature of the Registrar of the Court to a bank cheque, and sentenced to seven years' transportation.

There was much sickness at Hongkong, especially in the garrison. The 95th regiment between 31st May 1847 and 1848, had lost by death 44, and between 1st June and 20th July, 31. The effective strength of the regiment, which landed 565 in May 1847, was on the 20th July only 266.

NETHERLANDS INDIA.

DUTCH EXPEDITION AGAINST BALI.

The Dutch expedition, which threatened to annihilate the Balinese, has ended in a most signal defeat and hasty retreat; a result by no means surprising when a powerful enemy is underrated and despised. The entire expedition, which left Bezoekoe between the 28th of May and the 3rd of June, comprised four war steamers, two brigs of war, and a number of smaller armed vessels. The troops, consisting of above 3,000 men of all arms (not including the marines and sailors, and about 600 coolies), left Bezoekoe in 12 transports; the whole expedition was under the direction of Major-General J. J. C. Van der Wijck, commander-in-chief, who embarked in the Hecla war steamer. During the general's operations on shore, the direction was in the hands of Lieut. Col. Staerck. The attack on the stronghold, Jaga Raga, tried the strength of the Balinese, and exhibited the bad commissariat arrangements of the Dutch, who, in the moment of apparent victory, were compelled to make an inglorious retreat, accompanied with a heavy loss. Some idea may be formed of the determined character of the engagement at Jaga Raga, from the fact of the Dutch having expended in two hours and a half the whole of their ammunition, consisting of 300 grenades and 80,000 rounds of ball-cartridge; while on the part of the Balinese the most "ferocious" resistance is said to have been offered. The Balinese relied on their skill as riflemen, and the number of officers killed and wounded affords some proof of their ability; had their artillery (they discharged an abundance of grapeshot) been as skillfully directed, it is believed that scarcely a Dutch soldier would have escaped.

An order has been sent from Batavia recalling the expedition.

MADAGASCAR.

The news from Madagascar given by the Bourbon papers is interesting. The Queen Ranavooloo had given formal orders to the authorities at Tamatave to receive M. Page and Admiral Dacres with all the honours due to their rank. As soon as M. Page, commanding the Reine Blanche, received information of this, he went to Tamatave, where he was to wait the arrival of the English vessels under Admiral Dacres. It seems that Mr. Lartelle, a Frenchman at Queen Ranavooloo's court, has been using his efforts successfully in favour of French and English interests. It is to be hoped that when a hearing is obtained, matters will be brought to a decisive settlement at once.

The Hebdomadaire, a Bourbon paper, says, "It is certain, from the latest intelligence we have received from this island, that the Hovas are tired of the present state of things and are anxious for a change of the internal policy of the government, for this policy has only served, since the interdiction of all foreign commerce, to render money very scarce in Madagascar, where nothing can be sold for want of an outlet. This arises from the politics of the country, which are not very well understood. The queen stands between two opposing influences, the conservative and liberal parties, which bring about between them a deplorable state of things. The leader of the first party is Reinhard, the most influential member of the Malgache cabinet, and whose opinion carries great weight with the queen; the other has for its chief the prince Bakoto Radama, son of Ranavooloo, who is nineteen years old. This young man is more intelligent than Radama, the heir presumptive to the crown, is already more civilized than his father, and wishes to see the agriculture and commerce of the country both made free. He is also ardently desirous of religious liberty. Reinhard, on the contrary, would have the military authority go before commercial influence, and thinks that since France and England ventured to take arms against the power of the Hovas, the interdiction of trade with Madagascar must fall heavily on the two foreign governments. It is in the presence of these two hostile parties that M. Page and Admiral Dacres appear off the east coast of the island, in the hope of destroying by diplomacy the barrier hitherto insuperable which exists between Madagascar, Mauritius, and Bourbon."—Bengal Hurharu, July 3.

LITERARY & SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

The Calcutta Review (just received) contains a valuable article on the Geology of India, in which a summary is given of what is known in this department of physical science relating to that country, commencing with Southern India.

It begins with a sketch of the mountain ranges, including the Eastern and Western Ghats; the table-land enclosed by these chains, which has a general inclination to the eastward, determining the drainage of the country in that direction (its surface studded with detached hills, usually naked masses of granite or gneiss); and the rivers, the Godavery, Kistna, Toombuddra, Cauvery, and Pennaur, which escape through singular fissures in the Eastern Ghats, illustrating the correctness of Mr. Hopkins's theory of the origin of the cross valleys of the world, running as they do nearly at right angles with the elevation line.

The strictly geological details are singularly free from complication. Hypogene schists, penetrated and broken up by prodigious outbursts of plutonic and trappean rocks, occupy, according to Capt. Newbold, by far the greater portion of the superficies of southern India. They constitute the great bulk of the Western Ghats, from between the latitudes of 16° and 17° N. to Cape Comorin; and form the base of the Eastern Ghats. They are partially capped and fringed, in the Western Ghats, by laterite; and in the Eastern, by sandstone, limestone, and laterite. In a line drawn diagonally across the peninsula from Nagpore, by Bijapore, to the western coast, the hypogene and plutonic rocks disappear, emerging only occasionally, under one of the largest continuous sheets of trap in the world, and which extends to Central India.

Gneiss is usually found lowest in the series; next to it, mica and hornblende schist; actinolite, chlorite, talcose and argillaceous schist and crystalline limestone. This rule, however, is by no means universal, for each of the rocks (crystalline limestone excepted) has been found resting upon granite. The strata are often found violently contorted; the dip, though very irregular, is usually towards the east in the western, and westerly in the Udigherry portion of the Eastern Ghats.

The most prevalent rocks are gneiss and hornblende schist. The composition of gneiss and of the other schistose rocks varies in different localities; all are highly feriferous. Statuary marble is very rare. Clay slate appears in no great quantity; blue roofing slate is rare.

The "primary geology" of Southern India has, therefore, nothing very remarkable about it, beyond the gigantic scale on which it is developed.

The fossil riches of the Silurian system are here inquired after in vain. The sandstone and limestone beds have not been seen south of the Salem break; but north of this boundary they cover a considerable area. The limestones are not entirely destitute of organic remains. An analysis of the dark blue limestone of Cuddapah has resulted in the detection of a certain quantity of volatile "extractive" matter, which gives the colour to the rock. A vein of coal has been found associated with shale at Kotah, and myriads of what appear to be microscopic foraminifera have been discovered in some of the chert veins of the limestone at Nannoor. The sandstones also afford traces of coal, and a few impressions of stems and leaves of plants have been detected in the Nagpore sandstone. A peculiar interest attaches to the sandstone on account of its being the matrix of the diamond. One general fact noticed, namely, that granite or basaltic dykes are invariably found intruding into diamond areas, helps Capt. Newbold to a theory of the formation of the gem,—that subterranean heat, acting upon certain volatile vegetable matter contained in the limestone, in addition to carbonic acid, drove off a portion in a gaseous form, with the superincumbent sandstone, and then caused its diamondization by a process similar to that of the dolomitization of limestone: the atoms of carbon, set at liberty, aggregated in the pores of the sandstone, and assumed a crystalline form.

The existence of a bed of shelly limestone has been discovered in the vicinity of Pondicherry. Their high state of preservation led those who first observed the shells to suppose them recent. The limestone beds in South Arcot and Trichinopoly yield large supplies of fishes and invertebrata, which are referred to the cretaceous period.

From Hyderabad towards Nagpore, on the north bank of the Godavery, amongst the Nirmul hills, and thence across the Wurda, to Hingan-ghaut, detached beds of chert and limestone have been found containing fossil freshwater shells. Many similar deposits are met with in connection with the great overlying trap.

No formation in India has attracted more attention than the singular rock called Laterite, by Buchanan, who correctly assumed its peculiarity to the East. The geographical extent of this rock invests it with great importance, and bears on any theory that may be formed as to its origin. It covers the western coast almost continuously, and for the most part up to the very foot of the Ghats, and from the south of Bombay to Cape Comorin. It is found in detached beds along the Coromandel coast, near Madras, Nellore, Rajahmundry, Samulcotta, and extends into Cuttrack. It caps the loftiest summits of the Eastern and Western Ghats; and some of the isolated peaks in the table lands of the interior. Laterite is found, in short, in innumerable localities in India, and is not confined to India proper, nor yet to the continent; it fringes the shores of Burmah, Malacca, and Siam, and has been seen on the coast of Sumatra and in many of the islets in the Straits of Malacca, "invariably occupying the same overlying position." The origin of this remarkable rock, which is a vexed question, is discussed at some length in the article.

Ascending to rocks of a very late tertiary, or even recent, period, there are beds of sandstone found on the eastern coast of the southern extremity of the Peninsula containing pelagic shells of species inhabiting the adjacent sea. It is this rock which stretches across the Straits to Ceylon, forming the remarkable barrier known as Adam's Bridge, which was elevated, in Capt. Newbold's opinion, simultaneously with the laterite. Similar strata are found in the southern portion of Ramnad, and in Tinnevely, as also near Cape Comorin and on the opposite coast of Ceylon.

Capt. Newbold describes as "older alluvium" certain beds of gravel and sand "which occur in such situations as not to be accounted for by the agency of existing transporting powers." At Condapetta, for instance in the Cuddapah district, is found a gravel bed which covers an area of several miles, and is principally composed of rounded fragments of trap, granite, and schistose rocks, which must have been transported from the distance of twenty or forty miles, intermingled with pebbles of quartz, jasper, and chert, and others from the adjacent sandstone and limestone. "In this gravel, intermingled with kunker and iron ore (the oxide), the diamond is found as a transported crystal or pebble, often fractured, and with slightly worn edges."

The curious sedimentary rock called Regur, or black cotton clay, which covers one-third of the surface of Southern India (and which has no known representative in Europe), is a valuable soil. Like laterite, it covers all rocks without reference to their age or composition, except some more recent alluviums. The absence of fossils from Regur is a fact not easy of explanation.

The calcareous substance known throughout India, we believe, as kunker, affords a remarkable instance of the compensating process of nature, by which the adaptation of the globe to the wants of man is everywhere kept up. "Great part of India is but sparingly supplied with true sedimentary limestone of the sort fit for the kiln, so that in this respect what may be called the ordinary geological resources of the country are insufficient for the support of a large population in an advanced stage of civilization." The deficiency is supplied by the substance called kunker, which is of tufaceous origin; it resembles the travertines of Italy more than any other European rock, differing from it, however, in many respects. Of 100 parts of kunker, upon analysis, 72 were carbonate of lime, 15 siliceous, and 10 alumina and oxide of iron. The process of kunkerization is probably going on now, wherever calcareous springs rise from the bowels of the earth.

A few facts are mentioned which bear on the principles of geology. The Puranas assert that the whole of the Coromandel coast has been raised from the bed of the sea, and the position of many post-pliocene beds along that coast gives credit to the story. Capt. Newbold thinks that the deposits in question were elevated by forces which are not yet at rest—although their action seems to be undulatory, raising some parts and depressing others, while intermediate tracts remain stationary. Whatever may be the date of the upheavals, certain tracts appear beyond doubt to have been submerged during the historic period. The level of the Malabar coast appears to have suffered disturbance. The island Vaypi, near Cochin, was thrown up from the sea in the fourteenth century, an event which "had so strong an effect on the minds of the Hindus, that they marked the geological phenomenon by commencing from it the new era termed Puduppa (New Introduction)."

The article concludes with a short biographical notice of Mr. Charles Turton Kaye, whose premature death is a severe loss to the geology of Southern India. He was engaged in the investigation of Indian palæontology in general.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, September 26, 1848.

Our great highways and thoroughfares of intercourse are, with the extension of railways and steam navigation, falling more and more under the direct control of bodies of monopolists and of the Government, to the exclusion of that principle of free competition which, in the old system of conveyance, exercised a wholesome and an effectual check upon avidity and caprice. In a comparatively short space of time, all the chief lines of travelling inland, and many by sea, will be at the entire mercy of railway and steam-navigation companies, which, in conjunction with the executive government of the day (subject to very slight legislative restrictions), will possess an almost omnipotent command over the transmission of our thoughts in writing, as well as the locomotion of our bodies. If monopolists were exempt from selfishness and the proneness to abuse power which is incident to mankind, and if the executive government were always alert to prevent or to remedy maladministration, we might cheerfully surrender the self-adjusting principle of the old system in exchange for the stability of the new; but as the reverse is in both cases notoriously the fact, the public, in other words the nation, must watch with vigilance, and govern by its potent voice, the workings of this mighty machinery.

Loud complaints are made, and most justly, at home and in India (as will be seen by the last Mail, p. 529), of the serious mischiefs occasioned to all classes by the suspension, since May last, of the Southampton line of mails to Bombay, despatched on the 3rd of each month, which has deranged our overland communication with India, inflicting injury, in various shapes, upon men in business, and especially upon social correspondence, which preferred this cheaper and securer route, as well as upon passengers.

In endeavouring to discover the real cause of this change, we are constrained, for want of a clear and intelligible explanation, to grope in the dark. If we were to open our ears to rumours, the cause would appear to be traceable to private motives; but, until we are better informed, we shall not assume that public convenience has in this instance been shamefully sacrificed to secret jealousies or secret jobs.

The notification issued from the General Post-Office, in March last, stated simply that "Her Majesty's Government had decided to discontinue the packet between Southampton and Alexandria;" and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whose explanations are not remarkable for their clearness, did not throw much light upon the subject, in the discussion upon the Vote in the Committee of Supply in the House of Commons on the 11th of August. The right hon. gentleman is reported to have said it was "a roundabout mail" (which can hardly be true), whilst Mr. Cowper affected to be astonished that Mr. Hume should blame the Government for saving 15,000*l.* by dispensing with two routes, "when one was sufficient:" and Mr. Hume was, or appeared to be, satisfied with this answer!

This mail was conveyed by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam-Navigation Company at a cost to the Government of 15,500*l.* per annum, and the ostensible reason for its discontinuance is the saving of that expense; but if it shall appear that, in addition to all the evils of personal inconvenience, injury to social and mercantile relations, and additional expense cast upon individuals, which are the results of this change, the pecuniary saving is very little, if any, it is obvious that the real cause is still to be sought.

We will begin with letters and newspapers. These must now be sent by the way of Marseilles, and letters, instead of paying 1*s.* per half ounce (the postage from Southampton), pay in France 1*s.* 10*d.* per quarter of an ounce; and newspapers, instead of paying nothing, pay a French postage of 3*d.* All this postage, be it remembered, goes not, as before, into the British treasury; the parties in this country and India who are subjected to this heavy additional burthen (which a writer in the Times estimates at 300*l.* or 400*l.* a year to his own individual firm) have the mortification of knowing that they are taxed to relieve the finances of France.

The Peninsular and Oriental Company conveyed from Southampton monthly from 80 to 100 boxes of letters and papers, which went direct, by way of Bombay, to the Upper Provinces of India; the revenue collected upon the correspondence sent by this channel, outward and homeward, must have been at least 8,000*l.* a year. Merchants' accounts, valuable law documents, deeds, &c., were thus conveyed (short abstracts, advising their departure, being transmitted by way of Marseilles), and, as before observed, all social correspondence took this cheaper and safer route.

Then as to passengers; they enjoyed by that mail great facility of travel between Bombay and Europe; whereas the inconveniences now sustained by passengers to and from Bombay (most of whom are officers in the public services, accompanied by their families) amount to a serious evil. We refer our readers to the extract from the Bombay Times in our last Mail for a catalogue of the incommodities to which passengers are doomed under the present arrangement, "the singularity of which," the writer epigrammatically says, "consists in its inconveniencing every one and benefiting no one."

The junior lay Lord of the Admiralty chuckled over Mr. Hume by telling the House of Commons that a Government steamer, now lying idle at Malta, would, under the new arrangement, take the mail on to Alexandria for nothing; that the only expense would be for coals. But, under the old arrangement, there would be no need of either coals or steamer; and if we are rightly informed, the steam-packets, bearing her Majesty's name, which ply between Malta and Alexandria, do not rank high in nautical estimation; and afford accommodations equally limited and costly.

The question of "saving" is put in a very strong, and we believe correct, point of view by a well-informed writer in the Times, to whose letter we have before referred:—

"With regard to the saving said to have been effected by the Government, it can be easily shewn by those capable of giving an opinion, that three steamers were amply sufficient to perform the service required in the conveyance of the mails twice in the month between Marseilles and Malta, and Malta and the Ionian Islands, but that to do the extra service of one voyage per month between Malta and Alexandria a fourth steamer is absolutely necessary. In confirmation of this, the Ardent was sent out by the Government especially for this extra service, and is at present engaged on it. If, then, this is the fact, the whole cost of this fourth steamer is an additional cost to the country. It is, I believe, correctly understood that the Government paid the Oriental Company 15,500*l.* for the conveyance of this mail the whole way between Southampton and Alexandria; but, let us ask, what is the cost of a Government steamer per annum? Between 20,000*l.* and 30,000*l.* It becomes evident, therefore, that the actual loss to the country by the discontinuance of this mail is not less than 10,000*l.* per annum."

Something more than a mere "arithmetical blunder" must be at the bottom of this change, which has stopped the only rapid and direct communication between Europe and the East, and we shall endeavour to find out what it is.

A correspondent has called our attention to another "galling grievance," of which Indian passengers complain, and which is thus stated in the Daily News :—

"When the liberality of Government enabled the Peninsular and Oriental Company to ply steamers between Suez and India, the parties now aggrieved concluded, and not unnaturally, that such an establishment was partly designed for their accommodation. This has not been the case, for the fares are so apportioned that nearly as much is charged for a passage from Suez to Ceylon, Madras, Calcutta, &c., and vice versa, as from Southampton to any of the ports in question. Thus, the entire fare from Southampton to Calcutta for a lady (desert transit not included), is 124*l.*, whereas from Suez to Calcutta, it is 112*l.* The advertised fare from Southampton to Alexandria is 40*l.*, so that, by this discriminating scale, passengers for Bombay are mulcted on this side of Suez, while those for Calcutta are caught and squeezed upon the other side of the Isthmus. The consequence is, a virtual prohibition of the overland route (via the continent of Europe) to the great majority of Indian passengers, unless a fatiguing route across the Suez desert may be dignified by this title."

NOTWITHSTANDING the discussion that has taken place, much misapprehension still appears to exist respecting the nature and extent of the guarantee which the Court of Directors of the East-India Company are prepared to give to the Indian Railway Companies for the encouragement of their respective undertakings. The Court have made a certain proposal, and it has been accepted by the railway authorities, not merely in a formal manner, but substantially, by complying with the preliminary condition of a large pecuniary deposit, and it is singular that any difference should now arise as to the meaning and intention of that which is the basis of the agreement. Yet this, it appears, has been, and it is said still is, the relative position of the Court of Directors and the Railway Boards.

A careful perusal of the terms and conditions appended to the letter addressed, by order of the Court, to Lord Wharnclyffe (and which apply equally to both railways), ought to be sufficient to remove all the difficulties which embarrass the question. It will then be seen that an interest, or dividend, of five per cent., was guaranteed upon a certain amount of capital for twenty-five years, "determinable under certain contingencies:" that, in case of an excess of profits above five per cent., a portion of such profits was to be appropriated to the reimbursement of advances made by the Court, and that the Court were to be secured from any payment beyond the amount of their guarantee, and protected from any participation in loss, should such be the result of either of the undertakings, by the following clause :—

"That such guarantee shall sooner cease and determine, in the event of failure by the Railway Company to complete the construction of the sections once commenced, or to maintain them when completed; in both of which cases the works shall be forfeited to the Government of India, the Railway Company alone remaining responsible for the debts incurred."

With this clause before him, can any reasonable man understand that, in the event of the railway proving unprofitable, the East-India Company, besides paying the five per cent. interest, are to be subject to further payments, to cover the expenses of working? The cost of the line is estimated at the sum over which the Court's guarantee extends, and if the guarantee were for a clear dividend to the shareholders of five per cent. under all circumstances, could there have been any necessity for contemplating the possibility of such an event as failure, or of expressing any doubt as to the maintenance of the lines when completed? But these contingencies are supposed and provided against. The debts, too, spoken of could not exist if it were intended that the losses were to be borne by the East-India Company.

It is, therefore, we think, perfectly clear, that the Court's guarantee is for five per cent. upon a certain amount of capital, thus creating a fund out of which a dividend may be paid to the shareholders. So long as the railways should be kept working, according to the specified conditions, the five per cent. on the advanced capital will be regularly paid by the Court, and should the railway pay only its working expenses, that dividend, five per cent., will be received by the proprietors; but in the event of the railways being worked at a loss, such loss must be borne by the Railway Companies, and the dividend be reduced accordingly, the reduction bearing a relative proportion to the loss. If the loss, for instance, were equal to 1 per cent. of the guaranteed interest, the dividend would then be 4 per cent.; if to 2 per cent., then the dividend would be 3, and so on.

The correctness of this interpretation is pressed upon us the more strongly when we consider that ordinary caution would suggest the propriety of securing the careful and economical management of these concerns: an unrestricted guarantee of five per cent., or any other amount, would have had a tendency to encourage recklessness and extravagance; common sense would dictate the necessity of a limitation, and we do not think that any illiberality or insensibility to the cause of improvement has been shewn in fixing it. The entire administration of the affairs of the Companies is to be confided to the projectors, who have estimated the probable profits of their undertaking at more than double the rate of interest guaranteed, and until the alarm and distrust arose, which, from various causes, have succeeded to the sanguine feelings not long since prevalent, their calculations were received with no small credit.

We trust that we have succeeded in shewing that only one construction can be placed upon the terms of the agreement. To these the Court of Directors have strictly adhered. Their object was the introduction of railway communication into India, and if they have erred in the choice of means, or been disappointed in the efficiency of those means by which they hoped the desired end would be accomplished, they have at least the merit of having intended to benefit India. At all events, they ought not to be held responsible for the erroneous impressions which have been made upon the public. Complaints, we think, should rather be made of those parties who, by a misrepresentation of facts (whether under the influence of ignorance, negligence, or obtuseness of perception), have created the delusion which it has been the object of our remarks to dispel.

In connection with the subject of overland communication with India, we invite notice to two Advertisements in the present Mail. One is from the Austrian Lloyds' Steam Navigation Company, which have commenced running steamers from Trieste to Alexandria twice a month, in correspondence with the Bombay and Calcutta line. For cheapness, as well as pleasure, the Trieste route is highly commended by the Bombay papers. The other Advertisement refers to the transmission of small parcels and periodicals to Bombay, the mode of conveyance being of an exclusive nature, whereby the articles, if sent to Messrs. Wheatley and Co. (late Waghorn and Co.), on the 1st of every month, are guaranteed to arrive with the overland mail of the 7th.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PARLIAMENT WAS prorogued on the 5th of September, after a session of unparalleled length, during which there was a prodigious deal of talk and very little done: verifying the old adage, that cackling hens lay the fewest eggs. A Committee of the House of Commons has confessed that the redundancy of talk has been the real impediment to useful action; the public voice has gone a little further, and proclaimed the members for Youghal and for Stafford as the notorious offenders in this way. The former, an astute lawyer, has, on this occasion, restrained his loquacity, and wisely said nothing; the other having, in anticipation of such a charge (we must presume) kept an exact record of the number of minutes he spoke upon every question, could not refrain, and has proved that he can be tedious without being prolix. Mr. Urquhart, albeit he has lived in the East, seems not to know that a bore is still a bore, though he bores us ever so little. What is to be done to remedy this growing public evil? Legislation is not a manual operation; it is performed, to some extent, by talking; but it may be overdone that way, just as a process of manipulation,—broth-making, for example,—may, we know, be spoiled by too much handwork. The French have a good rule, that of the clôture, by which the assembly can put an extinguisher upon talk, by saying, in effect, "We have had enough." The Americans have another good rule, whereby members have a limit prescribed to them; and the Speaker of our House of Commons has testified before the Committee that even the imperfect application of this rule occasionally to its members vastly improved the quality of their speeches. In Germany, the Frankfort Diet decide by vote whether a member shall continue to be heard, or even be heard at all. Why not adopt all these rules, and the nuisance would be at once and without inconvenience abated? It is sad that, whilst we travel by steam and correspond by lightning, our rate of legislation should be a snail's gallop: "l'un va en tortue," as M. Sganarelle expresses it, "et l'autre court la poste."

THE CHOLERA MORBUS.—The newspapers, metropolitan and provincial, for weeks past, have been filled with specifics for that dire disease, the cholera morbus. If the writers of some of these mischievous communications were to be credited, the cure of this malady is the simplest thing in the world. Pepper, opium, assafœtida, calomel, are sure to arrest its progress, though the prescribers do not agree as to the combinations or the doses. Nostrums are, in all cases, to be distrusted; but in the case of a disease the origin and nature of which still remain an inscrutable mystery,—giving rise to the most opposite theories, and suggesting antagonistical modes of treatment,—every rational man must perceive that they cannot but be, in most instances, pernicious. Some of them, like the pills to prevent earthquakes, may be merely harmless. Regular professional practitioners, though not sure advisers, are the safest.

INDIA USELESS TO US.—A sly correspondent of the Times has endeavoured to insinuate the uselessness to us, or rather the positive incumbrance, of our Indian empire, by shewing that, whilst our exports to the United States of America last year amounted to nearly eleven millions sterling, to British India they fell short of six millions. "How striking," he observes, "is the comparison!" No costly armaments are required to protect our trade with the former; whereas our colonies exact several millions for their defence, "and after all do not return in payment imports of sufficient value as equivalents." With regard to India especially, he lays down the doctrine that "the professed object of conquest must be the improvement of industry, and the further development of the resources of the country, without which the cost of every victory is an additional loss, and an increase to the burthens and sufferings of the British people at home." This letter is a good specimen of the narrow-mindedness, as well as ignorance, of the anti-colonial party. British India pays all the cost of the "conquests" of which it has been the theatre; British India is, in no sense of the phrase, a burden upon England; but because her hundred millions of people do not, in their present condition, require so much of our cottons and woollens as the twenty millions of Americans do at present, therefore, we ought to abandon India to Russia or to France. This is the effect of the doctrine propounded by the "liberal" free-trade advocates. By the way, the small amount of our trade with British India is a good practical comment upon the extravagant prognostications of these same advocates, upon the faith of which the East-India Company's commercial privileges were withdrawn, namely, that an open trade with India would create an effectual demand for three hundred millions' worth of our goods, and that "a morbid and defective system of commercial policy alone prevented the rapid growth of the trade between England and India!"

EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY.—At the first half-yearly general meeting of the shareholders of this Company, held on the 30th July, it was resolved unanimously, that the report be received, and the board be requested to proceed to discuss with the Court of Directors of the Hon. East-India Company the portion of the line to be commenced upon, and the terms of the contract relating to it, and that the result, together with full particulars as to the cost and traffic of the suggested line, be submitted to the proprietary, at a special general meeting, to be convened for the purpose of considering the same, together with the arrangements recommended in the report with regard to the forfeited shares.

THE CHINA MAILS.—The steam ship Maha, Capt. Lewis sailed from Southampton for Ceylon on the 5th inst.; she is intended to convey her Majesty's mails between that island and Hong Kong.

LIEUT. HERBERT BENJAMIN EDWARDS, of the 1st European regiment of Fusileers on the Bengal establishment, to have the local rank of major in the Lahore territories.—London Gazette.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS.—The Marquis of Bute has been engaged for the freight of stores to Bengal, and the Lady Nugent for freight of stores and conveyance of troops to Bombay.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Poems. By ROBERT ARIS WILLMOTT. Second Edition. London, 1848. Bosworth.

It is to us no slight or displeasing evidence that a taste for genuine poetry still lingers amongst us, to find that the gems contained in this small unpretending volume have allured a sufficient number of seekers to create a demand for a second edition. It is creditable to the readers of Mr. Willmott's pieces that they have discovered their merits. If real pathos, delicacy of sentiment, a vivid fancy, with large resources of accumulated knowledge and great powers of versification, found a claim to the often ill-bestowed title of poet, this gentleman has indisputable pretensions to it. We select the following apologue, one of the shortest pieces in the collection, as a proof that our commendation is not hastily expressed:—

CUPID IN THE CAVE OF DEATH.

Cupid's wings were faint, for he
Had roam'd by field, and bower, and sea.
Weaker the little traveller grew;
Faded more the tender blue
Of his sky-tinctured plumage; when,
In the green hollow of a glen,
A cave he enter'd:—All was night,
Save that, in flush of aureate light,
Along the rude deserted place
Stream'd the mild lustre of his face.

Soft languor round the wand'rer crept,—
Quiver and Bow unstrung—he slept.

What figure black, with noiseless tread,
Creeps ghost-like to the stranger's bed,
Still as snow on forest-river?—
His pale hand snatch'd the golden quiver;
For the bright arrows, dipt in dew
From fresh Elysian flowers, he threw
Six painted darts, with ghastly smile,
This careless dreamer to beguile.

Now the lone shepherd hail'd afar
The dawning of the even star,
His shadow length'ning down the plain,—
When Cupid from the dewy chain
Of slumber started,—Bland repose
On his lip had waked the rose.
Thoughtless of the cruel wrong
Done him by that Archer strong;
Running his eager eyes along
The shining Bow and silken string,
He shook the dampness from his wing;
Then leaped the quiver as before,
And leaping from that gloomy rest,
With mirthful malice in his breast,
Began his pilgrimage once more.

But soon a plaintive cry arose,
And oft at summer evening's close,
A mourning band, in rustic state,
Wound through the village churchyard gate.
And still we sigh at Cupid's name,
Since he from that dark cavern came,
To think that love should end in woe!
Death's arrows fly from Cupid's Bow!

MADRAS MILITARY FUND.—The Regulations of this Fund have just been printed, under the authority of the Directors at Madras, by Messrs. GRINDLAY and Co., Home Agents of the Institution, 124, Bishopsgate Street, of whom only copies can be obtained, price 1s. 6d. each, or sent free by post on the receipt of 2s. 2d. Cadets and Chaplains appointed to the Madras Presidency will receive copies of the Regulations (gratis) on personal application to Messrs. GRINDLAY and Co.

H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS, &c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavour to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the utmost despatch will be used in the shipments from London.

H. and T. PEAT feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are not of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior qualities. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12 lb. saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9 lbs., at present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. P. cannot be accountable for any damage the same may receive after shipment.

Ladies' Saddles, Bridles, Martingales, and Whips.	Bengal, Madras, and Bombay Cavalry and Artillery Appointments.
Gentlemen's Hunting and Plain Riding Saddles, &c.	Irregular and Contingent Military Saddlery.

HOSIERY and OUTFITTING WAREHOUSE, 146,

Strand, near Somerset House.—Mrs. WHITE begs most respectfully to recommend to her friends (more particularly those resident in India) her most beautiful make of Lisle Thread Hose and Half Hose for Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear; their lightness, durability, and comfort can only be appreciated by those who have tried them. She also strongly recommends a beautiful description of Merino Vests and Drawers adapted for the East and West Indies.

Mrs. W. takes this opportunity to thank her friends and the public for the liberal support she has received for the last six years, and begs to assure them that as she devotes the whole of her time and attention to her business, that the best attention will be paid to all orders she may be favoured with for either ladies or gentlemen, enclosing an order for payment on a bank or any house of known responsibility in London, will meet with immediate attention.

CARPENTER and WESTLEY, OPTICIANS, 34, REGENT STREET, WATERLOO PLACE, LONDON.

A WIDOW LADY, residing in a pleasant neighbourhood, in a large and airy house westward of St. James's Park, is desirous of receiving charge of TWO or THREE CHILDREN, who, while they would have the concomitant advantages of a home, their education would be superintended with that of her own little girl and boy. To parents in the East Indies, or about to leave England, who may wish to intrust their children to the care of a lady who will undertake to provide for their comfort and bestow upon them every kind attention, the opportunity which is now offered may be deemed eligible. A resident governess and a good nurse are kept, whose time is entirely devoted to the children. References as to respectability required of those who may apply, and the same afforded by the Advertiser, with every further information.
 Address to E. E., care of Messrs. ALLEN & Co., 7, Londonhall St., London.

OFFICERS of the CIVIL, NAVAL, and MILITARY SERVICES, and the MERCANTILE Community in INDIA, are informed that, on their return to England, they can be accommodated in a superior manner, and meet with select society and the comforts of a home, in the above Establishment, which is superintended by the Widow of a Medical Officer late of the Madras Army.

Ladies and Families can also be received.

TO INDIAN SPORTSMEN.

HENRY TATHAM, GUN MAKER, 37, Charing Cross, London, begs respectfully to thank his patrons in India for the great encouragement he is receiving in the sale of his Short Musket-bored Double-barrelled Rifle, with a pair of extra shot barrels to fit the same stock, if required, fitted up in a lesser case, with the necessary apparatus complete, which are considered by all gentlemen who have tried them to be the most perfect. MOURNING.—COURT, FAMILY, AND COMPLIMENTARY.

THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widows and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in rags (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.
 The LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, 347, 349, and 351, Regent Street.—W. C. JAY, Proprietor.

BEDFORD and RAND, Saddlers and Harness Makers, of 296, Oxford Street, London, take this opportunity to return their grateful acknowledgments for the distinguished patronage which they have enjoyed for so many years, and hope by strict attention to all orders entrusted to them to be honoured with a continuance of the same.

B. and R. request that when an order is not sent through an agent it may be accompanied by a credit upon some house in London, and the name of the party to whom the goods are to be consigned should always be given, in order to prevent delay in shipment.

B. and R. beg to recommend to the notice of Officers of Cavalry Regiments their new Regulation Saddles, as made for the Hon. East India Company, and which have been so highly approved of; also their new Lady's Saddle, which allows a Saddle to be made longer or shorter at pleasure, and the position of the seat to be changed.

LADIES TRAVELLING, or otherwise exposed to the scorching rays of the sun and heated particles of dust, will find ROWLANDS' KALYDOR a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity of the Skin. The numerous varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions, Sunburn, Freckles, Tan, and Discolorations, are pleasingly eradicated by the Kalydor, and the Skin rendered delicately soft and clear. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by the Queen, the Court and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and the several Courts of Europe; together with the "élite of the Aristocracy, from the sultry climes of India and the drawing-rooms of Calcutta and Madras to the frozen realms of the Cas and the saloons of St. Petersburg and Moscow."—Price 4s. 6d. and 9s. 6d. per bottle. Beware of spurious "Kalydors," containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and which, by their repellent action, endanger health.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL.—The unprecedented success of this discovery in restoring, improving, and beautifying the Human Hair, is too well known and appreciated to need comment. The special patronage of the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and of every Court of the civilized world; and the high esteem in which it is universally held, together with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits.—Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, a white Powder compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the Oriental Herbal, of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the Teeth, strengthening the Gums, and in rendering the Breath sweet and pure. Its truly efficient and fragrant aromatic properties have obtained its selection by the Queen, the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

BWARE OF SPURIOUS IMITATIONS—some are offered under the implied sanction of Royalty and the Government Departments, with similar attempts at deception. The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS" preceding that of the article on the wrapper or label. Sold by them at 30, Hatton Garden, London, and by all Chemists and Perfumers.

WORTHY OF PUBLIC ATTENTION!!!

CHAPMAN'S UNIVERSAL PILLS, a combination of the most approved virtues of the Vegetable Kingdom, blended together in such due and just proportions, as to form at length an article which, they confidently venture to affirm, will be found superior to any thing of the kind hitherto made known; they contain not a particle of Mercury, or any other pernicious ingredients, but act almost imperceptibly, but none the less surely, as a gentle purifier of the blood and invigorator of the system. Their private use has been for many years co-extensive with that of the Universal Salve, to which they will be found most valuable agents.

The Proprietors might say much in their favour, and would enlarge upon their merits, were they not anxious that they should stand upon their own, and not have the appearance of being (as is too commonly the case) puffed into notice. They will, therefore, content themselves by saying that, in all cases of Bilious Attacks, Indigestion, Constipation of the Bowels, Sick Head-ache, frequent Nausea, Chronic Rheumatism, Lumbago, violent Cold or Cough, Jaundice, and in short all Internal Diseases, their aid will be found to be invaluable.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each. Wholesale Depot, 5, Swallow Place, Regent Street.

Be particular in asking for CHAPMAN'S UNIVERSAL PILLS.

Agents:—Messrs. HANNAY and Co.; SANGER and Co., Oxford Street; and by most of the respectable Chemists in the United Kingdom.

A WONDERFUL CURE of WOUNDS, and a DEBILITATED CONSTITUTION RENOVATED, by HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—Mr. Mote, storekeeper of Gundagai, New South Wales, states that these medicines have effected a most astonishing cure on a settler in his vicinity, who was dreadfully afflicted with wounds in various parts of his body; his constitution was so debilitated that his death was considered certain; but the application of Holloway's Ointment and Pills has performed wonders, for the young man has been completely cured, and so extraordinary is the case that the editor of the "Sydney Morning Herald" has given publicity to it in his paper of Jan. 4, 1864. Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's Establishment, 244, Strand, London, and by all European and native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c.—They furnish equal pressure in every part, are perfectly porous, and draw on without lacing. Many have attempted to imitate them by the introduction of an article so full of serious defects, as to render this caution to the public necessary. H. and Co.'s Surgical Stockings, &c. are patronised by all the best surgeons in the Kingdom.

The advantages of this Society are as follow:—

A lower and more economical scale of Premiums for Life Assurance than hitherto demanded by the established Offices in India.

The Tables of Premiums have been accurately prepared, after reference to all the various and best reports and statistical documents recently available, and particularly that last prepared by Mr. Griffiths Davis in 1844, and the investigations of Mr. Woolhouse, Actuary of the National Loan Fund Life Assurance Society.

To the actual or mathematical risk thus deduced, an ample per-centage has been added to the scale of Premiums for the safety of the Society, and the benefit of the assured; and it will be found by reference to the subjoined

Tables that, notwithstanding a considerable per-centage thus added, the rates of Premiums will be cheaper at all ages to the holders of Policies than those hitherto offered to the public in India.

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in the diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1861, or five years from this date, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanence, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

Applications for Policies to be made to the Secretaries, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co., who are prepared to grant Policies, to the extent of 30,000 Rupees, on any One Life, and who will afford information regarding the business generally and Rules of the Society in London, as relates to Assurances on Lives or Survivorships, the purchase and sale of Annuities and Reversionary Interests, the granting Endowments on existing Children, and other ordinary business of the Family Endowment Society.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will shew the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 10th May, 1848, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

IN an outbreak of the nature of that which occurred at the extremity of the Punjab, so sudden, and therefore not provided against, which was yet evidently meditated and to a certain extent organized, it was not to be expected that its effects would be confined to the locality where it first appeared. Its ramifications, however, have hitherto proved less extensive than might have been supposed; but to the slight explosion at Lahore, we have now to add another, happily still more insignificant, amongst the Sikh troops in the Hazareh country, beyond the Indus. This "insurrection," as it was at first termed, was presumed to be part of the "great plot," but it turns out to be a mutiny amongst the Sikh troops, in which the people have no sympathy. The movement is said to have been instigated by the Sikh governor, Sirdar Chuttoo Singh, Attareewalla, father of Raja Shere Singh, who probably expected to take our officers (several of whom are dispersed throughout the country) at a disadvantage, and to profit by the apparent apathy of the British authorities at Lahore respecting the insurrection at Mooltan. An attempt was made to surprise the fort of Attok, which was frustrated by the vigilance of Major Lawrence, who despatched thither 450 men from Peshawur. The Sikh soldiers composing the garrison of Attok, it is stated, however, were not indisposed to join the disaffected troops. Nothing more is known of the proceedings of the rebels than that they had murdered one of their European officers, Colonel Canara, of ten or twelve years' standing in the Durbar service, to prove they were in earnest. Mr. A. Cocks, the chief assistant to the Resident at Lahore, had been sent into the Hazareh country, to inquire into the causes of the disturbance, and to allay, if possible, the discontent; but it was expected that the successes of Major Edwardes and his allies would, more than any thing else, restore order.

The position of this young commander, according to the latest accounts from Mooltan, remained as before, in an intrenched camp about four miles from the town, the insurgent army being encamped just beyond the fortifications, ready to retreat within the walls if attacked, or to take advantage of any favourable opportunity of assailing our forces. The enemy had more than once menaced his position, or endeavoured by feints to withdraw him from his intrenchments; three times, however, he had offered them battle upon fair terms, which had been refused. Meanwhile, three of our steamers, under Capt. Christopher, had passed up the Indus and Chenab, and anchored within four miles of Mooltan; whilst the reinforcements mentioned in our last issue were pressing forward to join Major Edwardes. One of the two divisions consisted of the siege-train (thirty guns), H. M.'s 32nd, both of which proceeded by boats; the 49th, 51st, and 72nd N.I., and the 11th regular and the 11th irregular cavalry, which were moving by land along the left bank of the Sutlej from Ferozepore. The other division (the head quarter), commanded by General Whish in person, consisting of H. M.'s 10th foot, a troop of horse, and two companies of foot artillery, the 7th irregular cavalry, and the 8th and 52nd N.I., quitted Lahore about the same time that the troops of the other division moved from Ferozepore,—namely, the end of July. The foot artillery and the European infantry proceeded down the Ravee until it falls into the Chenab, which river would bring them within a few miles of Mooltan. By the 10th of August the troops moving by the Chenab were in communication with Major Edwardes, and the head-quarter division, under General Whish (who had been joined by Captain Christopher, of the flotilla), which had a much longer and more difficult march, were on the 18th of August only two marches distant from the allied army. This is the date of the latest direct advices from Mooltan: it was not expected that the whole of the forces could be combined before the 2nd or 3rd of September. Two steamers had proceeded up the Sutlej, with some heavy artillery stores, to be landed opposite Bhawalpore, and taken on with the advancing column, and thence proceeded upwards to Ferozepore, to take charge of the battering-train. The march of the columns at so unhealthy a season seems to have occasioned few casualties. In that from Lahore several sepoy died of apoplexy, and Colonel Strickland, of H. M.'s 10th foot, likewise fell a victim to exposure to the sun. The Ferozepore column seems to have enjoyed an almost total immunity from serious sickness.

Reports were circulated, upon Cazar authority, both at Calcutta and Bombay, of further actions between the besieging forces and the rebels. The Hurkaru says it was asserted that the Government had received intelligence of a reverse sustained by Major Edwardes; but the Delhi Gazette publishes the following letter, dated "Camp, 2 kos from Mooltan, August 18 :—"

"A report has gone abroad that Moolraj has met with some success in a third action fought between his troops and ours. This, I need hardly assure you, is false. Twice since the last action have we gone out to within a mile of the city walls and offered Moolraj battle, but after being roasted the whole day in the sun we were obliged to return, merely because the Dewan's people had not the face to meet us. Moolraj himself is in despair, because he knows he has no chance of opposing us in the field; he has therefore taken to intriguing and lying. With the view of recruiting his army, he sends word all over the Punjab that he has defeated us, and, with the view of keeping those together that he has got, he tells them that Dost Mahomed is about to join him with ten thousand men. Both lies are on a par. As for his intrigues, they have not failed for want of money, or for want of promises; his emissaries are all over the Punjab, deluding and being deluded: deluding those who put their necks into danger on the promise of jagheers, and being deluded by those who take ready money for imaginary services, such as corrupting whole brigades, who will do any thing for Moolraj, but act."

We subjoin in another page details of the movements of the various bodies of the British forces.

The Punjab is in other quarters perfectly quiet. At Peshawur every thing is kept in the best order by Major Lawrence. The frontier chiefs have now begun to collect and send in their contributions to the state treasury, which in former days could only be extorted from them by force. Two Sikh priests, despatched from Lahore to Peshawur for the purpose of corrupting the troops, had been detected and seized, and a third had admitted that he had been sent from Mooltan with letters, asking aid from Dost Mahomed Khan, who had positively refused the request.

The intelligence from Affghanistan and Toorkistan contains few matters of interest. At Cabul, Dost Mahomed Khan had been daily engaged in reviewing his troops, and as he had been paying some of them, it was supposed that he was serious in his designs upon Toorkistan, and he was disciplining his Kohistanee levies after the manner of the British troops.

The Candahar sirdars had ratified their mutual agreements, and stipulated to enter into a close alliance with Dost Mahomed and his sons; one of the latter was to marry a daughter of the late Sirdar Poor Dil Khan.

The Wuzer of Herat, Yar Mahomed Khan, who has not as yet thought it prudent or necessary to assume the title of Shah (though several years have elapsed since his murder of Shah Kamran, and his assumption of the sovereignty of Herat), having returned successful from his expedition into Toorkistan, has directed his steps south-eastward to Seistan.

Accounts from Bokhara state that the severity of the famine had abated, and that the King was preparing an expedition against Shuhur Subz, the object of which is however not mentioned. The Walles of Khoolloom had committed some inroads into the territory of Bokhara, at which the Governor of Bulkh (Ishan-i-Aurak) had secretly connived. Disturbances had also taken place at Koondooz in consequence of the revolt of the Budukhahanees.

The Delhi Gazette contains the following particulars respecting a Mr. Wyburg, who has been several years at Kokan :—

"Our Peshawur letters mentioned a while ago that the chief of Kokan had deputed a messenger to inform Major Lawrence that a European was residing in his country, and wishing to know what was to be done with him. The answer was, to send him in to Peshawur. We do not know how further information has been obtained, but it has been ascertained that the khan's representations are quite true, and that the individual in question will, in all probability (a friend speaks with certainty on the subject), turn out to be Mr. Wyburg, who proceeded many years ago into Toorkistan, on a diplomatic mission on behalf of the British Government, and who had not been heard of since. It is difficult to guess what can have been his object in remaining for ten years and upwards secluded in this distant country; but it has been ascertained that his detention has not been forcible, and that he may soon be expected in our provinces. His personal narrative must be a curious one indeed."

Scinde remained in a state of tranquillity.

In our intelligence department will be found some further details respecting the insurrection in Ceylon, which, though originating in the imposition of certain obnoxious taxes, could not have attained the height it did but for a widespread discontent throughout the Kandian provinces, which it was highly imprudent to exasperate. It is asserted that these new and offensive taxes, which fall severely upon the poorer classes of Cingalese, were devised in order to supply the deficiency in the Colonial Exchequer, occasioned by the total repeal of the export duty upon coffee, and a reduction of that upon cinnamon. Great apprehensions were entertained lest the disturbances should have driven away the Malabar coolies, and prevented others arriving from the coast during the picking season, which would have ruined the coffee-planters. Pusilawa, the finest coffee district in the island, has, however, been happily exempt from disorder. The present mail brings advices of the suppression of the insurrection.

It appears that the Buddhist priests of Ceylon have been piqued at the indifference which the British Government has shewn towards them, especially by relinquishing the custody of the "Tooth of Buddha," which used to be preserved like a palladium, and escorted by government officers when the sacred relic was reverentially shewn to the people. This mark of disrespect, and the withdrawal of support in other shapes, have instilled a strong feeling of resentment, an odium theologicum, into their minds. To this cause is ascribed the political aspect which the insurrection assumed. A claimant to the crown of Kandy was set up, in the person of a fat boy, named, or said to be named, Mootoo Swami, who was crowned, and the influence of old tradition and of religion collected a number of men to his standard, some of whom, at least, could not have been aggrieved by the gun-tax, or dog-tax, or even the compulsory labour commutable for 3s. The Rajah has, for the present, escaped, but his carriage has been captured, as well as the captain of his body-guard, and the priest who crowned him. It is said that at Kornegalle the insurgents were seconded by the mischievous agitation of an English party in the island.

There is nothing to add to the domestic intelligence from the presidencies published in our last issue.

An official notification has been issued by the French authorities of Chandernagore, that representative institutions are about to be extended to the French settlements. They are to send a representative and a deputy substitute to the National Assembly. The right of voting is to be conceded to permanent residents, without regard to their birth-place.

BENGAL.

THE UNION BANK IN LIQUIDATION.

The adjourned meeting of the Union Bank in liquidation was held on the 15th of July. Mr. Sutherland was strongly pressed to take the chair, but he as firmly declined, for a particular reason, at length Mr. J. S. Judge was voted into it.

Mr. Clarke rose to read his report respecting the commercial bank bill transaction, with a few prefatory remarks. He said he had proceeded to examine and collate the whole of the accounts and proceedings relating to the disposal by the Union Bank, of the bills of the Commercial Bank of Bombay, transmitted hither for the purpose of being converted into post bills of the Bank of Bengal, and forwarded to the institution in the other presidency. In doing this, he had searched through the books not only of the Union Bank, but also of the Bank of Bengal. He had likewise examined the books of the North-Western Bank and the Cawnpore Bank, which were jointly the vendees of the bills of the Commercial Bank. It was from these authentic sources that he had collected the materials of which the report he would submit to-day was composed. Having prepared his report, he proceeded to forward it to Mr. C. N. Cooke, who had been appointed at the last meeting to aid in this inquiry; and the document was then precisely in the condition in which it was now, so far as facts and figures were concerned. He had held no communication with Mr. Cooke in reference to this subject, either before the preparation of his (Mr. Cooke's) report, or subsequently; and he had not even seen the report to the present moment. The learned gentleman here proceeded to read his report, which is of very great length, embodying documents of various kinds. These being read, Mr. Scott's reply to Mr. Clarke's report was brought forward; but Mr. Sutherland suggested that the more convenient and practical course would be to resolve that all three documents should be printed and published, and the consideration of them be deferred to the next meeting.

Mr. Scott objected to this course, saying that he should certainly ask that his reply should be read at once. He would have no postponement.

Mr. Sutherland said that Mr. Scott was entitled to choose for himself in this case, and Mr. Scott's reply was read accordingly:

This was likewise of great length. When it was read,

Mr. Clarke said he had but one or two observations to make to the reply tendered by Mr. Scott. The meeting must have perceived that he (Mr. Scott) did not deny what he had principally relied upon in his report—viz., the serious caution which, according to Mr. Morton's report, was given to him by Mr. Abbot, when the latter "particularly impressed upon Mr. Scott the necessity of keeping the transaction separate and distinct, and of bringing the money as received, for the express purpose of its being remitted direct to Bombay." Nor did he deny that he had signed the order for the transfer to his own suspense account Rs. 90,000 of the bills sold for the Commercial Bank of Bombay. Mr. Scott spoke of the officers of the bank; but he (Mr. Clarke) had pointedly remarked upon the fact that the order bore Mr. Scott's own signature as well; and yet, though the order was dated the 13th December, 1847, he pretended to say that he had no knowledge whatever of the transfer until the 15th of that month. (Hear.) Nor did Mr.

Scott deny but that he saw the letter of Mr. C. B. Skinner, addressed, on behalf of the Commercial Bank, to Mr. Abbott, the then secretary, on the 8th December. That letter mentioned the receipt of a communication from the Commercial Bank of Bombay, intimating that an alarm had been occasioned in the latter institution in respect of the bills it had remitted for £40,000, and Mr. Skinner, as constituted agent, demanded to know what had been done by the Union Bank in the matter, stating he must protect the interests of the Commercial Bank in case of need. Mr. Abbott replied to this letter on the 11th, apologizing for the delay by saying that he had been unable to write earlier because he had not seen Scott. On the 11th, then, when he did write, he must have seen Scott; and, therefore, it was that he contended that Scott had this letter before him, expressing alarm, and demanding information, with a threat annexed in the event of a certain contingency, and that he must have made immediate inquiries respecting all that had been done with the bills of the Commercial Bank. Mr. Scott pretended to deny nothing of all this. Then, as to the blunder which he alleged that he (Mr. Clarke) had made in his statement about the affair of Mr. Mendes. So far from there having been any blunder in the matter, the statement that he (Mr. Clarke) had made, corresponded precisely with the one Mr. Scott himself had put forth. This statement was, that Mr. Scott had given the cheque to Mr. Mendes to pay into the Union Bank; that Mr. Mendes brought it to the bank, with a due Union Bank post bill, for which Hickey, Bailey, and Co., were liable; and that immediately after paying in the cheque, he produced this post bill, and received the cheque for it.

Mr. Scott—Who says so, Mr. Clarke?

Mr. Clarke—It is my report that says so, and I have already mentioned that my report corresponds with your own in this point.

Mr. Scott denied that it did, and read a second time the answer he gave to Mr. Clarke's report upon the matter.

Mr. Clarke admitted that this was certainly different from what he had stated: but he represented Mr. Scott's answer to be just as he had caught it. It must be remembered that he had not seen the reply or had any knowledge of its contents, until the moment that it was read to the meeting by the secretary.

Mr. Jenkins wished to know if the post bill held by Mr. Mendes fell due upon the same date on which Mr. M. took the cheque to the Union Bank.

Mr. Scott replied that he did.

Mr. Jenkins and one or two others said that that was enough.

Mr. Dickens replied that it was not enough. The point was, had the cheque been given for the post bill with Mr. Scott's participation?

Mr. Scott said it had not been so given.

Mr. Sutherland observed that it was necessary that the documents that had just been read should be disposed of; but as he did not think this meeting was exactly in a condition to pronounce judgment upon them, he would suggest whether or not it would be preferable to receive both Mr. Clarke's and Mr. Cooke's reports and Mr. Scott's reply to them, for the present, and defer the consideration of them to the next regular monthly meeting, which was to be held a fortnight hence. The question that would then demand the attention of the proprietors would be, whether or not the papers should be handed over to the law officers of the Bank. The documents, in the mean while, should be printed and published for general information; and this would place the proprietors in a situation to come to the next meeting much better prepared to discuss their merits.

Mr. Jenkins proposed, either as an amendment or a second substantive motion, that the papers should be handed over at once to the law officers, for their opinion upon them; that time, which had hitherto been so sadly allowed to pass by without the production of any tangible or favourable results, should be no longer frittered away. He desired that it should be decided at the very next meeting whether an action would lie or not in respect of these commercial bank bills.

Mr. Morton.—An action for what?—for money had and received?—and then, again, against whom?

Mr. Jenkins.—I do not mean a civil, but a criminal action,—against those who have robbed us of our moneys.

Mr. Clarke remarked that Mr. Jenkins should have said "an indictment."

Mr. Sutherland's motion was put in the following words:—

"That the reports of Mr. Longueville Clarke, and Mr. Cooke and Mr. Scott's reply be printed for the information of the shareholders and the public, and that the decision as to the disposal of them, or the course to be adopted with reference to them, be deferred till the next adjourned meeting of proprietors to be held on the 29th instant."

This was seconded by Mr. Remfry, and carried nem. con.

Mr. Jenkins now read his proposition, observing that the whole of this transaction was so highly disreputable and disgraceful, that he thought the proprietors owed it to Calcutta to make an example of the culprits, if it was possible to do so.

Mr. Jenkins motion was now put; but the sense of the meeting being that it was somewhat inconsistent with the one already adopted, it was not seconded, and fell to the ground.

Mr. Sutherland now observed that, whatever might be the result of the investigation that was now going on, it was impossible that the slightest doubt could exist in the mind of any shareholder who had listened to the details of this difficult and most laborious inquiry, to the skill and perseverance with which it had been conducted, and to the lucid and able manner in which the information derived from a mass of accounts had been put forth, it was impossible, he said, that any man could doubt, that however the inquiry might terminate, the deepest and sincerest thanks of the proprietors of the Union Bank were eminently due to Mr. Longueville Clarke, who had undertaken the labour, and furnished the information. (Hear, hear.) There was no one transaction among the concerns of this unfortunate bank, that had been a source of greater abuse, levelled as well at the innocent shareholders, as at those connected with the management, than this scandalous and most disreputable affair. He did not mean, in his observations, to imply that Mr. Scott was guilty of the fraud imputed to him; that was a matter which had already been reserved for future determination. The exposure of the misdoings of any particular party, was, in no way, connected in his mind with the object of the vote of thanks he had proposed for Mr. Clarke. It was for the removal of the foul stigma and disgrace indiscriminately fastened upon all connected with the Union Bank, whether as shareholders, as directors, or as officers, that the innocent shareholders should hold themselves deeply indebted to the learned gentleman, for having done that which must be taken to be a repudiation of all countenance by them of such gross fraud, and all desire to screen and shelter those that had committed it. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Sutherland then put the following resolution:—

"That the thanks of this meeting be given to Mr. Longueville Clarke for his exertions in investigating the transactions involving the loss of the funds remitted by the Commercial Bank of Bombay to the Union Bank."

The resolution was seconded by Baboo Prosunno Coomar Tagore, and carried by acclamation.

Thanks were next voted to the Chairman, and the meeting separated. — Bengal Hurkaru, July 17.

At the adjourned monthly meeting of the Union Bank,

Mr. T. C. Morton was voted to the chair, and read the monthly report of the executive committee. On concluding, Mr. Morton mentioned that the intervention of the sheriff had had the effect of preventing the liquidation by the executive committee of such of the assets of the bank as had been taken in execution, they, as is to be expected, having been able to deal only with equitable assets, which were not liable to seizure by the sheriff. With reference to the opinion expressed in the report, that where doubtful post-bills are in the hands of bond-fide holders willing to come to a fair and equitable arrangement, it would be advisable to make terms with them, rather than to repudiate the claims altogether, he thought it would be for the benefit of shareholders so to do, since, in the event of an appeal in respect of the case mentioned in the report as having been decided against the claimants here, and of others of a similar nature, and a reversal of the judgment of the local court, the shareholders might, unexpectedly, be called upon to meet an aggregate liability of 4 or 5 lakhs, after the work of liquidation with reference to other claims might be completed.

Mr. Sutherland now moved, and Mr. R. Molloy seconded,

"That the report of the executive committee, just read, be received."

The motion was put to the vote and carried unanimously.

Mr. Sutherland now proposed—

"That it be referred to our executive committee, to prepare an application to Government to pass a Legislative Act, enabling creditors who are willing to release individual shareholders of the Union Bank, in consideration of their paying their individual assessments respectively, so to do, without releasing the general liability of the other shareholders."

Mr. McIntosh seconded the resolution, and, on being put to the meeting, it was carried unanimously.

It was next moved by Mr. Staunton—

"That the executive committee be directed to convene a meeting of the creditors of the bank for the purpose of submitting to them a modification of the present assessment scheme, and that such meeting be convened for the 1st August, at four o'clock, when the time limited by the present scheme will expire."

The motion was seconded by Mr. Graham, and being put to the meeting, it was carried unanimously.

Mr. R. C. Jenkins, the secretary, now mentioned that he had received a letter from Mr. Clarke, stating that he was ill, and could not attend, but requesting that a separate letter, which he had addressed to him as secretary to the bank, in connection with the investigation into the mode in which the Commercial Bank's money was dealt with, should be read to the meeting.

(Mr. Clarke's letter was here read to the meeting; but we refrain from publishing it, because it seemed to be the opinion of some at the meeting, that it contained libellous matter, and Mr. Dickens, on behalf of Mr. J. S. B. Scott, even went the length of applying for a copy, evidently with a view to enable Mr. Scott to found proceedings upon it, and broadly stated that the newspaper editors must exercise their own discretion in giving it to the world.)

The letter concluded with a strong recommendation to bring Mr. J. S. B. Scott before a jury, and with an offer on the part of Mr. Clarke to lead the prosecution himself.

Mr. H. M. Elliott remarked that it deeply concerned those of the proprietors who desired to maintain their characters, to carry out the suggestion that had been made by Mr. Clarke, after the untiring and professional skill he had devoted to the investigation of this matter. He had some reason to apprehend, from the smiles he observed on the faces of some, that the meeting would not be unanimous in deciding in favour of Mr. Clarke's recommendation. He trusted, however, that when the question came to be put to the vote, he would be undeceived. (Hear.) It was everywhere admitted, that the case was so nefarious in itself, and the reproaches levelled at the shareholders, so biting and severe, that it was absolutely incumbent upon every honest member of their body to sift the matter to the bottom, and, if guilt there were, to fix it for ever upon the culprit. If this should not be done, after the clear, able, circumstantial, report which had been submitted by Mr. Clarke, and which did no more than confirm a previous report of Mr. Morton, he must confess that the shareholders would bring a discredit upon themselves, as having stayed a prosecution in the face of strong prima-facie evidence against the accused. (Hear, hear.) He intended to offer an opinion neither for nor against Mr. Scott; but he did mean to say that sufficient evidence had been laid before the shareholders to justify them in taking him before a jury. If the meeting would agree with him, and determine to send Mr. Scott to take his trial at the bar of criminal justice, he thought that it would be nothing more than fair to Mr. Scott himself if he were innocent, or to the shareholders if he were guilty; and he would propose that the offer of Mr. Clarke be readily accepted, and he be requested to conduct the prosecution.

Mr. R. M. Staunton seconded the proposition.

Mr. Sutherland rose to support it. He utterly disclaimed the slightest personal feeling either against Mr. Scott, or any one connected with or employed by the bank when solvent. When, however, he reflected upon the ruin brought on the shareholders, the reproaches, the obloquy, the infamy, which were levelled at them, in respect of this transaction, he felt it, at times, difficult to command the expression of his feelings, or observe that temperance and decorum which, in ordinary cases, it would be unbecoming to lose sight of. But when he saw a proposal before him to place a man at the bar of criminal justice, to answer a charge of one of the greatest frauds that could be imputed to a gentleman, he would be eminently wanting in right feeling or a sense of decency to be swayed by any feelings that might have previously been engendered in him by reproaches arising out of this identical transaction. The impression left upon his mind, however, after a perusal of the last report of Mr. Clarke, and the reply thereto tendered by Mr. Scott, induced him to think, with Mr. Elliott, that there was a strong prima-facie case for a criminal prosecution against Mr. Scott. The shareholders had no third mode of arriving at the truth in this matter, than by following the course, however painful it might be, which Mr. Clarke had pointed out. They must either say that this case had not been made out, so as to be in a condition to go to jury, or that it was. If it was, the shareholders could not drop the matter, as some had proposed, for then the consequence must be, that a stigma must be fixed on Mr. Scott's character and on their own.

Mr. Morton said that a great deal connected with this transaction was very discreditable; but he was not prepared to say that anything had been proved which could be made a subject matter of indictment. (Hear.) He had no wish that this, or any other transaction of the bank, if it were a fraudulent transaction, should be blinked; but he did say that the proposed proceeding was without a precedent. (Hear.)

resolution being come to at a meeting like this proposing the prosecution; for supposing it should be carried, a great stigma would have previously been cast upon the party accused, and this case must necessarily come before the court to a certain extent prejudged. To him (Mr. Morton) it appeared that, if any one individual had by any act made himself amenable to the law of the land, the shareholders, or any one else, might prosecute without coming to any public resolution upon the subject. (Hear.) But he must confess that it struck him with great force, that for any body of individuals to adopt a public resolution at a public meeting, that a certain individual must be brought to the criminal bar of the country to undergo the ordeal of a prosecution, in respect of frauds which he was supposed to have committed, would be entirely opposed to law, and it was even possible that there might be one or two circumstances connected with the features of the case to make it one of conspiracy. (Hear, hear.) He repeated that his present impression was, that the Commercial Bank affair was highly discreditable to the parties concerned; but he must protest against passing in the name of the bank a public resolution voting for the institution of criminal proceedings against Mr. Scott, at a meeting composed of scarcely forty proprietors, when there were at least 700 interested in the bank. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Dickens rose to support this view. He said he would not disguise from the meeting the fact that he would speak to this question as the counsel of Mr. Scott, as it would be neither candid nor fair to do so. Mr. Scott was inapt to speaking on public occasions, and had asked for his assistance, that his inexperience might lead him to do no damage to his own cause. In relation to the opinions which had been offered upon the question at issue, by Mr. Elliott and those who thought with him, he would impugn the judgment of no man; for, as shareholders of the bank, parties were entitled to adopt and express any sentiments respecting the affairs of the bank, at a meeting convened for the discussion of its concerns. But as he did not consider that Mr. Scott was upon his trial before this meeting, so he would not enter upon his defence. (Hear.) But upon the inconvenience and the very great demerits—he spoke with deference—of the course which it had been proposed to adopt, he would enter. He would ask the meeting simply to consider what would be the result of this meeting, composed of about 40 or 50 gentlemen, binding the general body of shareholders, aggregating about 700, to one common resolution proposing the prosecution of any single individual as guilty of fraud in reference to transactions with, or on behalf of, the bank. Not one shareholder would be in a situation to sit upon the jury. (Hear.) Either he would disqualify himself from serving by directly joining in the resolution submitted by Mr. Elliott, as having prejudged the case, and therefore being beyond the circle of those who could bring unprejudiced minds to the trial,—or he would be taken to have so disqualified himself, in having been bound by his fellow-shareholders when they adopted the resolution. Passing over this objection, by whose funds would the prosecution proposed be conducted? (Hear, hear.) With the funds of an insolvent institution? Why, the money belonged not to the shareholders, but to the creditors of the bank. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Elliott replied. He said he had not come prepared to speak at this meeting upon any subject whatever; and that it was only at the suggestion of a gentleman, while he was in the room, that he had come forward to move the resolution which the meeting had heard him read. He was desirous, however, of answering some of the objections that Mr. Dickens, who had spoken so ably for Mr. Scott, had advanced against his proposition. To take up the first objection, he did not understand upon what facts the argument was founded as to the impossibility that would be experienced in getting together an impartial jury. Up to this date the Union Bank did not appear to have called forth the sympathy of the public. (Hear, hear.) The current of fellow-feeling had run in favour of the creditors—not of the poor innocent shareholders (hear, hear); and this was alone sufficient as a guarantee for Mr. Scott and his supporters, that it was perfectly possible to find a jury who would be wholly unaffected by the consequences which Mr. Dickens apprehended would be the result of an adoption of his, Mr. Elliott's resolution. With respect to the argument, that, in coming to a resolution which had for its object the indictment of Mr. Scott, the meeting was prejudging the case against the accused; he must confess that it appeared to him perfectly obvious that, so far from the shareholders committing themselves to any positive opinion upon the subject, they proposed to do what was directly the reverse,—viz., to refer the matter to a court of justice, and to have the opinion of a jury upon it. (Cries of "Hear, hear.") As soon as the meeting would cast over the proposition that he had made, there could not be one case which the proprietors could, taking this as a precedent, possibly bring before a jury for trial, nor could they oppose the discharge of any single insolvent indebted to the bank, who, at the time their liability was contracted, held the office of directors. (Hear, hear.) He had come to-day to the meeting with the intention of voting that the discharge from the Insolvent Court of such of the directors as were interested in the houses of Cockerell and Co., and Colville, Gilmore, and Co., should be opposed by the bank in respect of the debts they owed to it. (Hear, hear, hear.) But if his proposition with regard to Mr. Scott should be negatived, could the bank do this with a good grace? (Hear, hear, hear.) He would propose—

"That as sufficient evidence has been advanced in Mr. Clarke's report to form the subject matter of indictment and for submitting Mr. J. S. B. Scott's case to the tribunal of a jury, Mr. Clarke be requested to conduct the prosecution against him, or to see that measures are taken to have it conducted."

Mr. R. M. Staunton seconded the resolution, and remarked that he thought it right to say that something should be done to make manifest the feelings of the general body of proprietors with reference to the misconduct charged by Mr. Clarke against Mr. Scott.

Mr. Homfray said he must dissent from Mr. Elliott's motion, because it singled out Mr. Scott for prosecution, whereas Mr. Clarke's letter inculpated, in clear terms, Mr. Scott, Mr. Rob Roy Campbell, and Mr. H. W. Abbott. The individual selection of one party for a criminal prosecution was not to be tolerated. There were others behind the screen whose names had not, up to this moment, been divulged. In Mr. Stewart's pamphlet, published only this day, he found that there was a distinct assertion that Mr. Grant was concerned in the transactions that took place between the bank and Cockerell and Co.'s house. Now, it was his opinion, that if a criminal prosecution were to be instituted against one man charged with fraud, every other person against whom similar charges could be made should be brought to the criminal tribunal of this country to defend himself. If it were determined to carry out the prosecution system against all where there was prima facie evidence, he would most heartily join; but where one was picked out, while half-a-dozen others were put aside, he must dissent.

Mr. Morton—Then you propose, as an amendment to Mr. Elliott's resolution, that all the directors should be included in the indictment? (Laughter.)

Mr. Sutherland said that he thought the letter of Mr. Clarke laid down very good reasons for singling out Mr. Scott for a prosecution. With regard to Mr. Abbott, Mr. Clarke distinctly admitted that there was no ground for believing that he had appropriated to himself the moneys of the Commercial Bank; and, with regard to Mr. Campbell, whatever might be the nature of his culpability, if there was any culpability at all, he was much too far beyond the reach of the shareholders to be included as a defendant in a criminal prosecution. As regarded the directors, they were not connected with this particular case; and Mr. Scott was the only party concerned, for the purposes of a criminal prosecution, before the shareholders. As to the argument that the moneys in the bank were not the moneys of the shareholders, Mr. Clarke had undertaken to lead the prosecution himself; and he (Mr. S.) ventured to believe that that gentleman would readily perform this task without expense to the bank.

Mr. Homfray observed that Mr. Grant had said at one of the late Union Bank meetings, that he was sorry to say none of the directors had taken the trouble to investigate into the affair respecting the moneys of the Commercial Bank. (Laughter.)

Mr. Dickens observed that, on the part of Mr. Scott, he could have no objection whatever, and he meant to urge none, to one or twenty shareholders, who felt themselves aggrieved, either in character or in purse, carrying Mr. Scott for his trial before a jury; but he objected to the competency of the shareholders, and the justice of the measure, to resolve in a public meeting like this, where, from among a body of 700 shareholders, there were about 70 present, that any person, either connected with the bank or employed by it, should be taken before a court of justice to answer a criminal charge preferred against him. It would be illegal and unjust.

Mr. John Jenkins remarked that the resolution of Mr. Elliott opened to Mr. Scott the best opportunity of justifying himself in the eyes of the world if he were really innocent. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Hume said that, agreeing to a certain extent with Mr. Morton, and very strongly impressed with the observations of Mr. Dickens, he must ask, upon what grounds it was that the proprietors proposed to themselves to resolve upon instituting criminal proceedings against Mr. Scott? He went along with Mr. Morton in saying that there was proof of the most discreditable conduct with reference to the disposal of the Commercial Bank's moneys; and he might also agree that the subject was one fit for further inquiry; but he denied that the course proposed by Mr. Elliott, in pursuance of the recommendation of Mr. Clarke, was either proper, just, or decent (hear); and he would venture to say that notwithstanding the opinions expressed to the contrary, it would never be pursued. It was true that a gentleman, acting in the double capacity of shareholder and counsel of the bank, had expressed an opinion that an indictment would lie against Mr. Scott, and that he volunteered to lead, what he (Mr. Hume) might term the forlorn hope, in which he ventured to say there would be neither success nor honour; and, further, a great stress had been laid upon the facts, that severe reproaches would be levelled at the shareholders, as having aided in the suppression of the circumstances connected with this transaction, and so screened the culprits from justice. But he would ask if the shareholders had not sufficiently discharged themselves from the disgrace of having participated in the fraud after its commission, if fraud there had been, by appointing a special committee to investigate the matter, and by allowing reports relative to the transactions to be published to the shareholders meeting after meeting? The proposition was unprecedented—he had heard of it in no other instance, and had read nothing resembling it in any book. Was it not preposterous that the shareholders should assume to themselves the ungracious task of prosecuting Mr. Scott, when the very agent of the Commercial Bank of Bombay was on the spot?

The motion of Mr. Elliott was here put to the meeting. As usual, there was a show of hands. Seven hands were held up in favour of the motion and three against it.

The result of a scrutiny being handed in, it was read by Mr. Morton as being 7 voters, or 24 votes, in favour of Mr. Elliott's proposition; and 8 voters, or 50 votes, against it. The proposition, therefore, was negatived.

Mr. Jenkins now inquired what had become of all the bank's indigo which it was proposed to ship to England in January last?

Mr. Homfray replied that the accounts were in course of investigation. He stated that he had received great assistance from the assignees of insolvent estates in affording information as to the proceeds of the indigo, and the general nature of the transaction: but as to other estates, where he had had none other than indirect means of obtaining information, he had been able to elicit nothing which he could lay before the meeting in the shape of a report. He was endeavouring, however, to ascertain more facts, and he hoped to succeed. Among those from whom he had found it difficult to obtain information were certain estates under trust.

Mr. Dickens remarked that a stronger argument against the constitution of a trust, in a limited community like this, could not be adduced.

Mr. R. C. Jenkins, the secretary, explained, in reply to Mr. J. Jenkins, that he hoped very shortly to be able to account for every chest of indigo, though his doing so would bring nothing to the cash account of the executive committee. With respect to the Laudable, the society held Union Bank post bills for Rs. 1,38,000, falling due on the 10th of December, 1847, which, it had been agreed, were to be paid, or to stand over on security. The Motary indigo was assigned to the Laudable through Hickey, Bailey, and Co., as the security. It was seized on the river by the assignees of Cockerell and Co., who handed it to the Laudable in virtue of the planter's bond, held by the society.

Thanks were next voted to the chair, and the meeting separated. —Bengal Hurkaru, July 31.

The special general meeting of the shareholders of the Union Bank in Liquidation, convened under the requisition of Mr. Longueville Clarke, for the purpose of considering what steps should be taken with reference to Mr. W. P. Grant, was held August 7th, at 3 P.M., Mr. T. C. Morton presiding.

Mr. Longueville Clarke first addressed the meeting, urging upon the shareholders the expediency of adopting the measure embodied in the annexed resolution:—

"That under the circumstances of Mr. W. P. Grant having adjusted his debt to the bank at Rs. 7,20,000, of which no part has been paid, and also the circumstances under which the debt has been contracted, the executive committee be directed to arrest Mr. Grant, and to place his property in the hands of the assignee, and oppose his discharge."

Mr. Clarke said he had received positive information only on Saturday last that Mr. Grant was on the eve of quitting Calcutta for England, and he had been requested by several shareholders to bring forward at a public meeting the proposition he submitted today.

Mr. Morton, opposed the motion by saying that it was too sudden, as the shareholders might have taken the step proposed, if they chose, in June last, when he, as president of the executive committee, publicly announced that a trust deed was in preparation with reference to this identical debt, and that Mr. Grant would not leave by the next steamer. It was true trust deeds had not been found to answer; but they had been hitherto applied to mercantile firms, where there was an enormous amount of unadjusted and disputed claims and debts. But in the case of Mr. Grant, this was not so. The shareholders would take very little by driving Mr. Grant into the Insolvent Court,—for a very large portion of his property was in Ceylon and in Scotland, which they could not reach. He denied that the debts of insolvents could not be seized by the sheriff. The debts of Cockerell and Co., and Colville, Gilmore, and Co., both insolvent firms, had been seized by the sheriff, and sold at a great sacrifice,—which, however he might regret, he had, with all his efforts, been unable to prevent. Independently of all this, the executive committee had construed the silence of the shareholders into a tacit consent that Mr. Grant should be allowed to leave Calcutta upon compounding for his debt under a trust deed; and although they had not legally bound themselves as yet, he was of opinion they had gone too far for shareholders to overrule their proceedings with regard to the execution of the deed, without a breach of faith.

There was some further discussion; the resolution was at length put to the vote. A show of hands being first made, there were 9 votes for the resolution, and as many against it. A scrutiny was called for, and there appeared 8 voters and 27 votes for the motion, and 8 voters and 60 votes against it.

The result of the meeting was, that Mr. W. P. Grant is to be allowed to proceed to England, on making over, by deed, all his property in trust for the payment of his debts to the concern.—Ibid., Aug. 8.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ARRIVAL OF THE ENGLISH MAIL.—The express with English news to the 7th July, arrived in Calcutta on the morning of the 12th August, the mails having made the transit in thirty-five days and a half, the shortest passage yet on record.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.—No official account of either the action of the 18th of June or 1st of July has appeared. Though twice beaten, the enemy was not dispirited; the contending troops lay encamped facing each other in grim defiance—the invading army unable to advance without giving the enemy an opportunity of attacking them, of which they were not likely to be slow of availing themselves,—without guns to batter, or mortars to shell, the town, and too weak either to attempt escalade or investure. A plan for beating up Lieut. Edwardes's quarters was all arranged, when just as it was about to be put in execution it became known that the gallant officer had become acquainted with the purpose of his enemies, and was likely to be prepared to give them a very warm reception: so the project was abandoned. Lieut. Lumsden had by this time joined from Lahore. Lieut. Edwardes directed large quantities of cotton to be collected from all quarters, to be used for stuffing bags to protect the working parties while opening up the approaches; 3,000 pioneers and artificers were desired to be sent from Bahawalpore, and every preparation made that might enable him to take advantage of an accident, incommode the enemy, or at all events avoid delay in commencing operations when the battering guns did actually arrive. He took up a position some four miles from the town, and proceeded to fortify his camp to save himself from the consequences of surprise. On the 19th July the rumour ran that the insurgent forces were in full march towards the camp. Lieut. Lumsden immediately moved out to reconnoitre with a detachment of 200 horsemen. The alarm was sounded, and the entrenchments in a moment manned. It turned out to be a feint of the Moolraj, who wished to draw his opponents from their camp, in hopes of laying in ambush for them or taking them at advantage while he seemed to retire before them. The Bombay Government, meanwhile, had placed a strong detachment of Sepoys, with heavy guns and mortars, from Upper Scinde, at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief of India. They were to proceed to Sukkur up the river, and be landed wherever it was deemed most desirable for them to disembark. From the vacillation and timidity exhibited from the commencement, it seems more than likely that Lieut. Edwardes would at the commencement have been summoned to the capital could a summons have reached him so soon as danger was apprehended, and that the insurgent troops would have been suffered to ravage the Derajat for four months at their pleasure. But Edwardes, a brave and determined man by nature, was placed by accident in a position where he had no choice but to fight. He and the Bhawal Khan were summoned by Mr. Vans Agnew when outrage first was threatened, as within a week's march of him; Lahore was nearly a month's journey in his rear. Both were within the Mooltan dominions in an instant, when news reached them that all was over with those they desired to succour. Too weak to attempt to advance unless when a desperate step was warranted by the emergency of the occasion, both prepared to fall back, when the insurgents resolved to attack and destroy them in detail. They first prepared to move in force, 15,000 strong, on Lieut. Edwardes, when that officer entreated the Bhawal Khan to make a demonstration on the other side in his favour. This was being done when a series of heroic combats and most unlooked for successes placed the Derajat troops in a position to advance and relieve the friend who had before so readily rushed to his relief. The armies now of necessity moved simultaneously on the disaffected capital with a view of forming a junction, and were now in a position where advance and retreat were equally impossible, and where there was at the same time infinite danger in delay. The resident at Lahore was invested with absolute control over a force of 10,000 men, retained at the capital expressly for the use of the durbar; and he was fully authorised to call in the aid of as many of the advanced guard—amounting to about 50,000 men—as could be spared, should occasion seem to require. Reference was made to the Commander-in-Chief—to the Governor-General-in-Council—from Lahore to Simla and Calcutta, and from Calcutta to Simla back again to Lahore,—this slight and temporary movement requiring as much meditation and delay as might have sufficed for a general war. The great bugbear had been the danger the European troops would suffer in marching during the hot and rainy months, and the difficulty of transporting the battering guns. The wonderful discovery was at length made that there was no occasion for Europeans to march or guns to move overland at all! The Sutlej washed the walls of the cantonment at Ferozepore, and enabled troops to be transported to the very point from which the Bahawalpore army had marched without difficulty in the beginning of June. The Chenab, another navigable river, passed within a few miles of both capitals, and would take any body of men for whom transport boats could be found, from close to Lahore to close to Mooltan! Boats which ought to have been collected in May, had now for the first time to be thought of, and no small delay and difficulty was experienced in obtaining the requisite supply. Captain Christopher, of the Indian Navy—an officer of much experience, spirit, and enterprise, by whom all the navigable rivers of the Panjab had been examined,—proceeded up the Indus from Sukkur, and afterwards up the Chenab to within four miles of Mooltan. The head-quarters column, commanded by General Whish in person, proceeded from Lahore to the banks of the Rave, whence one portion of them proceeding by the river embarked on the 21st. It consisted of H. M.'s 10th, a troop of horse, and three companies of foot artillery, the 8th and 52nd N. I., and 7th irregular horse. The Europeans and artillery proceeded by boat, the rest of the force by the left bank of the river. On the 29th they crossed a nullah by a bridge of boats, constructed by a company of Sikh artillery, under the political officer with the force, and an officer of H. M.'s 10th. The structure was so perfect as to excite universal admiration, and to permit the troops to march over it without delay or inconvenience. The country here was beautifully cultivated, and irrigated everywhere from the river. On the 31st Col. Strickland, of H. M.'s 10th, died of apoplexy. The land column was now close by the river, when the immense fleet of boats, covering nearly three English miles, sailed past them in beautiful style. Provisions were plentiful, and all the arrangements seemed excellent. On the 10th they were met by Capt. Christopher, with the steamer sent to take the boats in tow: the officer just named immediately joined the general, and communicated to him a large amount of important information as to the position of the armies and state of the country. The river all along had been very winding, so that those on the water had a much longer distance than those on shore to traverse. The boats in this way once more fell behind, when again the steamer was seen shooting past with an immense train of them in tow down the stream. The country here seems to have been singularly beautiful; several heavy showers had fallen on the march, and some of the rivulets were at one time swollen into torrents, but no accident of any sort worth naming had occurred. About the 12th, they met with a detachment of Durbar troops, one thousand infantry and five hundred cavalry—a strange and motley-looking set of warriors, but ready and efficient withal. Heavy firing in the direction of Mooltan was at this time heard, and detachments were sent out to scour the country, but no enemy was discovered. There seems, according to Scinde letters, to have been about this time a day of cannonading betwixt the insurgents and the Sikhs under Shere Singh, in which the only sufferers were a horse and a donkey! The latest accounts direct from this column are to the 18th of August, but letters from the camp of Lieutenant Edwardes, dated the 18th, state that they were expected to join in the course of a couple of days. Assuming, then, that they reached their destination in safety about the 20th, we turn to the banks of the Sutlej to meet the other division so far on their way. The Ferozepore portion of the force consisted of H. M.'s 32nd foot, thirty bettering guns, the 11th light cavalry and 11th irregular horse, the 49th, 51st, and 72nd N. I., commanded by Colonel Markham, of the 32nd foot; they were expected to accomplish the distance in twenty-three marches, on an average of twelve miles each. On the 21st, nearly all the artillery and native troops crossed the Sutlej; on the 28th the ordnance embarked, and sailed next day. A party of H. M.'s 32nd proceeded down shortly afterwards in the steamers Nimrod and Planet. The second detachment was unable to procure transport before the 12th, and the third and last detachment was expected to embark about the 20th.—Bombay Times, Aug. 31.

THE INUNDATION IN THE HOOGHLY AND BURDWAN DISTRICTS continues unabated. The waters have reached close to the European part of the town of Serampore. The number of native houses which have fallen is beyond calculation, the poor inhabitants are flocking into Barrackpore and other places on the right side of the river in hundreds.

THE GAZETTE of Saturday, August 12, contains the new Insolvent Act for India.

THE FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—The ceremony of opening the new place of worship for the Free Church of Scotland was performed on the morning of August 13, before a very large congregation. The Rev. Mr. Mackail preached.

MR. BUSHBY, the Englishman hears, will succeed to the appointment held by the late Colonel Sutherland, as Governor-General's Agent at Rajpootana.

DR. R. STUART.—Government has rejected the application of the patients of Dr. R. Stuart, of the Native Hospital, in favour of that gentleman's being allowed to prescribe on the Company's dispensary, he not being a member of the Government service.

THE MARQUIS DE COISLIN has, in the course of his extensive tour through the East, arrived at Calcutta.

THE OPIUM SALE of August 9 had been looked forward to with great interest since the arrival of late advices from China, and the attendance was unusually large. The first few lots went as high as Rs. 1,160 per chest, but the biddings slackened as the sale advanced. The following is the result, showing an advance of Rs. 184 per chest for Patna, and Rs. 134 for Benares over the averages of last sale:—

	Chests.	Highest.	Lowest.	Average.	Proceeds.
Behar ...	1825	1175	1045	1063 15 1	19,54,525
Benares ...	780	1040	965	998 13 0	7,79,075

THE LAW.—The Englishman mentions various rumours current among the officials of the Sudder Courts as to a reduction of the number of the judges, and even an abolition of one of the two courts. The want of business, chiefly arising from the rejection of appeals which appeared frivolous, and the dismissal of the vakils who brought them forward, is supposed to be the origin of these reports.

FAMINE AT BOKHARA.—The Englishman states a famine exists in Bokhara of such severity that the price of grain has risen to a rupee for five seers, and the people are flying into all the adjacent districts.

THE ANNUAL DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZES to the scholars of the Government School at Rajshahye was held on the 23rd June. Mr. Cheape conducted the examination, and expressed himself satisfied with the attainments and conduct of the boys.

THE DAMOODUR EMBANKMENT, has, we regret to state, again given way. The whole country for many miles is under water to a considerable depth.

THE STEAMER BENTINCK, (the Englishman states) on her arrival on Saturday Aug. 5, instead of stopping at her usual station in Garden Reach, went directly into dock. It is said that the steamer has received considerable injury, and that some of the packages on board are injured.

NAVAL STORE KEEPER.—The Calcutta Star affirms that the economical reforms of Col. Irvine in the office of the naval store keeper, have not been successful, and it is therefore to be raised to its former dignity and emolument, and probably bestowed on Captain Ethersey of the Mozuffer. This office was formerly endowed with a salary of more than Rs. 2,000 a month and a house; but this was at the time when the Company had a large fleet of Indiamen every year in the port. At present, the only vessels which require to be supplied with marine stores, are a dozen pilot and light and buoy vessels, and three sea-going steamers; and it surely cannot be necessary to augment the emoluments of such an office, in these days of fiscal embarrassments. We shall be happy to find that it is to be bestowed on Captain Ethersey. Popular report whispered that it was to have been made subservient to a job.—Friend of India.

THE TRUNK ROAD.—The following extract of a letter, is painfully interesting:—"I beg to inform you that the trunk road will not be available for conveyances of any description, vid Satang, as the suspension bridge over the Surusetty has been broken down by the inundation of the 3rd and 4th instant; a small drain bridge near Taldanga Bazar is also broken down, consequently the public road from the (north) French gate to Chinsurah is not practicable for conveyances. The suspension bridge at Tribeny should be looked after also; when I passed over it a month ago, the bridge appeared insecure; some of the iron work was loose, it requires to be properly fastened."

DACCA BANK.—A dividend at the rate of eight per cent. is payable at the Dacca Bank on account of the half year ending June 30th last.

MILITARY.—The death of Major General Dundas gives Lt. Col. Pew the off-reckonings, and Major Abbot his Lt. colonelcy. The Hon. H. B. Dalzell gets his majority, and Lt. Carlton his company. Mr. Couchman also gets promoted, and a supernumerary (not arrived yet), a Mr. Wm. Wilson, is brought "on the strength." This will ensure Lt. Col. Baker's retirement, under the most pleasing and fortuitous circumstances.—Mofussile, August 1.

THE DELHI BANK.—At a meeting of the shareholders of the Delhi Bank, held August 1, a dividend of ten per cent was declared. The old directors were re-elected, and two gentlemen, absent from the station, were added to the number.

A GWALIOR LETTER intimates that no relief of either cavalry or infantry, is to take place in Scindia's contingent this year. Capt. Hawkins's battery moves to Seepree in March, to relieve Capt. Warburton; and Capt. Eyre leaves Gwalior on the 15th November to relieve Capt. Olpherts at Augur.

ENS. DRAPER, H.M. 29TH FOOT.—The Englishman is informed that a court martial has been applied for upon Ensign James Fraser Draper, of H.M.'s 29th foot, under the following circumstances. This officer called at the Agra bank, and offered a set of bills of exchange for 80L, drawn by him on Messrs. Cox and Co., bearing an endorsement which he represented to be that of Lieut. J. M. Elliott, of H.M. 18th Royal Irish, but which Lieut. Elliott denies to be his signature. The money for the bill was obtained from the Agra bank agency.

PURNEAH.—A letter from Delary, Purneah, dated the 2nd August, says:—"The river has risen two cubits since yesterday, and there is nothing to be seen but water on every side. A postscript, dated the 3rd, says, the whole country under water, and river still rising."

THE RANEE CHUNDA.—The Benares Recorder announces the arrival of the Ranee Chunda at that place on the 2nd instant, under the escort of three companies of the 20th regt. N.I.; she was received by the Governor-General's agent and the civil authorities, and conveyed to the house appointed for her residence; on the arrival of her baggage an inventory of her property was taken by the agent to the Governor-General, the commissioner, and the magistrate, in the presence of some of the most celebrated lapidaries in the city, and estimated at from eight to ten lakhs of rupees; the property consisted of gems of the most costly description, jewels and vessels of gold, and upwards five thousand Lahore gold mohurs, all of which were consigned to the vault of the collector's treasury.

FROM LAHORE we learn that Lieut. Pollock, 49th N.I., one of the assistants, has been deputed by the resident to proceed to Mooltan with as little delay as possible; and that orders have been forwarded to Lieut. Taylor to march on Dehra Ismael Khan. We regret to hear that five men of H.M.'s 53rd foot died and were buried in less than fourteen hours.

MERRUT.—A curious accident occurred here on the morning of July 27, to Ensign H. Hayley, of the 69th N.I. His horse ran away with him through the Sudder Bazaar, and went straight on end against a pukka wall, forming the wing of one of the gateways into an officer's compound. The horse came with his head against the wall, and forced a piece about two feet square out, loosening and nearly pushing over about six feet of the top of the wall, altogether to a depth of fully two feet. Ensign H. was thrown clean over the wall, and was, I hear, somewhat contused and stunned by the fall, but not seriously hurt. The horse's leg was broke close to the thigh, and he has I believe been shot. The effect of the concussion of the horse against the wall appears the most extraordinary part of the affair; how he could have punched out such a piece of masonry with his head, and not have broken his neck, seems quite inexplicable.—Delhi Gazette.

NORTH-WEST BANK OF INDIA.—At a meeting of the proprietors of this bank, held on the 17th of August, it was resolved, that a dividend for the half-year ending June 30, at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, be declared, and that the balance of Rs. 25,885 3 2 be transferred to the credit of profit and loss.

CAWNPORE BANK.—A dividend for the half-year ending June 30 has been declared, at the rate of six per cent. payable on the 15th of August.

SIMLAH, UMBALLAH BANK.—A dividend for the half-year ending June 30 has been declared of eight per cent. per annum.

THE DELHI BANK has declared a dividend for the last six months at the rate of ten per cent. per annum. The gross profits during the half year amount to Rs. 1,23,147. 2. 7

EXCHANGES.

The state of exchange for this mail was unprecedented. The only bills of exchange in the market were "Documents," and of these there was a great dearth. Rates may be quoted at 1 9½ to 1 9½ for six months' sight. There were no American Credits, nor any other first class mercantile paper—and the choice for remitters who did not touch produce was restricted to Bullion or Bank of Bengal Post Bills. The issue of the last-named was large.

FREIGHTS.

Freights opened on Tuesday with a decline of nearly 10s. per ton, and have been so unsteady during the week it is difficult to give quotations, reported transactions being very various. We hear of business being done for sugar at 3l. 15s. a 4l. to London, and 3l. 10s. to Liverpool.

COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

The Bombay express, with London dates to 7th July, came in somewhat unexpectedly on the morning of the 12th instant, in 35½ days, the quickest transit from London ever known.

The news it brings is a little more favourable, in so far as political affairs are concerned,—with an easy money market in London—fine prospects for harvest—and a somewhat better feeling in the produce markets. It is, however, the opinion of those well informed, that, even if strong governments are established on the continent, the progress of commerce will for a long period be slow and gradual. The mail brings little news of a cheering nature to East-India interests generally. The suspension of Mr. G. T. Braine, though its effects will now occasion but little general inconvenience, tends to keep alive the feeling of suspicion in East-India houses, and to prevent any restoration of credit.

The state of the Exchange market, more perhaps than the home prospects and quotations of prices, has induced a larger and more general business in Exports this week. Demand still runs upon Sugar, and prices are a shade higher since the mail came in. Raw Silk is in more favour, and with a fair supply at market, buyers have come forward more freely. Corabs are offered at low rates, but demand is still only languid. Saltpetre is without change, and Rice shews few transactions for England. Oilseeds go forward pretty freely. Jute is in fair inquiry.

The Opium market has been without animation. The price of Patna was Rs. 1,070 early in the week.

Yesterday a Government notification appeared announcing that the sales of the next season will comprise 26,250 chests Patna, and 9,824 chests Benares, being an increase of about 4,500 chests Patna, and 500 chests Benares.

INDIGO.—Manufacture in lower Bengal progresses rapidly, and from the continuance of such singularly favourable weather, increased estimates are daily coming in. The result of the season in Kishnagur and Jessore promises to be greater than appeared likely early in the month, should there be no unfavourable change, and general appearance point to a larger crop than we lately named.

In Tirhoot the first cuttings are nearly closed.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MR. ALEXANDER MACLEAN, who has occupied of late so great a share of public attention, has filed his petition with the clerk of the Insolvent Court. His debts amount in the aggregate to Rs. 3,56,663-10-1. Mr. Arathoon is set down as a creditor for Rs. 1,75,440-6. Pondicherry Appasawmy Pillay, a partner in the house of Amalric and Co., is set down for Rs. 64,000. The son of the last-mentioned creditor, Verapermell Pillay, has a claim for Rs. 6,873-4-1. Girder Doss Govindas, for Rs. 24,600. Trimeel Row, Rs. 10,750. Richard Taylor, livery stable keeper, Rs. 5,000. Miss Patricea Dalrymple, residing in London, Rs. 20,000. The Oriental Bank at Ceylon, Rs. 50,000. The whole of the debts have been contracted within the last fourteen months, and consist almost wholly of borrowed moneys. On the credit side, Mahomed Gholam Mootoozah Khan, Bahadoor, a gentleman who wiped off some five years since in the Insolvent Court a small liability of upwards of six lacs, and who made restitution to his creditors to the extent of sixteen rupees, and some damaged chairs, is said to represent no less than 2,50,000, for which Mr. Maclean "regrets that he holds no securities, except a letter from this debtor, dated 10th Feb. 1847, acknowledging generally this obligation for an accommodation granted to him." His property consists of one-third share of a coffee estate, called Oodowellee, in Ceylon, valued, in September, 1845, the time of purchase, at, 1,50,000; a bungalow out of repair, and yielding no rent, and sundry excepted articles, valued at less than Rs. 500. He is entitled, under a Scotch deed of entail, to certain estates in Argyleshire, but has no knowledge of their value, or freedom from encumbrances. It is not fixed when the case will be heard.—Athenæum, Aug. 22.

COURTS MARTIAL.

ASSIST.-SURGEON GEORGE EDWARD ALDRED, M.D.

Head-Quarters, Choultry Plain, July 27, 1848.—The following extracts, from the confirmed proceedings of an European general court-martial, holden at Trichinopoly, on Tuesday, July 4, 1848, by order of Colonel John Wheeler Cleveland, commanding the southern division of the army, by virtue of a warrant of authority vested in him by his Excellency Lieut.-General Sir George Henry Frederick Berkeley, K.C.B., Commander-in-Chief, are published to the army.

Assistant-Surgeon George Edward Aldred, Doctor of Medicine, of the Madras medical establishment, doing duty with the 2nd European Light Infantry, placed in arrest by order of Major Frederick Wright Hands, commanding the same regiment, upon the following charges:—

First charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at Trichinopoly, on the night of June 4, 1848, made use of reproachful and provoking speeches and gestures towards Lieutenant Frederick Nelson, of the 2nd European Light Infantry, in the mess house of the said regiment, by applying the epithets "puppy" and "coward" to the said Lieutenant Frederick Nelson, in his hearing, by telling him, in an insulting manner, that his conduct was most ungentlemanly and disgraceful, and to make the most of it, and by advancing his face so close to the said Lieut. Frederick Nelson, in an insulting manner, that their faces nearly met, saying, on being told to stand off by the said Lieut. Frederick Nelson, that he would stand as close to him as he liked.

Second Charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at the time and place, and on the occasion set forth in the first charge, in the presence of several servants, and of a soldier of the 2nd European light infantry, violently pushed with his hands the aforesaid Lieutenant Frederick Nelson, after he, the said Lieutenant Frederick Nelson, had turned away with the intention of avoiding further altercation; and further, in having repeatedly struck the said Lieutenant Frederick Nelson, and knocked or thrown him down.

The above being in breach of the Articles of War.

Comdg. 2nd European L.I.

Trichinopoly, June 22, 1848.

By order of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

(Signed) R. ALEXANDER, Lieut. col.

Finding on the First Charge.—Guilty, with the exception of the word "disgraceful."

Finding on the Second Charge.—Guilty.

Sentence.—To be dismissed the service.

27th N.I., President.

Trichinopoly, July 12, 1848.

(Signed) T. K. WHISTLER, Dep. Judge Adv. gen.

Recommendation.—The Court, having performed the painful duty of awarding a sentence commensurate with the offences of which the prisoner has been found guilty, beg most respectfully and most earnestly to recommend him to the favourable consideration of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, in consideration of the great contrition he has expressed, his inexperience of military usages, and the high testimonials he has received to character.

(Signed) W. E. A. ELLIOTT, Lt. col.
27th N.I. President.

(Signed) T. K. WHISTLER, De. Judge Adv. Genr.
Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) G. F. H. BERKELEY, Lieut. gen.
And Commander-in-Chief.

Madras, July 16, 1848.

Remarks.—The Commander-in-Chief has kept and read over attentively the proceedings of the general court-martial on Assistant-Surgeon Aldred, in the hopes of finding some extenuating points in the case which would enable him to attend to the recommendation of the Court in his favour; but regrets to say that he cannot find one. A trifling altercation takes place at the mess, of no consequence, which is very properly stopped by the senior officer present. Here it must be supposed the matter would have ended; and to all appearance Lieutenant Nelson, the other party concerned, thought it had done so: no more allusion was made to the dispute. The mess was finished, and in due time the officers broke up.

Here was ample leisure afforded for Assistant-Surgeon Aldred to overcome any excitement or angry feelings that might have existed, and for the return of his cool judgment and discretion; but no; without any provocation, he insults Lieutenant Nelson in the manner unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, stated in the charges, when he, Lieutenant Nelson, was quietly about to return to his quarters.

The Commander-in-Chief is always glad to attend to the recommendation of the members of the courts-martial whenever he feels he can do so without detriment to the service; but in cases of unofficerlike and ungentlemanlike conduct, such as the present, the sentence of the Court must take its course, however much the Commander-in-Chief may regret it.

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of July 24 arrived at Bombay on the morning of August 26, by the schooner Mahi.

YAR MAHOMED is pursuing his schemes around Herat with his usual recklessness, and amuses his leisure with seizing every fortress within his range. He has even laid siege to Laush, an important place between Herat and Candahar, but has been repulsed, the Candahar sirdars not approving of so ambitious a neighbour.

COURT-MARTIAL.—We are sorry to learn that Lieut. Hewett, of the 1st grenadier regiment of native infantry, is under arrest for embezzlement and other nefarious doings. Some twenty-five charges have been preferred against him, and he will be tried by court-martial. Mr. Small, of the same corps, is also under arrest on account of some pecuniary matters.—Bombay Telegraph, Aug. 5.

AHMEDABAD.—Letters from Ahmedabad mention that Surgeon Hockin's appeal to the Articles of War against Dr. Sinclair, for most opprobrious language, alleged to be applied to him, was likely to break down; but that, nevertheless, hopes were entertained that the subject would yet be brought forward, under another form, before a military tribunal! A letter from another quarter leads us also to expect this.—Bombay Times, Aug. 5.

THE LAURENCE ASYLUM.—The Mofussilite informs us that "A Friend to the Orphan" has forwarded through the medium of Capt. V. T. French, town major of Bombay, the sum of 5,000 rupees as a donation to the Laurence Asylum.

DEATH FROM DROWNING.—On Sunday morning, an inquest of five officers of the 24th regt. N.I. was impanelled before the coroner, at Dr. Wilson's bungalow, on Malabar Hill, to inquire touching the death of J. H. Watson, Esq., aged about 22 years, an ensign in that corps. We subjoin the substance of the evidence connected with this melancholy occurrence as detailed at the inquest. A little before 6 o'clock on Saturday morning the deceased, accompanied with two other young officers (Messrs. Smith and Williams), went to bathe in the sea, on the eastern side of Malabar Point, which they had frequently done before. Mr. Smith was the only one of the party who could swim, and that indifferently. The water being shallow, the deceased and Mr. Smith, who kept together, waded some distance from the shore, until it reached their chins. Mr. Williams, who is much lower in stature, followed them leisurely, but the deceased having called to him, desiring him not to go to them or he would be out of his depth, he stood still, and distinctly saw all that ensued. Almost immediately a rapid succession of waves came, one of which struck the deceased and Mr. Smith, carrying them out of their depth, owing to their having been standing on a sand bank at the time, a circumstance of which they were quite unaware, and there was also a strong under-current. The latter saved himself with great difficulty, but in consequence of the deceased being unable to swim, he could not regain his footing, and his companions had the misfortune to see him perish, without having it in their power to render the least assistance. He rose twice to the surface, and struggled hard, but soon sunk again, and was seen no more. Some natives stood looking on, but would not go to their aid. Afterwards persons were employed to drag with nets, but the body was not found until early on Sunday morning, when it was seen by a policeman who had been set to watch for it, some distance below high water mark, where it had been left by the receding tide.—Verdict—"Accidentally drowned while bathing."—Bombay Times, July 26.

MR. L. R. REID, it is rumoured, has been allowed by the Court of Directors to retain his seat in council for another year. It does not appear, however, that any certain information has been received on the subject.

H.M. SHIP "HERCULES" has arrived from London, with stores and rigging for the line-of-battle ships at present building at Bombay. When discharged, she will proceed to Maulmein for timber, and return again to England.

COTTON-CLEANING MACHINE.—A very pretty variety of churka is at present in Bombay, the invention of Captain Studdert, of the engineers. It consists, like the common native implement, of the vane of two rollers of unequal diameter, which draw out the cotton without injuring the staple and leave the seed behind. In this case, however, the rollers are both of iron, instead of the lesser one being of wood; and the lesser drives the larger, instead of each being driven by a separate pin. They are, moreover, fitted on a table, and driven by a fly-wheel and treddle, like a foot-lathe, so that one person suffices for driving and attending to the machine. It is simple and not expensive, and works to perfection. Of course the quantity of work performed is small compared to what can be accomplished by the saw-gin;—the new Calcutta implement we have never seen. The Egyptian churka, indeed, is a great improvement on the Indian one; it is also worked by the foot. So far from natives manifesting any antipathy to such things, they are fully alive to their value and most anxious for their introduction.

DR. R. S. JACKSON.—We regret to announce the death at Labuan of Dr. R. S. Jackson, of the Bombay Medical Establishment. The Strait Times, of the 20th June, intimates the melancholy event, but omits to give the date of the occurrence. The late Dr. Jackson was surgeon of the steamer Auckland, and his commission is dated January 3, 1846.

THE "PEROZE."—We understand that the H. C. new steamer Peroze is to be put in commission on the 1st proximo, and that the command of her is to be conferred on Commander J. Frisshard, I. N.

RELIEFS.—We have been informed that the following reliefs for the season are out, together with others which have not yet reached us: they may, we believe, be depended on as correct as far as they go:—H. M.'s 8th Foot, from Poona and Colaba to Scinde; H. M.'s 22nd Foot, ditto, ditto, ditto; H. M.'s 60th Rifles, from Scinde to Poona; 1st European Fusiliers, from Scinde to Poona and Colaba; 24th, 26th, and 28th N. I. from Bombay to Scinde, to be replaced by the 22nd, 27th, and 28th N. I.—Bombay Times.

—The Gentleman's Gazette of Wednesday gives the following reliefs of Bombay corps in addition to those published by us the same day:—3rd N. I. from Shikarpore to Baroda; 4th Rifles, from Hyderabad to Belgaum; 5th L. I. from Deesa to Ahmedabad; 8th N. I. from Ahmedabad to Rajkote; 11th N. I. from Hyderabad to Malligam, and 21st N. I. from Rajkote to Deesa. According to our contemporary, the 28th proceed to Scinde, in place of coming to Bombay,—which will give that province four corps in lieu of the three returning from it to India.—Ibid.

BONDED WAREHOUSES.—It is currently reported that the collector of customs has strongly suggested to Government to have either the whole or a portion of the town barracks transferred to the customs department, for the purpose of having them converted into bonding warehouses. The measure has been recommended with a view to abolishing the present drawback system, and is doubtless considered highly desirable by the majority of the mercantile public of Bombay.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL H. HAVELOCK, C.B., deputy adjutant-general Queen's troops, has, we observe, been directed to perform the duties of military secretary to Sir Willoughby Cotton, during the absence of Major H. V. Brooke, of H.M.'s 52nd foot, who is now far advanced on his way, vid Deesa, to join his corps proceeding on field service to Mooltan.

THE REVEREND MR. FLETCHER.—We understand that a portion of the members of the Rev. Mr. Fletcher's congregation have subscribed and collected a handsome sum for the purpose of presenting him with a testimonial on his departure from amongst them.

RAILWAY PROSPECTS.—The Callian railway project has been taken up very warmly in the western presidency, and there seems little doubt, from the demand for shares, that the project will ultimately be carried into operation. The applications for shares (5l. each) up to the 29th of July amounted to 7,319 in addition to the 7,741 originally allotted in Bombay. A list of the subscribers has arrived by this mail.

AT BELGAUM there is a rumour of the 29th N. I. leaving that station for the Presidency after the monsoon, and that the Highlanders will go to Aden.

SIR ERSKINE PERRY, it is rumoured, is about to proceed to Egypt on leave for six months, his lordship having found a short respite from his labours necessary.

THE RIGHT REVEREND THE LORD BISHOP OF BOMBAY left Sattara for Belgaum on the 14th Aug., from which latter station we believe he proceeds to Dharwar, and thence back to Sattara and Poona by way of Sholapore.

THE EXTRAORDINARY AFFAIR AT POREBUNDER.—It appears that Lieut. Green, of the 21st regiment of N. I., had three prisoners (Mekranees or Scindees) in charge at that place, accused of the murder of poor Lieut. Loch, 2nd cavalry, who was shot some time ago. These men, as we are informed, knocked down the sentry placed over them, and took up their position in a room, containing a quantity of ammunition, together with the arms which they had worn at the time of their capture. Here they bade defiance to Lieut. Green and his whole party, which consisted of no fewer than a hundred rank and file! Firing through a hole in the door, they succeeded in wounding six of the men, as well as Lieut. Green, who was unfortunately shot in the foot. This officer at last got up the Rana's guns, and kept up a fire on the place from eleven o'clock till night, but without effecting an entrance: he then left the warlike trio, with sentries placed all round. In the morning, the enemy sallied forth, and drew upon the detachment, when the latter fired, and all three fell, to rise no more. Ensign Beynon, it appears, was present with Lieut. Green at the time of the occurrence of this singular affair. When news of what had happened reached Rajcote, Dr. Fraser, together with Capt. Taylor, of the 2nd cavalry, and Lieut. Williamson, of the 21st N. I., was ordered off without delay; and Lieut. Black, the assistant political agent, would, it was understood, accompany them. In the absence of detailed information, we abstain from comment on the matter under notice; no doubt there will be a searching investigation, and on its conclusion we hope to be able to submit the facts, in their proper light, to our readers.—Telegraph and Courier, August 29.

WHOLESALE ROBBERY.—Letters from Tannah mention one of those cases of wholesale corruption and robbery which occasionally disgrace India. A vakeel of the Court there, who was known to be a man of talent in that capacity, enjoyed considerable credit; but lately a discovery was made which has proved him to be the head and prime mover of a gang of robbers. The gang consisted of fifteen men and four women, who were regularly employed by this vakeel to rob and plunder the wealthy persons of the neighbourhood. The rich and leading persons at Tannah were already marked out as the victims, and some of the houses had the walls, in unsuspected places, nearly bored through, so that the robbers could enter them whenever opportunity served.—Gentleman's Gazette, Aug. 25.

STEAMERS TO THE PERSIAN GULF.—The despatch of steamers to the Persian Gulf has begun to engage attention. The Sir C. Forbes will, as we hear, start in the course of next month. It will not surprise many accurate observers of the progress of steamers in the East, to find a great London company will speedily place a steamer between Bombay and Bushire, &c.—Ibid, Aug. 29.

THE LATE BRIGADIER STACY.—This gallant veteran distinguished himself in 1841 at Kelat, and by his endeavours, which ultimately proved successful, to seize Nusseer Khan, the young ruler of this division of Beloochistan, with whom we were then most anxious to be on good terms. He was with General Nott at Candahar, until the march on Cabool by Ghuzni, where he commanded a brigade, and eminently distinguished himself. He commanded one of the brigades under General Nott which destroyed Charekar and Istalif, and returned with the combined armies to India in Dec. 1842. Just as the tidings of his demise reached us, we had been reading a review of a little work, detailing the operations of Stacy's brigade in Afghanistan, whose services were considered by the author to have received a very niggardly measure of appreciation compared to what their merits entitled them to have expected. Colonel Stacy was well known throughout India as an antiquary, and especially as a numismatologist; he had contributed largely in Bactrian and Sassanian coins to most of our museums, and must, we should imagine, have left a very fine private collection behind him. He was fond of engineering, and up to within a few weeks of his death, was engaged in perfecting a very ingenious implement for preventing the accumulation of mud and sandbanks, or in removing those which had accumulated, in rivers and estuaries, or wherever currents to give it motion existed. On this he had bestowed the name of the River Fidget; the last letter we received from him—not yet a month ago—was an excuse for not having sent a model of the implement, which he had long promised, for exhibition in the Polytechnic Institution, and experiment on the sands in Backbay. He was kind-hearted, good-humoured, and vivacious: his little eccentricities served only the more to endear him to those who knew him, and his death will be deeply lamented by a large circle of friends.—Bombay Times, Aug. 12.

A NATIVE CONVERT.—On Saturday, June 3rd, a Hindoo youth, of the name of Shunker Krishna, was admitted into the church of Christ by baptism, administered to him by the Rev. C. W. Isenberg, at Christ Church, Byculla. The young man had been under Christian instruction since the month of December, 1845, when the Rev. R. W. Hume, of the American mission, to whom he had expressed a desire for learning the English language, recommended him to the church mission, to be instructed at the Money School. Soon after his admission, without being requested, he took off his religious cord, declaring his fixed resolution to become a Christian. He was, accordingly, made acquainted with the fundamental truths of our religion; and if a superficial knowledge and a willing assent had been deemed sufficient requisites, he ought to have been baptized at the commencement of 1846. But outward profession of Christianity cannot justify, in our opinion, the administration of this sacrament, without some warrant of its living principle having entered the heart; and as the conduct of Shunker was unsatisfactory, his baptism was necessarily postponed. An affection of the lungs, under which he suffered, brought him at last to the Sir Jamssetjee Jeejeeboy's Hospital. Here, the absence of many temptations with which he had previously been surrounded, and the prospect of death, which necessarily must have been at times, at least, present to his mind, favoured serious reflections on the state of his mind. He expressed deep repentance of his sins, full reliance in the Saviour, and a strong desire to have his pardon sealed, and to be received into the church of Christ by baptism. This desire, accordingly, was complied with, as mentioned above, and, as he was disgusted with his heathen name, he received instead of it, the name John Christian. After this, his disease made rapid progress, but his mind seemed to be fixed upon Jesus, in whom, as it is our sincere belief, he fell asleep on Friday morning, June 23rd, at one o'clock. — Bombay Church Missionary Record.

COMMODORE HAWKINS takes command, as senior officer, of the Indian navy for the present.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

MEDICAL.

Head-Quarters, Poona, July 18, 1848.—A diversity of practice being found to prevail at different stations of the army, with respect to the temporary appointment of medical officers to the charge of regiments, &c., of the Honourable Company's service, on vacancies occurring, the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to establish the following rules on the subject:—

1. When it becomes necessary to provide for the temporary medical charge of a European regiment, wing of a regiment, or troop or company of artillery, the senior regimental medical officer of the Honourable Company's service at the station shall be placed in charge, provided it be not incompatible with his other duties.

2. The temporary appointment to the medical charge of a Native regiment, or wing of a regiment, falling vacant, shall be conferred on the senior medical officer of the Honourable Company's service at the station without a charge, provided he has been one year in India, and has passed the colloquial examination in a native language. If there be no such medical officer without a charge at the station, it shall fall to the senior of those in charge of regiments, European or Native.

3. The charge of all European and Native details of less strength than above particularized belongs of right to the staff surgeon; and, at stations where there is no staff surgeon, the charge of the staff and of all such details shall be conferred on the senior medical officer of the Honourable Company's service in charge of European or native troops.

4. No medical officer shall be placed in charge of two regiments while there is any duly qualified medical officer at the station without a charge, and no one shall be placed in charge of more than two corps, while any other at the station has only one.

5. Staff medical officers are to be held ineligible for the temporary appointments to the charges of regiments, &c., particularized in Rules I. and II., except where no regimental medical officer is available.

Whenever, upon any account, an exception is made to the rules above laid down, an explanation of the ground of the same is to be submitted when handing up the station order for confirmation.

BATTA.

Bombay Castle, August 16, 1848.—The Right Hon. the Governor in Council, in assimilation with the practice at Bengal, and the Honourable Court's commands, that one uniform principle shall regulate the grant of field allowances at all the presidencies, is pleased to notify, that an officer withdrawn from a full batta station, to do duty with a wing or detachment of his regiment at a half batta station, shall draw only the half batta of his rank, whilst serving with the detachment.

2nd. An officer withdrawn from his own regiment, at a full batta station, to do duty with another regiment at a half batta station, continues in receipt of full batta.

COURTS MARTIAL.

LIEUT. WILLIAM LEIGH CAHUSAC, 11th N.I.

Head-Quarters, Poona, August 18, 1848.—At a general court-martial assembled at Kurrachee, on Monday, July 31, 1848, and of which Major Gordon, H.M.'s 60th Royal Rifles, is president, Lieut. W. L. Cahusac, 11th regt. N.I., was tried on the following charge, viz.:—

Lieut. W. L. Cahusac, 11th regt. N.I., placed under arrest by my order, on the following charge:—

Charge.—For highly irregular and unofficerlike conduct, in having, in camp near Hyderabad, on Sunday, May 28, 1848, in direct violation of the orders of the Honourable the Court of Directors, dated October 6, 1814, most violently assaulted "Soojawul Khan," horsekeeper, by striking him on the back and arm with a horse girth, or some such substance, the buckle of which inflicted eight or ten severe and discoloured bruises, besides kicking him on the side and posterior, from the effects of which he, "Soojawul Khan," suffered great pain.

Adjutant-General's Office, Head-Quarters, Poona, June 28, 1848.

By order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

Finding.—Not guilty of the charge preferred against him, and acquit him thereof.

FREIGHTS.

During the early part of the present month the rate to Liverpool declined, and as no shipments of cotton were making, the quotations were as low as 2l. per ton. Since then, owing to some purchases of cotton for the English market, an improvement has taken place, and we quote rates at 2l. 10s. to 2l. 15s. for both London and Liverpool. To China the rate is Rs. 6½ per candy.

COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, 30TH AUGUST, 1848.—Our last report for the Overland Summary was dated the 19th ultimo. At that time little activity prevailed in our market for imports; and owing to the season being closed, the inquiry that existed was purely speculative. Since then business, though it may not yet be considered as fully resumed, has in a great measure been revived, and each week has been one of increased demand. In a short time we may consider our season as fairly opened; and judging from the present state of our market, and the disposition manifested by dealers to lay in stocks, we are of opinion that the coming season will be a prosperous one. Our money market is in a healthy state, and no want of confidence exists. Consequent upon this continued feeling since the date of our last, bank stocks have kept steadily advancing in the interval.

OPIMUM.—The advices respecting this drug received by the last China mail had the effect of causing the price to advance in an unprecedented manner. The greatest excitement prevailed in the market, and in a few days the drug rose in value from Rs. 1,250 to Rs. 1,600 per chest, for best quality of Malwa. Subsequently the excitement abated considerably, and prices declined again to Rs. 1,500 per chest, which is the present value.

SPIRITS.—Brandy has improved in value again. Gin is much wanted and no stocks exist. Rum has been in fair inquiry.

BEER.—Stocks of Allsopp's are now very trifling, and there is only a moderate quantity of Bass' on the market.

CEYLON.

The insurrection in the Kandian provinces appears to have assumed at one time a serious aspect. The towns of Kornegalle and Matelle, in the coffee districts, were at one time occupied by the insurgents, 4 000 in number, who planted ambuscades in the roads, to cut off the troops from the capital, and who fought with determination, and when expelled from Kornegalle, they made three successive attempts to retake it.

The ostensible cause of the outbreak was (as mentioned in the last Mail) the imposition of certain new taxes, namely 2s. 6d. per annum for every gun; 2s. 6d. for every dog; and six days' labour from every male, commutable for a money tax of 3s. per head. The mode in which the taxes are levied was felt by the people to be as obnoxious as the imposts themselves. That upon guns required the owners to attend at Colombo, Kandy, or Galle, from the confines of the province, perhaps forty miles, and to put in written applications in the English language for a license. The first announcement of these impositions produced a considerable ferment amongst the natives some months ago, and their discontent appears to have smouldered since; nevertheless some persons in the island considered that the insurrection was of a political character, fomented by the priests and certain malcontent head-men, and that the new taxes are merely a pretext. This hypothesis is countenanced by the fact that a youth of the ancient Kandian dynasty,—described as "a fat, half-stupid boy,"—was proclaimed by the insurgents King of Kandy, for whose apprehension a reward of 150l. was offered by the Government. On the other hand, the first outbreak took place at Kandy, on the 6th July, when a body of natives, who had congregated in the city for the purpose of registering their guns, finding they were to be charged, in addition to the tax, 6d. for the license, broke into commotion, and their numbers increasing, they clamoured for the repeal of all the new taxes. The police were foiled in their endeavours to disperse the crowd, but a few soldiers reinforcing them, the tumult subsided.

The Government, however, seem to have been alarmed, and Sir Emerson Tennent, the secretary, hastened from Colombo, and on his arrival at Kandy, he convened the head-men, who represented the hardship which the new taxes would inflict upon the people, many of whom were too poor to pay them. Sir Emerson explained to the head-men the views of the Government in enacting these imposts, observing that, as to the dogs, the ordinance differed from the others lately passed in this respect, that it was not the wish of the Government to derive any income from this source; the only object of the law was to reduce the number of dogs, which now amounted to a public nuisance, especially in towns and on the great roads, and the Government hoped that when the people knew they must pay for the unnecessary number of dogs which they keep, they would not rear so many, and that the public would cease to be annoyed by them. The Government wished to make no money by this law; it would be enforced in the towns and on the high roads till the nuisance was abated, and wherever in the villages and by-roads there was no nuisance, there the people would have no trouble.

This explanation seems to have tranquillized matters for a time; but on the 26th July, accounts were received at Colombo that 3,000 natives from Cotta were marching towards the fort. They were met at Borelle, about two miles from the town, by the police, when an affray commenced, and it was deemed prudent to order out the military. Two or three companies, with a couple of field pieces, were quickly on the spot, and soon after the Governor, attended by some of the principal civil functionaries, arrived. It was then ascertained that the people had merely met to sign and present a petition. The petition was presented, and the people dispersed.

On the 29th an express from Kandy brought intelligence that the natives of the central provinces were in arms, that they had seized Matelle, a village about sixteen miles from Kandy, and had elected a king, one Mootoosamy. The council decided that the most vigorous measures should be taken to crush the rebellion in the bud. Martial law was proclaimed in the disaffected districts, and two companies of the 37th, with a detachment of the Ceylon Rifles, received orders to march immediately for Kandy. A steamer was also despatched to Madras for reinforcements. The next day brought the news that the insurgents had been driven from their post at Matelle, and that a skirmish had taken place, which ended in the discomfiture of the rebels; ten of their number being killed and forty made prisoners.

On the 30th there was a rising in the district of Kornegalle, when the house of the Government agent and the catchery were sacked. The records in the latter were destroyed, but fortunately the treasure remained undiscovered. The rebels were proceeding to apply fire, when a party of the Rifles came up. After a smart firing, the former gave way, and fled into the jungle, leaving several dead on the field. Twenty-five prisoners who were taken on the occasion were marched into Kandy to undergo trial by martial law.

Subsequent accounts from the disaffected districts shew that upon every appearance of the insurgents they had been routed, with considerable loss on their part in killed and wounded. The Pretender has hitherto managed to elude pursuit; but Poorang Appoo, the commander of his body-guard, and Denio Appoo, the Pretender's brother and prime minister, have been taken, and, after trial by martial law, were shot.

The district of Kornegalle seems to have been the scene of the greatest resistance by the Kandians; there, upon several occasions, they rushed in large numbers upon the handful of Rifles stationed in the village, but took to flight after a few volleys, leaving on each occasion several of their number on the field. As yet no loss of life on the side of the Europeans has been reported, but it is feared that much property has been destroyed.

Late accounts from the interior concur in shewing that tranquillity is restored.

Much difference of opinion prevails respecting the conduct of our authorities in this affair: some say the outbreak was brought about by the ill-advised proceedings of Lord Torrington; others, that his lordship had acted judiciously, and summarily suppressed a dangerous insurrection.

NIPAUL.

A correspondent informs us that something is going on in Nipaul—that hundreds of men are daily crossing the frontier and coming into our territories. The report is that the king has been very ill, and almost dead. His mother, the rane, in the plenitude of her affection, vowed that if it should please her kali, or davee (or whoever her majesty worships), that the life of the king should be spared, and that should he be restored to health, she would sacrifice one lac and a half of human heads. So comprehensive a promise had the desired effect, and his majesty recovered, and that speedily. On this the rane set to work in earnest, and seized all the unfortunate creatures she could lay her hands on. The ferocious nature of this woman's character cannot, we think, be reasonably disputed. At the same time she does not appear an ungrateful person. The population of Nipaul would not require any artificial thinning if the king should happen to enjoy indifferent health. Our correspondent says, "I wonder if the government are aware that our Goorka friends have a foreigner (an European) in their pay? He lives at, or near Skatal, in Blootan, and manufactures guns and ammunition for them."—Mofussilite, July 28.

MANILLA.

A circular, dated Manilla, June 27, 1848, has been issued by the superintendent of the Philippine Islands, announcing the suppression for three years, from the 1st of January, 1849, of the tonnage-dues and export duties on stores, hitherto paid by the whaling vessels visiting that port.

THE Penang Gazette furnishes the following census of the Prince of Wales Island, but, at the same time, expresses some doubt of its authenticity. The difference, however, does not appear material, and we republish it as an interesting statistical document:—

We learn from the same paper that the Danish Government has abandoned all idea of forming a colony on the Nicobars, and has withdrawn the establishments from it; a wise measure, for such an isolated settlement could not have been expected to flourish. It is indeed to be regretted that so large a portion of the sum received for the sale of Serampore and Tranquebar should have been wasted on this profitless undertaking. The Danes have thus taken their final leave of the East, two centuries, we believe, after they made the first attempt to establish a settlement in it, on the island of Ceylon, when the chief of the expedition wrote home to his court to announce his success among the islanders, whom "he had addressed in German, finding that they could not understand Danish."—Friend of India.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Accounts from the Cape of Good Hope to the 24th of July state that the north-eastern frontier was in an unsettled state. Pretorius, the leader of a section of the Boers in that district, was stated to be up in arms again, and the Government had offered a reward of 1,000*l.* for his apprehension. Sir Harry Smith intended proceeding himself to the scene of disturbance, and troops had already been despatched thither.

The Cape ports have been declared "free warehousing ports," the duties to be levied on English goods being settled at 5 per cent. and on foreign goods at 10 per cent.

LITERARY & SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Isauropolis and Vicar Apostolic of Lower Cochin China (Dr. Lefevre), who has published some valuable "Details respecting Cochin China," gives the following account of the language, respecting which vague and inaccurate notions prevail in Europe:—

"The Annamite language is monosyllabic. It is evidently derived from the Chinese. The written language has not merely some affinity to the Chinese character, but it borrows it in whole or in part. However, these two languages have become so different, that persons of the two nations cannot understand each other in speaking or in reading. All those who are in circumstances at all easy, or who aspire to dignities, devote themselves to the study of Chinese characters, which they pronounce in the Cochin Chinese manner. This study is necessary, because these characters are the only ones employed in most books, and in all official letters. There are general examinations, in which those who obtain the first places are elevated to the dignities reserved for the lettered mandarins. This is a powerful stimulus to the ardour of the students. They are able in writing these characters (and it is the only means) to make themselves understood by the learned Chinese. Thus the learned language in Cochin Chinese is nothing else than the Chinese language. The only difference consists in the pronunciation. The vulgar language was only from the first a dialect, which they never wrote; but in the end the Cochin Chinese, having acquired an imposing nationality, the common language became of importance, and they sought the means of writing it. They had recourse to Chinese letters, the only ones they knew. Sometimes they have only taken the pronunciation of the Chinese character and have attached to it a totally different signification. There are needed to fix the orthography of this vulgar language learned books written in it; but these are as yet wanting. There have only been written in this language our books of religion, many comedies, and some poems, the learned men not being fond of reading works written in such a patois. They find that this writing does not express the thoughts clearly. We have adopted a plan of writing this language with our European letters, as has been done for the Malay language: we have succeeded in representing the sound of words very exactly. This much facilitates our study of the language. This language is not confined to the limits of Cochin China and Tongking, but is very commonly spoken and understood in Ciampa, Camboja, at Siam, and in Laos. We find the sound of all our letters in this language, except the letter Z, and the letter P at the commencement of words; but they have the ph and the p final as in the word bap. If they have not exactly our letter F, they have the ph, which has nearly the same sound. The Annamite language being monosyllabic, it follows that there is small variety in the sound of words, and that the same word has often a great number of significations. The difference of sense then is made evident by the difference of tone. Thus the word ma can have at least six different significations, according as it is differently pronounced; for they can pronounce it in six different tones, which we indicate by marks. Ma pronounced in a full tone, mao fono, signifies 'phantom'; if the tone is descending, ma signifies 'but'; if the tone is grave or heavy, ma signifies 'gild'; if the tone is falling, ma means a 'horse'; in the interrogating tone, ma means a 'tomb'; in the sharp tone ma signifies 'the cheek.' We can represent these tones by musical notes. The full tone answers very well to sol from below; the descending tone to si from below; the heavy tone to ut from below; the falling tone to la; the interrogating tone to si natural; and the sharp tone to ut from above."

Various experiments have been recently made in the Madras presidency with the view of ascertaining the virtues of the Aristolochia Indica, as an antidote to animal poisons, it having been alleged that it is to this plant the mungoes has recourse when engaged with, and bitten by, a snake—the latter fact itself, however, resting upon no better foundation than the celebrated story of the fish and the vessel of water wherewith King Charles puzzled the Royal Society.

This plant, the Perumaramdoo of the Tamuls, the Ibarmel of Upper India, is one amongst many remedies long employed on the Malabar coast in cases of snake-bites, the powdered leaves and stalks being taken internally and applied externally: but Dr. Ainslie (Mat. Ind., vol. ii., p. 301) does not seem to consider that it possesses more virtue than other snake-herbs. The last strands of the cable of belief in the efficacy of this remedy were broken on the 6th July last, when four leaves of the plant were administered by Dr. Johnstone, at Madras, to a dog, which died in eight minutes after it had been bitten by an enormous cobra. The specimens of the plant were precisely similar to some forwarded from Guntoor, and employed with the same ill success. Not the slightest doubt can now be entertained by those who have watched the repeated trials, that the asserted virtues of the plant are purely imaginary.

In order to test the truth of the story respecting the mungoes (whose antipathy to snakes is undoubted), the animal was repeatedly brought into contact with the reptiles, and we extract some curious details of the result from the Madras Spectator.

"The first instance of an actual fight between the mungoes and the cobra was exhibited by Mr. Glover, the editor of the Spectator, who inclosed the two animals in a small room, and provoked them to attack each other, the former, when domesticated, appearing to have no natural relish for the strife. After a desperate fight, the snake was killed; but not until he had severely bitten his adversary, which, at the conclusion of the contest, manifested not the slightest desire to quit the room, but threw himself on the rug, as if thoroughly exhausted, and slept for a long time; after which he got up, evidently sore from his wounds, but wholly untouched by the poison of the snake. Another case was that of a mungoe belonging to Dr. Johnstone, which had previously destroyed three cobras; shewing, however, upon each occasion, a marked disinclination for the fight. He was taken into a bath room, and a cobra, about five feet long, was thrown in. A mutual dread evidently existed, but continued irritation at last provoked them to face each other, and the snake, rearing its terrible head, repeatedly struck at the little animal, which, uttering short, sharp barks, constantly leaped aside, endeavouring to seize the snake by the upper jaw, in which it frequently succeeded, though at the cost of various wounds. At last, entirely exhausted, they faced each other with open jaws, anxious to strike but unable to inflict injury, until the mungoe, regaining its strength, seized the reptile firmly by the head, and utterly disabled it. Another cobra, nearly six feet in length, with enormous fangs, and which, on subsequent dissection, was found to be in a most excited state of venomous activity, was then thrown in; and it was with great difficulty that the mungoe, worn out with its previous efforts, could be induced to face the new enemy. The little animal, which never attempted to bite, except at the head of the snake, repeatedly shrank; and at last was only induced to do battle when the keeper of the cobra, jumping into the room, seized the reptile by the tail, and brought it continually in contact with the mungoe. When the conflict had lasted about fifteen minutes, the snake was hors de combat, its fangs having been utterly torn out by the mungoe, whose attacks were wholly confined to the real seat of danger. With the cessation of activity on the part of the snake, its opponent relaxed his efforts. In the course of a few minutes, the reptiles, which exhibited few remaining signs of life, were taken out and finally knocked on the head: the poison, in each case, having been entirely destroyed by the teeth of their active little assailant. Thus much, then, has been gained for the cause of science: the unwelcome dependence placed upon the neutralizing power of the Aristolochia has been destroyed; and the scientific and popular belief in the modus operandi of snake-killing, adopted by the mungoes, has shared a like fate.

"That the full-grown animal can survive slight wounds inflicted by a fanged cobra, and without sustaining any material inconvenience on account of them," observes the editor of the Madras Spectator, "has been shown beyond dispute; but whether severe punctures, or even more superficial ones, about the body of the animal, would prove fatal, remains as yet undecided. In combat with a cobra, the mungoe—so far as experience has yet taught us—runs little risk of being wounded elsewhere than about the mouth. The cases of injury that have fallen under our notice have uniformly been those of punctures in the nose or lips. That the mungoes seemingly heeds not at all, excepting as the soreness of them may occasion him annoyance. Two mungoes are now alive and well—one of them being in our own possession—which have had repeated conflicts with fanged cobras, and been bitten by them; neither of these, however, attempted to seek for the supposed remedy, and had they striven they would not have been allowed. Nevertheless, it must be added that a young mungoe, when inoculated in the body with snake venom, did die presently, like any other animal. But, then, against this circumstance, we have to record another, namely, that of a mungoe of similar age surviving for two or three days after it had been very severely bitten. The little animal was blind of one eye, and otherwise a great sufferer, but its vital powers resisted the poison with astonishing success. We are not satisfied, indeed, that its death was the result of the venom at all, since it might have been occasioned by the physical injury received. Any way, however, it is clear that no other animal—so far as experience teaches us—could have survived the bite of a cobra in the same manner, without omission of the part had been employed. There is apparently a natural counteractive in the economy of the mungoes, which renders it to a certain extent proof against snake poison. How far this immunity may reach, we shall know better by and bye, when a sufficient number of experiments have taken place; but in the full-grown animal, we suspect that the degree of it will be found surprising."

The following extraordinary facts relating to the effects of the climate of New Zealand upon exotic vegetation are recorded in the Minutes of the Lords' Committee on Colonization. Plants, which in Europe are annuals, become perennials. This has been observed even in the case of barley, beans, &c. The wheat is remarkably good, and grows exceedingly high, the stalk being so strong that it has the power of resisting any ordinary wind, and is never laid. It is alleged, also, to have produced fifty bushels to the acre. The natives never grow wheat in large quantities. The myrtle and the fuchsia are large timber trees. Cabbages grow close to the seashore, with a heart 18 inches in diameter, and radishes become larger than mangold-wurzel, as big, in fact, as a man's leg.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

WEDNESDAY, October 4, 1848.

GEOLOGISTS account for certain phenomena in the physical world by supposing that mighty displacements of matter occasionally take place in what is termed the crust of the earth, by the upheaving of some portions of which, and the subsidence of others, the bottoms of seas become the tops of mountains, and lofty hills sink into valleys. Changes analogous to these seem to have recently happened in the political world in Europe, where the elements, after undergoing a fearful ferment and effervescence, are settling down into new forms and combinations, old outlines being obliterated and lost, ancient despotisms crumbling into sand, monarchies vanishing from view, and pure republics swelling into lofty proportions in their stead.

In the midst of these convulsions, Great Britain and her vast ultramarine possessions have experienced but slight perturbations. The attempts made in England and Ireland to work political displacements have served but to prove the stability of the law and regal authority; Chartists and Repealers, whether looking to moral or physical force for the accomplishment of their ends, in their efforts to disturb the "general floor" of our constitution, have made a lamentable disclosure of their own impotence and folly.

Germany and France are the countries to which, in this fusion of ancient institutions, our attention is most anxiously directed, and they are both in a situation which affords little encouragement to honest political innovators. The former, having been fortunately hitherto content with conquering a moderate degree of popular freedom; appears scarcely to know how to use the acquisition; having cast away her crutches, she seems ambitious of walking in stilts. Unless the innate good sense of the majority of the German people shall put down the furious theorists and pragmatical literati who are now seeking to sway their destinies, Germany must pass through another and a fiercer agony.

France is in a different, but scarcely in a better plight. On the verge of national bankruptcy, her trade paralyzed, her capital under military control, her single House of Assembly is occupied in improvising a constitution,—attempting to do in a few weeks that which the experience of all time has proved can rarely be accomplished for beneficial purposes but by the labour of ages.

To what are we indebted for this striking exemption from calamities which have overtaken so many of our neighbours? Our national amour-propre may suggest to us that, in many points, we are not as other nations are; that their misfortunes have been, in some respects, the fruit of their own or their rulers' misconduct; that our Government is not an oppressive one, nor the people rebellious or refractory; that we have already secured the exact amount of wholesome liberty which is requisite to make a free people, and which other nations have yet to gain. If all this be granted, considering the vast amount of discontent, the offspring of crime and misery, which pervades the mass of this as of all nations, and especially commercial and industrial ones, the reasons enumerated do not satisfactorily explain why, in the almost total combustion of the Continent, England should have altogether escaped the flames.

A heathen writer, extolling the greatness of his own country, and comparing it with the degradation and ruin which had befallen other flourishing empires, modestly ascribed the contrast to a cause quite independent of political considerations: "We do not excel," says Cicero, "the Spaniards in numbers, the Gauls in strength, the Carthaginians in subtlety, nor the Greeks in the arts; it is by piety and religion, and by that devout and humble sense of the power of Providence, which teaches that all events are under its guidance, that Rome stands thus exalted amongst nations, and has been enabled to conquer the world."

It would be difficult to find a parallel to the revelations which are gradually appearing respecting the Union Bank of Calcutta, except in those which startled the creditors of the United States Bank a few years ago. The conduct of the persons to whom the management of the affairs of the Union Bank was confided, supposing them to be entirely free from graver imputations, seems to have been characterized by a degree of recklessness and of indifference to the interests of the shareholders which has deservedly called down upon them their indignation and censure. No less a person than the Master in Equity in the Supreme Court of Calcutta has been suspended from his office by that Court, on account of his conduct as one of the Directors of that Bank; the judges being of opinion that, although "there was no intentional or conscious fraud" on his part, he was chargeable with gross mismanagement of the affairs of the Bank, "involving, in addition to reports of a deceptive nature, breaches of trust of the most serious description;" some of which are mentioned, viz. "lending the funds of the partnership on unauthorized securities, and becoming himself a debtor to the Bank to a large amount." It will be seen, by the present Mail, that this gentleman (Mr. W. P. Grant) has been permitted to leave Calcutta only on condition of his executing a deed transferring his whole property in trust, to answer his debts to the concern, "adjusted" at about 70,000*l*. The conduct of another person in connection with the Bank, Mr. J. S. B. Scott, is the subject of a special report of a legal gentleman of eminence, who has no hesitation in recommending his prosecution; and the strongest argument put forward against the adoption of this strong measure is, that it would be "picking out" one individual, whilst others would be spared who were in pari delicto,—two persons being expressly named as culpable, in Mr. Clarke's report, besides Mr. Scott, and "there were others," it is said, "behind the screen, whose names had not, up to this moment, been divulged." The wonder to us is, that persons in the predicament of Mr. Grant and Mr. Scott should consent to avail themselves of any means whatever of avoiding a strict judicial inquiry, nothing short of which can vindicate them after such serious imputations have been cast upon their credit and characters as official and commercial men. Moreover, if we are to trust Mr. Longueville Clarke's declaration, the trust-deed, upon the faith of which Mr. Grant was permitted to leave Calcutta, will prove a nullity. The following statement appears in Mr. Clarke's speech at the Special General Meeting of Shareholders, on the 6th August, and we cannot find that it was disputed by any of the apologists of Mr. Grant:—

"This trust deed had now been prepared; and if it should be executed as it was proposed, the account of Mr. Grant would be placed upon a footing ten times more objectionable, in his (Mr. Clarke's) opinion, so far as shareholders were concerned, than that upon which it rested at the present moment. A trust deed, to be valid, must be a deed held in trust for all the creditors of the party liable; so that, in other words, all his creditors must come in to the deed. Now, this could not be in the present instance; for, to his (Mr. Clarke's) positive knowledge, one of the creditors of Mr. Grant—the firm of Messrs. Prosser and Co.—had endeavoured to take out a writ against his person this very morning, but had failed in the attempt, from the attorneys to whom they applied having refused to be instrumental to the arrest. (Hear, hear.) How many other similar recusants there might be among Mr. Grant's creditors, he could not say; but this single case was sufficient to shew that all the creditors would not come into the arrangement; and the deed, therefore, supposing it should be executed, would be nugatory."

Yet the meeting (consisting, indeed, of only sixteen persons) voted, by sixty votes to twenty-seven, that Mr. Grant should not be arrested, as proposed by Mr. Clarke, but allowed to proceed to England; leaving behind him, as a security to the shareholders, a document which was described as a "nudum pactum." The Englishman says that nearly fifty out of the sixty votes were given by two persons, the chairman of the executive committee and another member of the legal profession; "so that our assertion," it observes, "of a professional bias existing in favour of the late Master in Equity, is fully borne out by the result." The shareholders, moreover, have resolved not to prosecute Mr. Scott, the ex-broker, for his share in the proceedings which caused the "spiriting away" of the cash of the Commercial Bank of Bombay; and this gentleman, with the view of vindicating his character against the aspersions cast upon it, proposes taking Mr. Longueville Clarke into a court of law, as defendant in an action of libel.

Then, again, we have Mr. James Hume, a barrister of the Supreme Court and a magistrate of police, who had borrowed Rs. 50,000 of the Union Bank, buying his own debt, when put up at auction, for Rs. 20,000, and endeavouring to convince the shareholders that he has thereby done them a great service, because no one would bid more at the auction than Rs. 19,000 for the debt! How can we wonder that it should be said, "There is no mercantile confidence in Calcutta?"

* In the statement published in the Calcutta papers of the sale of debts due to the Union Bank, which took place on the 22nd of July, in satisfaction of a writ of fiert facias, we find the following:—"15. A debt of Rs. 67,500, due from James Hume, Esq. to the Union Bank; as security for which the Bank holds a policy of insurance on the life of the said James Hume. With reference to this debt, Mr. Newmarch mentioned that he had been desired to state, on behalf of Mr. Hume, that the amount given in the handbills was very largely in excess of what it had already been arranged between Mr. Hume and the Executive Committee that he should pay. The latter, he said, had admitted that Rs. 50,000 was all that was due from Mr. Hume, and had consented to allow him a year's time to liquidate the debt. The first bid offered for the lot was Rs. 5,000. It was sold to Mr. R. H. Buckland for Rs. 21,000."

The shareholders of the Bank, who are at a distance from the scene where these transactions are taking place, cannot, surely, be very easy under the prospect afforded them. The bona fide creditors of the concern will not, perhaps, be so accommodating as the shareholders at Calcutta; and when assets melt away, persons must become responsible in their stead,—and the law has long, elastic feelers, and can seize its prey at vast distances. The general sentiment among the creditors, it is said, is, that they have been trifled with, and "terms which they would gladly have accepted at first, will no longer be listened to."

It is intolerable that acts savouring of moral dishonesty should be perpetrated, and the sufferers therefrom be estopped from redress by the indulgence or the negligence of those whose duty it was to prevent or punish it. In what a condition are the widows and orphans placed whom the defalcation of Sir Thomas Turton has plunged into beggary! Here was a sum little short of 100,000*l.*, belonging to intestates' estates, lodged by the Registrar in the ill-fated Union Bank; and when it is asked to whom the destitute families are to look for indemnity for losses which the law compelled them to risk, they are told that the Queen's Court, which appointed the Registrar, is not responsible; that the sureties are liable for no more than 10,000*l.* and some of them were unable to pay their proportion of that; that, "as the law stands, neither the Government of India, nor any other public body, is liable for the defalcation;" and to the question, "what course the poor defrauded parties were to take," a Secretary of the Treasury coolly replied that "that must be left very much to their own discretion."

The case of Mr. Gilbert Ricketts, the registrar at Madras, in 1817, has been cited as a precedent,—how lamentable that this precedent did not render the superintending authorities in India cautious and vigilant! In that case, Parliament stepped in to the relief of the sufferers, and the defalcation was made good out of the revenues of India; in other words, out of the scanty means of the natives of that country, who, if this course be often repeated, will, perhaps, make some serious reflections upon the boasted morality of Christians, and their readiness to shift punishment from their own shoulders upon those of innocent men.

These disclosures, we will venture to predict, will exert effects upon the Hindoo mind which missionaries will vainly endeavour to remove, and they are infinitely more worthy of the attention of sympathizers at home than the case of the Raja of Sattara, or that of the Ameers of Scinde.

DEBATE AT THE EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of the East-India Company was held at the East-India House on the 27th September. Major-General Sir James Law Lushington, Chairman of the Court of Directors, took the chair.

The Chairman informed the Court that certain accounts and papers, which had been presented to Parliament (the titles of which were read), had been laid upon the table in the proprietors' room; likewise a list of superannuations granted to Company's servants, and accounts relating to the Colleges at Haileybury and Addiscombe.

MAJOR H. B. EDWARDS.

Mr. Sullivan said, before the Court proceeded to the business of the day, he wished to draw its attention to the transcendent services which had been lately rendered to our Indian empire and to the country by Lieut. Edwards, of the Bengal Fusiliers, and Lieut. Lake, of the Bengal Engineers (hear); services which had never been exceeded in the annals of Indian warfare. (Hear.) The promptitude, sagacity, energy, and military talents of these two young officers had, he believed, saved the Indian Government from the expense of a protracted war; and although her Majesty's Government had conferred a token of approbation upon Lieut. Edwardes, and he hoped that the Court of Directors would mark their high sense of services so important, it would be gratifying if the records of this Court should testify their sense of the signal services of those two officers. (Hear.) He was sorry to say that Lieut. Edwardes had sustained a severe personal injury, having, as he understood, almost lost the use of his right hand by the accidental going off of his pistol. (Hear.) He hoped to hear an intimation of the opinions of the Court of Directors on the subject.

The Chairman said, he had great pleasure in complying with the request of the hon. proprietor, and he thought he should best shew what had been done, by calling upon the clerk to read a resolution which had been agreed to by the Court of Directors, and a letter from the India Board approving of it. (Hear, hear.)

(The following documents were then read):—

"At a Court of Directors held on Wednesday, the 13th of September, 1848, The Chairman having called the Court's attention to the despatches from the Government of India and the Government of Bombay, announcing the military operations carried on against the rebel forces of the Dewan of Moultan, by Lieut. (now Brevet Major) Herbert B. Edwardes, of the Bengal army, as communicated to the Court by the Secret Committee on the 33rd and 34th ult.

"Resolved unanimously.—That this Court do present to Major Edwardes a gold medal, in testimony of their high approbation of the important services rendered by him, in raising and organising a large force in a foreign territory, under circumstances of the greatest difficulty, in wrestling, within a very brief period, an extensive tract of country from the power of the rebels; in skillfully combining his forces with those of an ally, and in signally defeating the troops of the enemy in two pitched battles; thus evincing the possession, in the flower of his youth, of all those qualities which form and ennoble the character of the British officer."

"India Board, Sept. 21, 1848.

"Sir,—I am directed by the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India to acquaint you, that they cordially approve of the resolution passed by the Court of Directors of the East-India Company on the 13th instant, proposing to grant to Brevet Major H. B. Edwardes a gold medal, in acknowledgment of the distinguished services lately rendered by that officer in the territories of Lahore.

"I am, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,
J. D. Dickinson, Esq., &c." "THOMAS WYSE."

Mr. Sullivan was sure that this communication would give great satisfaction to the Court and to everybody in the country. (Hear.)

PROFESSOR WILSON'S WORK.

Mr. Serj. Storks begged to ask whether the Court of Directors had any objection to encourage the publication of the work of Professor Wilson, who was continuing Mr. Mill's History of British India, by purchasing copies for distribution amongst the proprietors?

The Chairman replied, that the purchasing so many copies of the work would require the expenditure of a large sum of money, which, in the present state of their finances, he did not know they would be justified in doing; but the Court of Directors would take the subject into consideration.

FEES COLLECTED AT TEMPLES IN INDIA.

Mr. Poynder said, before he proceeded to the motion of which he had given notice, he had to present eight petitions from different parts of England; namely, one from Leicester (signed by 200 persons), two from Nottingham, two from Newcastle, one from Grimsom (Notts), one from Boston (Lincolnshire), and one from Leamington, signed by 60 persons. He had no desire to trouble the Court by reading all these several petitions, but he should request that the officer of the Court might read the petition from Leicester.

(The petition was accordingly read by the clerk, as follows):—

"To the Court of Directors and Proprietors of the Hon. East-India Company.

"The Memorial of the undersigned inhabitants of the borough of Leicester, Sheweth,—That your Memorialists are intimately connected with the missionary operations which have been prosecuted for a number of years in Bengal and Orissa, and in many parts of India; that the missionaries, in the prosecution of their benevolent labours, have frequently visited the great temple of Juggernaut, and witnessed scenes of misery, infamy, and death, which no pen can describe nor heart conceive, that has not been debased by the demoralizing influence of idolatry.

"Your Memorialists, in common with multitudes in Britain and India, rejoiced in the anticipated severance of the British Government from the temple of Juggernaut, by the repeal of the pilgrim-tax and the restoration of the temple lands to the rajah and priests, in accordance with the despatch of the Hon. Court of Directors in Dec. 1844, stating in express terms that 'the discontinuance of our interference in its concerns should be complete.' These expectations have been disappointed by the annual grant of Rs. 23,000 from the British treasury, by which its popularity is increased, and multitudes are allured to this shrine of idolatry at which so many perish.

"Your Memorialists, therefore, respectfully request that decisive measures may be pressed upon the attention of the authorities of our Indian empire, that the temple of Juggernaut, and all other temples in India, may no longer receive grants of money from the British Government, but may be left entirely to the support of their own deluded votaries."

It was his duty to say that the other petitions were all from Baptist Societies. He was not a Baptist himself, but he reminded the Court that the Baptists had a very early connection with the cause of Christianity in India, and that that cause was highly indebted to them. He need not allude to Dr. Carey, who had been selected by the Marquis of Wellesley as one of the professors at the foundation of the College of Fort William; to Dr. Marshman, and other Baptist missionaries. They were, moreover, indebted to the missionaries of that peculiar society for the translations of the Holy Scriptures which were circulating in many parts of the East. The Baptist missionaries in India continued their duties, which they performed not only very laboriously, but very efficiently. These petitions from Baptist Societies ought, therefore, to be favourably received by the Court. He now came at once to the motion of which he had given notice, in which he had made a slight alteration by expunging four or five words, and it now stood thus:—

"That it appearing that, on the repeal of the pilgrim-tax at Juggernaut, together with the abolition of a year, an annual allowance of Rs. 23,000 was awarded, in consequence of which the priests were precluded from collecting their ancient fees; and, inasmuch as the separation of the British Government in India from all connection with the affairs of the temple was the chief object of the despatch of the Court of Directors, bearing date 20th February, 1838; it be referred to the Hon. the Court of Directors to consider whether it would not be advisable to rescind the present annual allowance, and to permit the attendants at the temple to collect such fees as were heretofore received under the Mahratta Government."

In this proposition he was merely following the views which the Directors themselves held when the question about the abolition of the pilgrim-tax was discussed. The Directors then said, "We think that the pilgrim-tax should be extinguished altogether, leaving it to the priests to admit votaries on their own terms." That was his proposition at present,—to leave it to the priests to make arrangements with their votaries, on their own terms. And he would add that, whilst this question was in agitation, it was established to the satisfaction of the Governor-General (Lord William Bentinck), that, at Khoolee, and Tripetty, and other western stations, the people who resorted from all parts of India made their own arrangements with the priests, without any protection from the civil or military power; and that at Benares (the holy city), whose temples were not superintended by Government, where there are no Government taxes, and where the people give little or no trouble to the magistrate, as also at Bydernath, which had equally no taxes, 100,000 pilgrims visited that temple annually, and yet there was no trouble with them. He might further add, that Lord Auckland, in a Minute of Council, dated in November, 1838, said: "An argument might be raised whether any payment would be necessary;—that was the very question now: 'The contributions of the pilgrims consist of money, in the shape of tax to Government, and of free-will offerings, by the powerful influence of their priests. It can scarcely be doubted that, as the tax shall be diminished, the offerings and gains of the priests will be increased; and it might be contended that no payment can be required.' This remark appeared prophetic, or as if spoken by anticipation of what would happen. He said that it would be a wise measure that there should be no annual payment, and he would add that he knew this was the desire and wish of the best-advised in India. Mr. Plowden, who denied any pledge,—but for which he was not referring to him now,—distinctly held that what Lord Auckland foresaw had actually arrived, and that the course prescribed by Lord Auckland ought to be pursued. He (Mr. Poynder) did not affirm this, but he asked for a reference, and would be happy if his proposition should meet the favourable views of the Court of Directors. He did not want to hurry them. He considered the subject a solemn and grave one, and he did not wish to hurry them to a decision.

Mr. Merriott, concurring with the hon. proprietor, had much pleasure in supporting the petitions he had presented. He thought that great deference was due to such men as Dr. Carey and Dr. Marshman, who had laboured zealously in India, and although, like Mr. Poynder, he was not a Baptist, yet, as a member of a society connected with missions, he felt bound to support the views contained in these petitions. He hoped the admirable letter addressed to Mr. Tucker, published by the Rev. J. Pegge, would be in the hands of all the proprietors.

Mr. Poynder.—Do you second my motion?

Mr. Merriott.—I do.

Mr. Sullivan said there was no doubt that the Rs. 23,000 was paid as a compensation for revenue rights which the British Government had assumed, and we were bound to give an equivalent.

lent for what we took away; but the priests now not only received the annual allowance, but they collected old fees, received under the former Government, and the proposition of the hon. proprietor (Mr. Poynder) was, that the priests should have a legal power of collecting those fees, by which means a desirable object would be gained, and this long-vexed question would be got rid of.

Mr. Fielder had no objection to referring the subject to the Court of Directors, if this Court were to hear no more about it, and if it was not to come before the Court, as it had, time after time. If a direct pledge had not been given, there was an honourable obligation, to continue the annual payment, and he did not see how it could be evaded.

The Chairman assured the hon. proprietor that the subject he had brought forward had not escaped the attention of the Government of India and the Court of Directors. In a despatch dated the 20th May, 1846, he found that the proposition was not approved of by the Supreme Government, and in another despatch dated the 7th June, 1846, they stated that it had been determined that it was inexpedient to alter the provision which prohibited the collection of fees by the priests. This shewed that the subject had not escaped their attention. Did not the hon. proprietor think that reverting to the old system of collecting fees would be much more dangerous and a more direct encouragement to idolatry than the annual payment of Rs. 23,000? and, if it was once authorized, it must always continue. The hon. proprietor said that he proposed a mere reference to the Court of Directors; but he (the Chairman) thought it better that such a reference should not be made. (Hear.) He thought it would be dangerous to do away with the prohibition as to the collection of fees by the priests.

Mr. Sullivan—This tax is still collected actually in all its plenitude to a larger amount than ever, and all we want is that it should not continue to be illegal.

Mr. St. George Tucker—Your object is the restoration of the fees and the re-establishment of the sayer duties;—is that your intention?

Mr. Poynder—No; certainly not.

Mr. Tucker—What is your intention? Is it the re-establishment of the sayer duties?

Mr. Sullivan—No; only that the old tax, under the old Government, should be legalized,—a tax which is now collected in fact.

Mr. Tucker—That must mean the re-establishment of the sayer duties, if the annual payment be abolished and the old taxes and fees restored.

Mr. Poynder said, the observation which the hon. director had made convinced him that the subject of the particular motion before the court had not, for some reason, received his attentive consideration. What he wanted was, that the subject should be considered, and he hoped it would be referred to the Court of Directors with that view, not as the matter stood in 1846, but as it stood now. Until he heard something like an answer, he should press it upon the court.

Mr. Hodgson observed that, as the hon. director (Mr. Tucker) said, that the legalizing the fees would re-establish the sayer duties, the proposition raised two questions—one the sayer duties, the other the pilgrim tax.

Mr. Sullivan—If you only legalize the thing, the annual payment might be withdrawn, and the priests would be better off.

Mr. Lewis said, the hon. proprietor (Mr. Poynder) did not dispute the fact that they were bound to make this annual payment, but he was anxious to get rid of the connection between the government and the temple altogether, by making it lawful for the priests to collect the tax, and thus get rid of the payment; and the simple question was, whether that could be done conveniently. He (Mr. Lewis) understood that it had been determined by the Supreme Government of India and the Court of Directors, that there would be great inconvenience attending the alteration. If so, that was an answer to the hon. proprietor. But if it were considered that the continuance of the annual payment placed the Government in an awkward predicament, and repugnant to the feelings of Christians, was there no mode by which they could get rid of the connection? Might not a principal sum of money, to be paid down at once, be handed over to the temple, in lieu of the annual payment?

The Chairman—The hon. proprietor would remember that this payment of Rs. 23,000 was guaranteed in perpetuity. We could not say "we will not pay" the Rs. 23,000 a year. This sum was a compensation for what we had taken away. It was, of course, a question for the court whether they would pay at once a very large sum of money equivalent to Rs. 23,000 a year in perpetuity. He was not prepared to say what the opinion of the Court of Directors would be upon that point.

Mr. Lewin said it was difficult to know to whom the principal money, in such a case, should be paid. A similar case had occurred at Madras; the property had been embezzled and the institution had gone to ruin. Endeavours had been made to bring it before the local courts, but the parties could not be found. He believed if a bill were filed in the Court of Chancery against the East India Company, they might be made liable.

Mr. Sullivan observed, that the hon. proprietor (Mr. Lewis) had at all events pointed out a way of getting rid of this payment.

The Chairman—At the expense of five or six laes, perhaps?

Upon the question being put from the chair,

Mr. Poynder said he had not made a motion; he had only proposed a reference.

The question was, however, put and negatived.

Mr. Poynder—Then I am beat. (A laugh.) But I hope the Court of Directors will not think themselves precluded from looking into the subject because it has not the recommendation of the Court of Proprietors.

COURTS OF JUSTICE IN INDIA.

Mr. Sullivan said, the subject to which he was about to draw the court's attention was deeply interesting to a very large number of the natives of India resident at the Presidencies. For the last ten years the natives of India had been using their best endeavours to find a remedy for the want of cheap and speedy justice, and Act after Act had passed for extending the jurisdiction of the Court of Requests at Calcutta, and for the establishment of courts for the trial of small causes; but these efforts had not been seconded here, and every one of those Acts had been prohibited in this country. He held in his hand a letter from Sir Erskine Perry, the Chief Justice at Bombay, in which that eminent individual complained of the impediments thrown in the way of legislative provision for establishing a court at that Presidency for the trial of small causes. [The hon. proprietor read very long extracts from the letter.] If any proof were wanting of the dogged determination of somebody to deprive the native community of India of the benefits of cheap and easy justice, it would be found in the passages he had read. The omission in the Act, respecting the appointment of a professional man to be clerk of the Small Cause Court, had been supplied by Sir Erskine Perry; and it now depended upon the Court of Directors whether there should be courts of this description or not. With respect to the impression which this matter had made upon the public mind, he would quote a passage from an Indian periodical, remarkable not only for its ability but for the sobriety of its language—the Friend of India. [The hon. proprietor read an extract from that paper, commenting in somewhat severe terms upon the Court of Directors, in relation to the non-adoption of a measure for the establishment of courts for obtaining cheap and speedy justice.] He had no doubt that the Court of Directors would be able to exonerate themselves from all such imputations; they might have been, in this, as in other cases, made the scape-goat of others. (Hear, hear.) But it was of great importance that the impression should be removed. Whilst the most strenuous efforts were made in this country to prevent the natives of India from receiving the boon of cheap and prompt justice, there was a readiness and an anxiety to grant that boon to the people of England, by establishing county courts, whereby every man had justice brought to his own door. There was another subject embraced in his motion, the extension of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court beyond the limits assigned to it. The court were aware that, at the first establishment of Supreme Courts in India, they had run riot; the native inhabitants of Calcutta, when the Supreme Court was first established there, were promised a mighty boon, and they flocked thither like sheep into a fresh pasture, and like sheep they came out closely shorn. The great object had since been to check the encroachments of these courts. The natives of India complained of being subjected to their jurisdiction, the judges exercising an irresponsible power. Every magistrate and every court that exceeded their duty was answerable to some authority; the Supreme Court was the only body irresponsible. The hon. proprietor concluded by moving for certain papers.

Mr. Serjeant Storks thought that the hon. proprietor laboured under misapprehension in supposing that the judges of the Supreme Courts in India were irresponsible whilst all other magistrates were responsible. When a judge acted judicially he was responsible for his acts.

The Chairman said, the remarks of the hon. proprietor, and the passages he had read, placed the Court of Directors in a most disagreeable position. He could assure the hon. proprietor that there was no desire on the part of the Court of Directors to prevent the natives of India from having speedy and economical justice (hear); and if there had been any delay in passing the Act for establishing Small Cause Courts, it was not the fault of the Court of Directors. It was necessary to take legal opinions before a measure of this kind could receive the approbation of the Court. The Court of Directors had, in July last, received a letter from the Government of India, inclosing the draft of an Act for the establishment of Small Courts; but many of the provisions were disapproved of, and another Act was prepared, founded upon the County Courts Act, 9 & 10 Victoria. The Court could not be supposed to know the law, and must advise with their law officers, and they had accordingly taken the opinion of their Standing Counsel, who recommended the adoption of one uniform system at all the presidencies, founded upon the English Statute. The Court of Directors were waiting the arrival of this draft Act, and expected to receive it by the next mail. The paper which the hon. proprietor had read imputed very unjust charges and motives to the Court of Directors. No persons could be more desirous than they were to provide cheap and speedy justice for the natives of India. With regard to the other question, the extension of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Courts, the Government of India and the Government in this country were fully alive to the evil, and every effort had been and would be made to prevent unnecessary expense to the native, and also to the European, inhabitants of India, by their being unnecessarily subjected to the process of the Supreme Courts at the presidencies. He trusted that the Court would be convinced that the Directors had thrown no obstacle in the way of the measure which the hon. proprietor had referred to, but had done what it was their bounden duty to do. He had always deprecated references to statements in newspapers in that Court, upon which they could not depend, and no statement could be more unjust than that there was an indisposition on the part of the Court of Directors to give economical justice to the people of India. With respect to the motion, most of the papers moved for had been ordered by Parliament, and he therefore hoped the hon. proprietor would not persist in it.

Mr. Sullivan withdrew his motion.

THE MUTINEERS IN THE 6TH MADRAS LIGHT CAVALRY.

Mr. Lewin rose to move for certain papers relating to the troopers in the 6th Madras Light Cavalry, who were concerned in a mutiny at Jubbulpore in 1844,—two of whom were executed, and others transported, and he was proceeding to argue that, the trial having taken place nine months after the offence, and there being irregularities in the proceedings, the men had been unjustly condemned; when

The Chairman observed that he must say he thought it imprudent on the part of the hon. proprietor to bring forward a matter like this, calculated to produce excitement in the Indian army, especially since the subject had already been brought before the Court on a former occasion by Mr. Serjeant Gaselee, who had withdrawn his motion, as one which ought not to be agitated. He was prepared with a perfect answer to the motion, but he urged its withdrawal.

Several members of the Court joined in this recommendation; but

Mr. Lewin persisted in proceeding, amidst numerous interruptions and calls to "order," which destroyed the continuity of his argument.

Mr. Sullivan seconded the motion. In justification of Lord Tweeddale, he thought, the papers should be granted.

The Chairman.—His Lordship does not require any justification in the matter.

The question, being put, was negatived, no other hand being held up in its favour.

LIEUTENANT WAGHORN.

Mr. Salomon gave notice of the following motion for the next Court:—

"That there be laid before the Court a copy of the Minute of the Court of Directors, granting £100 a year pension to Lieutenant Waghorn, R.N., for his exertions in promoting the overland mail to India, and also a copy of the correspondence with the India Board on the subject."

THE RAJAH OF SATTARA.

Mr. George Thompson inquired whether the Directors had received any further information relative to the settlement of the Sattara question?

The Chairman replied that he was sorry to say they had had none. There had been some delay in sending the papers on the part of the Bombay Government.

The Court then adjourned.

LITERARY NOTICES.

We find in the Chinese Repository (a monthly periodical, published at Canton), for September, 1847, a review of a very curious work, recently published by the celebrated Commissioner Lin, of opium-destroying notoriety, entitled Hao-kwo-too-che, or "Statistical Notices of the Ocean Kingdoms," in twelve volumes, accompanied by maps.

The career of Lin-tsh-seu has been a very remarkable one. He was first known to Europeans by a long and able memorial to the Emperor of China upon the subject of the inundations and famine which had then recently afflicted one of the central provinces of which he was foo-yuen, or deputy governor. The people pleaded their misery, and consequent inability to pay the taxes, and Lin, with a view of ascertaining their real condition, went in disguise, during the night, through the hamlets and fields. The result was, that he drew up a most touching representation of the state of the province, which Dr. Morrison pronounced one of the most interesting Chinese documents he had ever read. A few years afterwards, Lin received his sovereign's commands to stop the traffic in opium at Canton, and the vigour with which he executed the commission will not soon be forgotten. His success, however, which in another country would have raised him to the highest distinctions, was in China the real cause of his degradation. He was made a scape-goat, and, to pacify the foreigner, was dismissed from office and doomed to banishment. He is described by the reviewer of his work, evidently less a friend to Lin than to the opium trade, as possessing "a depth of thought worthy of a sage; an unshrinking firmness in carrying out his measures; a policy far beyond the ken of his countrymen; a patriotism that knows no bounds; and a noble disinterestedness scarcely ever found in a Chinese of rank." With a strange inconsistency, the writer supposes there can be combined with such lofty qualities others of the lowest character; he describes him as "mean and despicable; cruel, ruthless, and vile; obstinate, and ignorant of the first principles of foreign intercourse;" which probably means no more than that Lin is a sincere anti-opiumist.

His work, which seems to be a digest of all the information which he had been able to collect respecting foreign matters, political, historical, statistical, religious, and miscellaneous, is said to be a "compilation without any thing to equal it in Chinese literature." It appears that whilst Lin resided at Canton, he made unremitted endeavours to obtain a knowledge of all facts relating to the world beyond the China Sea, and carefully collected every thing published by foreigners in Chinese, or translated into that tongue, concerning foreign countries, including religious tracts, treatises on trade and commerce, short descriptions of England and of the United States, &c., and he caused translations to be made of various articles in English and American newspapers. The work appeared in 1844, and has been (it appears) extensively circulated amongst the higher officers of government at Peking and in the provinces.

The aim of the author is evidently, by making his countrymen better acquainted with foreign nations, to put them more upon their guard, and enable them to defend the empire with more effect in the event of a future war. In the outset, Lin, accordingly, discusses the means which China possesses for defence, and points out one source of weakness, in the want of a standing army and a regular navy, which are maintained by foreign nations. He then treats upon Chinese trade, laying down many sound principles and sensible maxims, and then proceeds to give a geographical account of the world, the maps being rudely executed, and a bad imitation of our own: as they are taken indiscriminately, some of them appear to be of the date of Ptolemy.

Lin then devotes four books to a geographical and miscellaneous description of Annam (Cochin China, &c.), Siam, and Burmah, embodying much information wholly new to the European reader, especially with regard to the connection that subsisted for so many centuries between China and the south of Asia. He next treats of Manilla and the Indian Archipelago, in which he has borrowed largely from the works of Europeans. He states that Borneo had intercourse with China as early as the sixth century, and he notices Penang and Singapore.

The twelfth book, on Japan, is rich in information little known to our scholars. Lin mentions the prohibition of the Popish religion in these islands, and the treading upon the cross, and he is unmercifully severe upon the Dutch.

Then follow no less than six books upon India, which, with many errors, contain much historical information respecting that country, identified with the Ta-tsin and Foo-lin of Chinese historians; as well as accounts of Afghanistan, Cashmere, Yarkand, Bokhara, &c.

In his account of Africa, which he writes "Lybia," he confounds ancient Carthage with Barbary, and enumerates kingdoms as well as rivers in that continent which have not yet found a record upon our maps. He does not omit to descant upon the African slave trade.

The reader is then introduced to Europe, beginning with Portugal, after which are Spain, Holland, and Neu-she-ne-jin, supposed to be Belgium. France and Italy follow; then Germany. The writer has not arrived at a very clear comprehension of the geographical and political divisions and relations of these states, and this part of his work, consequently, exhibits an amusing jumble of facts and fable. Of Gow-se-tih-le-gaou (which is surmised to be Austria), Hungary, and Poland, short accounts are given, as well as of the kingdoms of Suy-lin (Sweden?), Foo-no-wei (Norway?), Denmark, and Prussia. Switzerland is not overlooked.

We then come to England, Scotland, and Ireland, and Lin has given a fair report of the position, resources, trade and colonies of the United Kingdom, albeit he shews, by casual remarks, that he is no Anglomaniac. The next chapter is occupied with Russia in Europe and Asia, and several succeeding chapters treat of Mih-le-kea (America), and Me-le-kéen (the United States), all the particulars respecting which are copied from a published description in Chinese; Mexico, South America, the West Indies, &c. The newly discovered continent at the South Pole is cursorily noticed.

Lin then devotes a chapter to an account of all religions, not remarkable (as may be supposed) for its accuracy; accompanied by a table of the comparative chronologies of China and the West. Dissertations upon ancient geography (as taught by the Buddhists) and upon ethnography succeed, and the work concludes with chapters upon the politics, literature, opinions, and manners of the "Barbarian" nations, with extracts from European newspapers containing favourable estimates of the Celestial empire.

The dryness inseparable from such a work is occasionally relieved by historical anecdotes, tales, &c.

The publication (which, the reviewer states, has already given an impulse to the study of foreign geography), with all its faults, is likely to do much good, by stimulating inquiry, and teaching the Chinese to cast off the fetters of absurd prejudice, and to avail themselves of the practical knowledge of Europe, of which so industrious a nation would make excellent use. A celebrated Japanese writer said, with as much truth as point, that "Asiatics might be compared to wood, and Europeans to iron, and that to shape the former, the latter is indispensable."

H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS, &c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavour to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

HOSIERY and OUTFITTING WAREHOUSE, 146, Strand, near Somerset House.—Mrs. WHITE begs most respectfully to recommend to her friends (more particularly those resident in India) her most beautiful make of Lisle Thread Hose and Half Hose for Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear; their lightness, durability, and comfort can only be appreciated by those who have tried them. She also strongly recommends a beautiful description of Merino Vest and Drawers adapted for the East and West Indies.

MOURNING,—COURT, FAMILY, AND COMPLIMENTARY.

THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

The LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, 247, 249, and 251, Regent Street.—W. C. JAY, Proprietor.

A WIDOW LADY, residing in a pleasant neighbourhood, in a large and airy house westward of St. James's Park, is desirous of receiving charge of TWO or THREE CHILDREN, who, while they would have the concomitant advantages of a home, their education would be superintended with that of her own little girl and boy. To parents in the East Indies, or about to leave England, who may wish to intrust their children to the care of a lady who will undertake to provide for their comfort and bestow upon them every kind attention, the opportunity which is now offered may be deemed eligible. A resident governess and a good nurse are kept, whose time is entirely devoted to the children. References as to respectability required of those who may apply, and the same afforded by the Advertiser, with every further information.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

ALL interest is now suspended upon the issue of the struggle which has, probably, ere this, taken place before Mooltan. That interest is heightened by the well-ascertained fact, that Moolraj, cut off from all hope of making terms with the enemies he has justly provoked, has taken counsel from despair, and, setting "his life upon a cast," is resolved to "stand the hazard of the die." Accountable, as he must know himself to be, for the double guilt of rebellion and murder, this course, whilst it is the most heroic, is, perhaps, the wisest. He could purchase by submission no more than he might win by determined resistance,—life, without everything that sweetens it; perpetual restraint, without those "innocent and quiet" thoughts which can transform a prison into a hermitage; and he may avail himself of all the chances which wait upon human affairs, from disunion amongst his assailants, treachery (the seeds of which he was still endeavouring to sow) amongst our native troops, the climate, and the multitude of contingencies to which war everywhere, and especially in the East, is proverbially exposed.

The advices from before Mooltan are to so late a date as the 1st September. The Lahore and Ferozepore columns, which moved down the Ravi, the Chenab, and the Sutlej, joined the British camp on the 18th and 19th August. The former (called the right column), composed of the 1st, or Col. Harvey's brigade, which General Whish accompanied, reached Sirdarpore on the 12th August, H. M.'s 10th Foot being then about to join from on board their boats. Their progress continued up to the 16th without any material interruption; but on the night of that, or the morning of the ensuing day, the advanced picquets gave notice of the approach of a considerable body of Mooltanis. It appears that, about the 14th, a detachment had been sent out by the advancing column to close up the communication of the canals with the river, to prevent the inundation of the country. This detachment intrenched themselves, and took every precaution against surprise, so that a body of the insurgents, about 1,500, detached to attack them, found our party too well secured. They then attempted to surprise the head-quarter column by a night assault. Keeping clear of the artillery and irregular horse, on the night of the 16th, they threw themselves with great spirit upon the camp of H. M.'s 10th and the 8th N.I., when about 16 miles from Mooltan. About 10 o'clock, the camp was put upon the qui vive by a heavy firing heard in the direction of that place. The tents were struck and preparations made, when, about 2 o'clock in the morning, the attack was made, and lasted nearly an hour, the enemy being repulsed with the loss of 25 killed and wounded, and a few prisoners. The flank companies of H. M.'s 10th were alone in action, the rest being kept in reserve. On our side only eight were wounded—none severely; Colonel Franks was struck by a spent ball. The march was resumed next morning, and on the 18th the brigade took up its ground within sight of the fort of Mooltan, at a place named Mareeseethul.

The left, or Ferozepore column, proceeding down the right bank of the Sutlej, were divided on arriving at Kur-rumpore, the 49th N.I. remaining to accompany the 32nd Foot, as soon as they should reach the same spot by water, and the rest (Anderson's troop of H. A., the 11th lt. cav., 11th irreg. cav., and 51st and 72nd regts. N.I.) striking off to the right, to effect a junction with the camp of General Whish, which they reached on the 19th, at Mareeseethul. H.M.'s 32nd Foot, or rather the head-quarters and six companies, having reached Kur-rumpore by water, landed, and proceeded, with the 49th N.I., to follow the main body in the direction of Mooltan. They arrived in camp, with three troops of the irregular horse, sent as an escort, on the 24th. The battering-train of 30 heavy guns reached the landing-place opposite Bahawulpore on the 19th; ten days were found necessary to make preparations for moving; they marched for the scene of action on the 28th, and were expected to arrive about the 3rd or 4th September; three troops of the 11th irregulars, with a wing of the 49th N.I., escorting them. Active operations were to be commenced immediately on their arrival.

In the mean time, it appears from an extra of the Delhi Gazette of the 7th September, that an action of some importance took place on the 1st, which is thus reported by the Bahawulpore correspondent of the Gazette, who dates his letter the 3rd September:—

"On the 1st of September, about 7 o'clock in the morning, the troops of the Dewan came out of the fort to oppose the British troops, who had advanced from their camp at Mareeseethul towards the town, and taken up a position at matchlock-distance from the walls. An engagement occurred, which lasted for some time, when the Mooltanis, being beaten back with great loss, took refuge in a ravine, known as Sheedee Lall ka Karewa, close to the walls of the town. Nothing occurred during the night."

The army assembled round Mooltan consisted of about 28,000 men, with thirty pieces of heavy ordnance and nearly as many light guns. Of these, 6,000 are British troops, the rest Sikhs, Beloochees, Deoudpootras, &c., mostly hardy and determined men, though ill-disciplined, and, like most irregulars, not quite to be depended on in extremity. The army of Moolraj is said to amount to 10,000 men, with about 20 guns in all: of these 2,000 selected men hold the citadel, determined, it is said, to resist to the last. The rest awaited our advance in an intrenched camp under the guns of the outer fortress.

On the 16th the troops under Major Edwardes exchanged camps with those under Rajah Shere Singh. On the 28th General Whish reviewed Major Edwardes's troops at Soorajkoond.

All accounts represent the ex-Dewan as active and determined, supported by some devoted followers, too deeply implicated, probably, like himself, in guilt, to expect mercy. He was continually sending out skirmishing parties, and endeavoured to cut off our camp-followers engaged in collecting forage. Several heads of cattle, and among them some camels and an elephant of General Whish, had been captured by the Dewan's parties. As soon as the two columns arrived, Major Edwardes and Lieutenant Lake proceeded to pay a visit to General Whish, and on their way back, a party, despatched by the Dewan, attempted to intercept them. Heavy guns were fired during the night from the fort, to keep our troops upon the fret. Besides these ordinary measures of annoyance, he had sent emissaries into the British camp, in the hope of seducing our sepoys, the instruments being deserters from our native army, who promise high pay and other advantages. Two of these came to a sepoy of the 51st N.I., who appeared to agree to take service with the Dewan on Rs. 15 a month. After a while, he induced the decoys to go with him to his tent, and then quietly slipped away to report to the officer of his company what had occurred. The two men were forthwith apprehended, and Moolraj's purwannahs found on their persons. Supplies were beginning to become scarce in the camps.

The forebodings of the terrible effects of the climate upon the troops during the march have been remarkably nullified; the mortality, and even sickness, in the early part of their progress, it is said, were less than might have been expected had the troops remained in their barracks at Lahore and Ferozepore. Latterly there has been an increase of sickness amongst the Europeans, which is, however, attributed to mismanagement. The native troops were healthy.

This practical refutation of the apprehensions of the "croakers" has renewed the complaints of the Indian press generally against the Government for the delay of operations against the rebellious Dewan. "Had energetic measures been pursued in reference to the insurrection of Mooltan, when the Dewan first threw off his allegiance," observes the Friend of India, "tranquillity would long since have been restored to the Punjab." That journal declares the opinion in Calcutta to have been "that the hitch was in the military, rather than in the political department;" whereas the Mofussillite exculpates the commander-in-chief impliedly at the expense of the head of the Government.

The preliminary operations commenced by the beleaguering forces indicate an impression that the fort of Mooltan is a place of more strength than some accounts have represented. The Englishman states that the fort is described by several officers who have reconnoitred it as looking very strong; "but if we may judge from the plan sent to us for publication, it has no flanks, and cannot therefore long sustain a heavy fire, or make effectual resistance to a determined assault."

The outbreak in the Hazareh country, described in the papers brought by the last and present mail as an insulated mutiny of the Sikh troops in that district, unconnected with any disaffection on the part of the people, had assumed, on the eve of the departure of this mail, a more serious complexion. The Delhi Gazette of the 7th of September states, as the result of the accounts, that the Sikh troops in the Hazareh country had been incited to mutiny by the governor of the district, Sirdar Chuttur Singh, Attarewallah, father of Rajah Shere Singh (now before Mooltan), at the head of a considerable body of Sikh troops. It appears that the soldiery in the Hazareh country became impressed with an idea that the city of Lahore had been denuded of British troops, when the expedition marched to Mooltan, and that the opportunity would be a good one for repossessing themselves of the capital of the Punjab, and driving out the Posinghees. The plan was formed by the governor himself, and approved of by all the officers except Colonel Canara, the commandant of artillery, who was shot by the soldiery. They prepared at once for a march on Lahore, for obtaining possession of the important fortress of Attok, and for inducing the Sikh troops in the Sindh Sagur Doab (the country enclosed by the Indus to the west and the Jelum to the east) to join them. The first part of their plans was defeated by the readiness of the Mahomedan inhabitants of the country to meet the wishes of the assistant to the resident in the district (Capt. James Abbott, of the Bengal artillery), who apparently followed the plan adopted by Major Edwardes, and opposed an effectual barrier to the egress of Sikhs from their country. The forces collected by Captain Abbott were soon sufficiently strong, not only to prevent the Sikhs from leaving the country, but even from quitting the fort. The attempt on Attok (where, it appears, Sirdar Chittur Singh had friends who were willing to surrender the place) might have been successful, but for the promptness and energy of Major Lawrence, the assistant at Peshawur, who deputed Lieut. Nicolson, at the head of a strong detachment of Pathan cavalry and infantry, to take possession of the fort, and overawe such of the Sikh garrison as might be inclined to treachery. A forced march from Peshawur enabled Lieut. Nicolson to accomplish his mission, and having secured the fort and expelled some of the malcontent soldiery, he proceeded on to Hussun Abdall, to counteract the machinations of the rebellious Sirdar, and had succeeded in preventing a considerable body of troops from proceeding to join the mutineers in Hazareh.

So far reached the reports from this quarter, until the eve of the departure of the mail; when the Delhi Gazette issued an Estra, containing the following important intelligence, the correctness of which, it states, may be fully relied on:—

"We regret much to have to announce that Sirdar Chittur Singh having, on the night of the 26th of August, attacked Captain Abbott, with 1,500 country people under him, that officer, having no guns to oppose to those of the Sirdar, was compelled to fall back on Hussun Abdall; and it is the opinion of the British officers that they will have to throw themselves into the fort of Attok. We are assured that Captain Abbott has proofs of Maharajah Goolab Singh's complicity. A requisition left Lahore for Simlah on the 1st for a large force to proceed towards the disturbed country; and on the 2nd inst. H. M. 61st, the 53rd and 3rd regts. N. I., and the 2nd irreg. cav., with a proportion of artillery, were ordered to hold themselves in readiness at Julundhur to march at a moment's warning. On the 30th of August General Whish ordered Shere Singh to move off to a distance of 36 miles from Mooltan. His reasons may easily be guessed."

It is satisfactory to learn that the other parts of the Lahore territories remained perfectly tranquil. A few arrests had taken place at the capital, and more were contemplated, but they were of no importance. At Peshawur, whence the latest advices are to the 28th August, the Sikh troops had manifested no symptoms of a desire to fraternize with their brethren in Hazareh; and if they were to do so, the assistance of Sirdar Sultan Mahomed Khan, tendered to Major Lawrence, as also that of the many Urbabs, &c., of the neighbourhood, would be sufficient to put down even a larger number of mutineers than could be mustered at the western capital. The refusal of Dost Mahomed Khan to lend his aid to the insurgent cause is confirmed. A Sikh fuqeer, an emissary of Dewan Moolraj, who had been to Cabul to endeavour to induce the Ameer to afford assistance to the Mooltan rebel, and had been ostensibly dismissed with a refusal to hear anything on the subject, having gone into the Yoozoofzaie districts on a similar errand, was there seized by one of the chiefs, who sent him in to Major Lawrence. He received a fair trial at Peshawur, and having been convicted on clear evidence, was hanged.

These disturbances provoke a repetition of the cry for annexation of the country to our territories. "The Punjab," says the Englishman, "must be remodelled; there appears no alternative except the relinquishment of all interference, or that complete annexation which will leave the British Government at liberty to adopt whatever plans may be deemed best for the peace and improvement of the country." We have treated upon this subject elsewhere.

From Affghanistan and Central Asia little is added to the intelligence brought by the last mail. Dost Mahomed Khan and his sons still seemed intent upon an expedition into Toorkistan. Sirdar Hyder Khan had been nominated to succeed his father. The news-writers charge the Ameer with keeping up secret political correspondence with Maharajah Goolab Singh and Dewan Moolraj by means of the Lohanis. The country between Candahar and Ghuzni is in a state of disorder, and a little war was carrying on between the chiefs of Kelat-i-Ghilzie and Candahar. The ruler of Bokhara had met such a determined resistance on the part of the inhabitants of Shuhursubz, that he was compelled to retreat.

The local incidents at the presidencies, deserving of prominent notice, are few. At Calcutta, the affairs of the eternal Union Bank appear to occupy less of public attention; but the arrangements for the liquidation of its debts are still a subject of melancholy interest to those concerned. Not much had yet been done towards the final consummation, but there was some reason to hope for satisfactory results from the resolutions adopted at a large private meeting of shareholders, who came to the determination to make a grand effort to furnish the executive committee with the means of declaring a considerable dividend for consentient creditors in October. Meanwhile, debts of the nominal value of five lakhs had been sold for Rs. 70,000. The Supreme Court had made absolute a rule for a new trial in the case of "The Bank v. W. P. Grant, Rustomjee Cowasjee, and others." The Law Commission, which became defunct by the departure of the last remaining member, Mr. Daniel Elliott, to occupy a seat in council at Madras, has been revived by a commission issued to Mr. Bethune and Mr. Millet, members of the Council of India, to act as law commissioners, Mr. John Peter Grant being appointed their secretary. The Governor-General was expected to depart for the Upper Provinces in the beginning of October.

From Madras we hear that Sir Henry Pottinger, whose health has been indifferent since his arrival, was about to leave the presidency for the hills. The trial of Dr. Mouat had closed, but the result was not known. Dr. Daubeny, of the Madras army, and some other parties connected with what is known as the "Kotagerry tragedy," had been sent down to the presidency for the purpose of enabling the police authorities to institute a rigid examination into the circumstances attending the murder of the infant child of Mrs. Frere, and the sudden and suspicious death of that lady. The Madras journals state that the aspect of affairs at Hyderabad was a shade more hopeful; that "General Fraser has had a conference with the Nizam, at which, in reply to his Highness's complaints of the Dewan's inefficiency, he pointed out the unreasonableness of expecting a minister to succeed when the confidence and support of his sovereign were openly and systematically withheld;" that "the resident's arguments appear to have produced some effect, as Sooraj-ool-Moolk has had two interviews with the Nizam, when his nuzzaranas, or presents, were accepted, which betokens a return, in appearance at least, of royal favour." On the other hand, the Calcutta Englishman says:—"From Hyderabad our latest advices are that, since General Fraser's return to the residency, he has almost ostentatiously declined any interference in the affairs of the Nizam's government, so much so, that it was surmised to be the intention to leave affairs to take their own course, until impending ruin should make the interference of the paramount state unavoidable."

The Bombay journals report some improvement in business, and that a large number of shares (30,000, the whole number) had been taken up in the railway company, so that great hopes are entertained that this important undertaking would soon be commenced. The Governor remained in the Deccan, but was expected at Bombay about the 15th October. The Commander-in-Chief was also in the Deccan, engaged on a tour of inspection in Guzerat, which, and the districts adjoining, have not been visited by the head of the Bombay army for above twenty years. Some disturbances have of late made their appearance in some of the regiments in this quarter, which his Excellency thinks it well to inquire into in person. The Lord Bishop, who had proceeded to the Southern Mahratta country on a tour of visitation, was to return to Bombay about the beginning of November, by way of Sholapore and Sattara.

The rebellion in Ceylon appears to have been completely put down. It is now said to have been designed before the imposition of the new obnoxious taxes was known, and to have had no concern with the finance measures of Lord Torrington. Tranquillity prevailed in the lately disturbed districts, and the trials of the ringleaders were in progress. The Ceylon Times of August 15, however, states that "the natives are gathering by thousands to the north of Matelle, for a more determined attempt. A night or two previous to the 15th, Capt. Watson, with a few of the Rifles, lighted a fire on the top of the loftiest hill near Kandy, when, as if by magic, the whole of the neighbouring heights were simultaneously illuminated; showing the existence of a wide-spread conspiracy." Several had already been shot; among them the Buddhist priest who anointed the pretender to the crown, and who was put to death in his full sacerdotal dress. He pleaded strongly against this insult to his order and religion. Mootooswamy had hitherto eluded capture; but was hourly expected to be brought in. The estate of Sir Herbert Maddock had been severely injured by the insurgents.

The Friend of India,—which attributes the insurrection "almost entirely, if not altogether," to the injudicious taxation imposed upon the people of Ceylon, who were reminded by the capitation-tax of the "odious compulsory labour impost,"—traces these obnoxious innovations, and this "hasty introduction of European theories of taxation into a country to which they are so totally unsuited," to "the intermeddling of the Home Government with colonial appointments of trust and importance," and to the "introduction of men into the administration who are strangers to the country."

"Ceylon possesses a civil service, formed in a great measure on the model of the Company's civil service. The appointments are made in England, and the civilians, though scantily paid, have hitherto enjoyed the prospects of rising gradually to situations of influence and emolument. The highest posts in the service were formerly the reward of administrative experience and merit, and the strongest stimulus to zeal and exertion was thus diffused through every rank of the service. But, unfortunately, there was not to be found in Downing-street that inflexible adherence to the maxims of a sound policy which predominates in Leadenhall-street. Whatever may be the failings of the Court of Directors, they have never deviated for a moment from that plan of administration which past experience had taught them to be the best for India, even to promote their own individual interests. They have never interfered at all with appointments in this country; but, while they reserved to themselves the nomination to writerships, have left the distribution of local patronage entirely in the hands of those on whom the responsibility of the Government was thrown. Not so, however, has it fared with the crown colony in India. There the privileges of the civil service have been unscrupulously invaded, without wasting a thought on the baneful influence which such supersessions must produce on the minds of its members, or on the measures of Government. Offices, which had always been considered as belonging to the colonial civil service, and to which its members had been accustomed to look forward as the reward of eminent talent and local experience, have been given away to those who were strangers to the service and to the country, upon the sole ground of parliamentary and official influence. The example set by the Tories, of sending out a colonial secretary from among their own partisans, and placing him over the heads of the whole service, has been emulated by the Whigs, in the appointment of Mr. Benjamin Hawes's son-in-law to another office of dignity, trust, and emolument, which had always belonged to the local service. The evil is on the increase, and as one after another of those prizes which were formerly attached to the colonial service become the objects of ministerial jobbery, the character of the Ceylon civil service is gradually deteriorated, and the administration of public affairs vitiated. These appointments in Ceylon may be turned to account by instructing us how the patronage of India will be dealt with, if ever the administration should be transferred to the Crown. Parliamentary interest will force into the higher departments of the service men who have scarcely any other recommendation, and all recollection of the conservatism of Leadenhall-street will be lost in the jobs of Downing-street. Those who come out to India, with nothing to recommend them but the ability they believe themselves to possess, will find their hopes limited, as at present, to deputy-collectorships or deputy-magistratehips, or sub-deputy opium agencies; while the higher appointments, the secretaryships to Government, the memberships of the Board, the accountant-generalships, will be bestowed on parliamentary partisans, or the sons, or the nephews, or the sons-in-law, of those who bask in the sunshine of ministerial favour."

Our papers by this Mail reached the Post-office not later than four o'clock on the afternoon of Thursday the 26th; our personal application to have them delivered to us was disregarded, and they were not delivered until the following morning at nine o'clock, otherwise our subscribers might have had this journal a day earlier.

BENGAL.

MOVEMENTS OF THE MOOLTAN FORCE.

The head-quarter column, under Gen. Whish, had proceeded from Lahore direct, and descended the Ravee and Chenuab. It consisted of H.M.'s 10th and a troop of horse artillery—the former of these having been conveyed in boats—the 7th irregular horse, and the 8th and 52nd N.I. marching by the left bank of the river. By the 12th of August they had got within six marches of Mooltan. The camp was attacked on the 16th, while sixteen miles from Mooltan. About ten at night heavy firing was heard in the direction of the fortress. About midnight the quartermaster-general rode into the camp of H.M.'s 10th and told the commanding officer to be prepared for an attack. The tents were struck in a moment, and at two in the morning the enemy opened their fire. Finding themselves in front of the cavalry and artillery, they boldly advanced on the flank companies of the infantry thrown out to receive them. They were saluted by a heavy fire of musketry, when they retired. The skirmish lasted about an hour and a half. The insurgent force was understood to amount to betwixt 1000 and 2000: they carried off their wounded, but left eighteen dead and some prisoners behind them. They appear to have expected to catch us off our guard, or with our hands full preparing for the march. It was a bold adventure of the Moolraj to send a detachment of this size to his rear, with 20,000 of his opponents in his front and on his flank. The light companies of H. M.'s 10th and 8th N. I. were the only troops on our side engaged: we had seven or eight wounded, but no one killed. The column now moved on, and in two days more reached their encamping ground near to Mooltan; where on the 19th they were joined by the leading detachment of the Ferozepore brigade. Turning for a little from this to the march of the other troops. The Ferozepore column, consisting of the battering train of thirty heavy guns, H. M.'s 32nd foot—both of which proceeded by water,—a troop of horse artillery, the 11th regular and 11th irregular cavalry, the 49th, 51st, and 72nd N.I., got nearly as far down as Bahawalpore by about the 12th August, and took the route direct for Mooltan. On this latter date they were encamped at a place called Kurumpore. Capt. Master, commanding the irregular horse, here received orders to move with three troops and a wing of the 49th N.I. to a landing-place near by to stop the fleet of boats with H. M.'s 32nd; the remainder of the brigade was desired to move direct on Mooltan, then five marches distant. The other wing of the 49th and the residue of the horse were ordered to the landing-place lower down, opposite Bahawalpore, to escort the train, ordnance stores, and heavy baggage. Hitherto all had gone well, but shortly after the heat became tremendous; the thermometer in an hospital tent attempted to be cooled by wet blankets stood at 127 deg.—in hill tents it could not be reduced lower than 118 deg. The body of the force reached Mooltan on the 19th, and joined the Lahore column; H. M.'s 32nd, with the wing of the 49th and 11th irregular horse escorting them, were five days behind. The battering train had reached its landing-place on the 19th; ten days were occupied in preparations for the march, and they moved on the 28th. The guns would reach their destination in six days, and active operations be commenced immediately. The country around Mooltan owes its fertility entirely to artificial irrigation, the water being conducted by canals from Chanaub and distributed in little rills over the fields: wells are abundant everywhere. On the occasion of the engagement of the 1st of July these had formed the chief strongholds of the enemy; and as the river was now near the period of flood, it was feared the country might be inundated. To prevent this, a party of 100 workmen were detached from the main column on the 14th, and placed on board the steamer Conqueror with an abundant supply of entrenching tools. An escort of 1,000 Sikh soldiers, with two guns, commanded by Mallee Singh, accompanied them, and were directed to establish themselves near the mouths of the canals. Opposite one of these the steamer anchored in five feet water, and directed her heavy guns on the banks. The party of the Sikh commander threw up a strong entrenchment of about four hundred yards long from one canal to another, and placed their heavy 26-pounders in battery, so as to prevent the consequences of surprise. An embankment across the canal was commenced by sinking a boat loaded with faggots and earth, but the banks being of sand the force of the water quickly carried the whole away. Another was now begun at the mouth of the large canal: the current here was very violent, carrying off the earth almost as rapidly as it was thrown in, so that it was necessary to labour night and day. It was hoped that in a short time the cutting off of the water by all the canals would be successfully completed. It was against the embanking party that the detachment which attempted the surprise on the 16th was understood to have been directed, but finding them in a position where there was no hope of attacking them with success, they directed their efforts against the main column. With preparations so overwhelming on every side of him, it is wonderful with what determination the Moolraj holds out—with how much constancy his men adhere to him. He is said to have 10,000 in all under his command; of these 8,000 are outside, and 2,000 chosen heroes within the walls,—who are determined to sell their lives as dearly as possible, and to fight to the last.—Bombay Times, Sept. 14.

THE UNION BANK.

The Friend of India, Aug. 10, contains the following observations upon the misappropriation of the four lakhs of rupees transmitted by the Commercial Bank:—

"The reader will bear in mind that the misapplication of these funds, whoever may be the party on whom the odium rests, was the most flagitious of the transactions in which the Directors of the Union Bank were implicated. The larger portion of the remittance was made away with after the correspondent of the Bombay Bank in Calcutta had called the attention of the Secretary of the Union Bank to the subject, and expressed considerable anxiety for the funds thus entrusted to it, and received a reply intended to lull him into security, and to impress on him the conviction that all the money was safe, and was in course of remittance to Bombay. No transaction has brought greater discredit on the City of Palaces; and no transaction more imperatively required the inquiry of a jury. The shareholders of the Union Bank directed their legal adviser, in conjunction with other gentlemen, to examine into this affair, and to trace out the parties who had received the funds. With laudable industry and zeal, Mr. Clarke ferreted out the entries in the Bank accounts, and pursued his inquiries till he had obtained the most minute and accurate information of the successive appropriation of the funds. The bills were entrusted for sale to Mr. J. S. B. Scott, the agent of the Bank, and he received positive instructions from the secretary not to allow this sum to be mixed up with other accounts, but to keep it distinct for transmission in the shape of Bengal Post Bills to Bombay. The discoveries made by Mr. Clarke appeared to afford ground for sending the case to a jury, and putting Mr. Scott upon the justification of his proceedings. The subject was brought forward at the meeting, and urged on its attention by several of the most high-minded and influential gentlemen present. Three gentlemen of the bar, however, were also present, one of whom was the professional adviser of Mr. Scott; they strongly dissuaded the meeting from acceding to this proposal, and they were enabled to carry the day. The idea of a prosecution was dropped. Mr. J. S. B. Scott, having thus secured the object for which Mr. Dickens' professional services were engaged at the meeting, immediately turned round upon the gentleman who had made these inquiries and drawn up the report, and instructed his attorney to bring an action of libel against him. And so, instead of Mr. J. S. B. Scott's being prosecuted for having appropriated the funds of the Commercial Bank to the relief of his own account with the Union Bank, the gentleman who, in pursuance of the directions of the Union Bank, endeavoured to fix the guilt of these transactions on those who had received the money, is to be prosecuted for his pains. However conclusive Mr. Clarke's statements may appear to those who have read them, it is not our province to decide upon the guilt or innocence of Mr. Scott, and we desire to abstain from all remarks on the subject. But it is impossible not to perceive that the inevitable result of this proceeding will be to quash all further inquiries into the dark deeds which led to the ruin of the shareholders. The transactions which marked the last year of the Bank's existence have no parallel in the history of Indian delinquencies; and it was hoped that these mysteries of iniquity would have been diligently unravelled and fearlessly exposed to the indignation of mankind. But the prosecution of the individual who was entrusted with the inquiries regarding one of these transactions must necessarily prevent all inquiry into others. The present example will be sufficient to deter any other individual from sitting upon another committee. It will inspire the same kind of discretion which Æsop tells us the dead body of the ass taught the jackal. No man will voluntarily expose himself to the inconvenience and humiliation of an action for libel in the cause of public justice; and we must thus relinquish all expectation of seeing these mysterious and atrocious proceedings dragged into the light of day."

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Haddington with the London Mail of July 24, arrived at Calcutta Sept. 4.

MR. DYCE SOMBRE.—The Delhi Gazette states that an action has been commenced by the committee of the person of Mr. Dyce Sombre against the Government of India, in the court of the principal sudder ameen of Delhi, for the recovery of the pergunnah of Jharsa, in the neighbourhood of Goorgaon, late in the possession of the Begum Sumroo; the amount of the suit for stamp-duty is estimated at twenty-six lacs.

THUG FAMILIES.—The same paper says:—"In consequence of the increasing number of younger children of Thugs, monthly admitted into the Jubbulpore institution, and the progress the older ones have made in the manufacture of goods undertaken by the school, the late infant establishment is becoming daily of greater importance. Upwards of six hundred hands are, we are credibly informed, employed daily from sunrise to sunset, and the present managers are naturally anxious to increase the sale of their produce."

OUZD.—A letter from Lucknow mentions that the king has now delegated the supreme power, unlimited, almost, to the minister, Ali Nucky Khan, who complained of being thwarted in his measures by the king's minions; the minister is trying his best to collect the revenues of the country, the king amusing himself the best way he can in his palace.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—We mentioned the other day that the period of Lord Gough's command had been extended; but the fact is that his lordship has been formally re-appointed Commander-in-Chief in India, and proposes availing himself of the appointment to remain one or two years longer in this country. The reason of this is, that the Court of Directors will not have Sir Charles Napier, and that the Duke will not let them have any one else. They have applied several times to his grace for a Commander-in-Chief, and as often has he sent them the name of Sir Charles Napier.—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 7.

THE RANEE OF LAHORE.—The Benares Recorder states that several ladies of that station have called upon the Ranees, and she has become cheerful and reconciled in consequence.

A NATIVE OTHELLO.—The play of Othello, which character was sustained by a native, the first instance in India of such a circumstance, was enacted at the Sans Souci theatre on the 17th of August, and was partially successful.

THE INDIGO CROP has turned out unexpectedly large, and the planters will at least have quantity to make up for probable low prices: 130,000 maunds is the latest estimate, and we believe it will be found nearly correct.—Englishman.

UNION BANK.—At the auction of the Union Bank assets, on Saturday, the whole amount realized was Co.'s Rs. 74,100, on debts amounting to Co.'s Rs. 5,29,000. In consequence of an intimation from the solicitors of Carr, Tagore, and Co., only one debt in which that firm was mixed up was sold, and this, it is understood, to try some legal question, arising out of the notice which the solicitors issued to intending purchasers. Eight other claims in which that firm's name was mixed up were consequently withdrawn. As many of our readers as may have seen the correspondence which lately appeared as to the late chairman of the Union Bank, Mr. Storm, and his debts, may be somewhat surprised to hear that the two judgments, which have formed the subject of discussion lately, were put up together in one lot, although advertised separately, the one for 14,000, and the other for 25,000. A spirited competition took place for the united lot, and it was eventually knocked down to Mr. Storm's solicitor, Mr. Hedger, for the sum of Co.'s Rs. 16,500.—Englishman, Aug. 28.

A special act has been applied for by some of the resident shareholders of the Bank, in order to wind up its concerns; others talk of the Insolvent Court. The Hurkaru says, if the shareholders are to be harassed with demands, it is best for them to seek the protection of that court.

GWALIOR.—The prime minister at Gwalior seems to be in bad odour, not, it is said, however, from really bad actions of his own, but from his want of tact in carrying on the duties of his office. A noted bad character had been deported from the state, and it was expected others of his gang, then under trial, would share the same fate. A court of appeal had been opened at Gwalior, but its members were said to have shown themselves ignorant of the duties required of them, and incompetent to their performance even had they known them. Colonel Sleeman, our resident, was labouring in his usual way for the good of the state, and had no intention of abandoning his post till he had reaped the fruits of his toil.

THE BISHOP OF CALCUTTA is about to pay a visit to Madras, Colombo, and Bombay, a steamer being placed at his lordship's disposal by government.

MILITARY ITEMS.—The Kardar of Dhera Ismael Khan had caught and hung a Kardar of Moolraj's, and he is said to have summoned General Khan Sing (who escorted Vans Agnew and Anderson to Mooltan) and his son, and told them to prepare for death, as he intended to hang both by way of reprisal.

The regiment of Shere Sing, that deserted to Moolraj, had returned to Captain Edwards, but he would have nothing to say to them.

A Brahmin of Moolraj's tried to poison Sirdar Shumshere Sing, by putting some in his food, but it was detected, and the Brahmin seized by Shumshere Sing.

A letter from the political agent at Mooltan mentions that Moolraj's troops would not fight till they were paid up all arrears, which was done, and 300 came over immediately to our side, and many more are expected to come over as soon as paid.

MOOLTAN, Aug. 22.—The Dewan keeps himself very quiet; amuses himself in laying traps for the unfortunate camel-men who are out in search of bhoosah. His cavalry are out night and day, but never approach near enough for our fellows to have a dash at them. The weakest part of our force is cavalry. We require another brigade; the present brigade being inadequate to carry on the duties. The force is remarkably healthy, considering the season of the year. Tatties and thermanditodes are in requisition, in fact the wind is just as hot as in the month of May; however the nights are very pleasant and cool. Grain of all kind is very scarce. Gram is selling at ten seers for the rupee, and wheat seventeen. Camp followers are put on short rations.—Delhi Gazette.

Moolraj fires his heavy guns all night long, as the villagers say, "to frighten us;" probably he is most "frightened" at our crawling up, and making an attempt on his gate. As soon as Major Napier arrives, the point of attack will be decided; he has some good plans, and a tolerably good model; the latter is on board the steamer, which will convey it safely to Mooltan with the treasure. The spies of Moolraj appear to visit the steamer, and bund daily; they are mostly sleek and stout fuqueers, mounted on tatts. The weather has been exceedingly hot of late; the thermometer one day on board the steamer rose to 110, but the nights are delightfully cool,—indeed cold.—Ibid.

The Englishman laments that two European regiments should have been sent to Mooltan, as disease will, it is to be feared, make fearful ravages among them. When we advocated an immediate march, we thought that sepoys only would be sent, and they are at least as well able to bear heat and fatigue as Capt. Edwards's Pathans, and, perhaps, equal to the capture of the fort. But if proper arrangements had been made in time, boats might have been collected at Ferozepore sufficient for the conveyance of all the European troops by water to Bhawalpore. There is some important screw loose in the Punjab, otherwise so much precious time would not have been lost in getting the troops under weigh, after it had been determined to send them.—Friend of India.

The death of Major-General Dundas gives Lieut.-Colonel Pew the off-reeckonings, and Major Abbot his lieutenant-colonelcy. The Hon. H. B. Dalzell gets his majority and Lieut. Carlton his company. Mr. Couchman also gets promoted, and a supernumerary, Mr. William Wilson, is brought on the strength.

SPECIE.—The Star informs us that the Government has secured three fine vessels to convey the thirty lacs of specie which they are about to remit home; these vessels are the Northumberland, the John Bright, and the Royal Albert.

AN AFFAIR.—The papers narrate an affair which has created some sensation in Calcutta. A young lady, a ward of the establishment of La Martiniere, and who had for some time officiated as an assistant in teaching there, has been seduced by it is said, an old married barrister, who formerly held an office in connection with the police, and who has carried her off from the institution. The governors of La Martiniere are determined to institute a strict inquiry into the affair, but, as the young lady is of age, legal proceedings are out of the question.

HOUSE ASSESSMENT.—The Hindu Intelligencer states, that 58 per cent. of the money raised by the house assessment is consumed in the payment of the officers employed in collecting and disbursing it.

UNPOSTED ENSIGNS AT BENARES.—We learn that the attention of Government has at length been drawn to the conduct of the young unposted ensigns at Benares. One great cause of their irregularities has been removed by ordering them, when posted, to join their regiments by dawk, instead of waiting for the arrival of a steamer. But this will, we fear, operate as a partial check on the evil. They should not be allowed to congregate at any station, but should be distributed among the regiments at the earliest possible period, where they would have the example of elder officers.

OPIMUM SALE.—The Hurkaru publishes the following as the result of the last opium sale:

		Average.	Proceeds.
Behar. No. of chests ...	1805	949	Rs. 17,13,950
Benares ...	780	864	6,74,673

thus shewing a decline of Rs. 174 per chest on both kinds; a result probably produced by the absence of news from China, and the contemplated increase of next year's investment.

EXCHANGE OF DIVISIONS.—It is more than probable that an exchange of Divisions will soon be effected between Sir Dudley Hill and Sir Walter Gilbert.—Delhi Gazette.

MILITARY BOARD.—Colonel Benson, the stipendiary member of the Military Board, proceeds home during the ensuing cold season. No officer has yet been named as his successor.

ARTILLERY HEAD QUARTERS.—The Delhi Gazette says—"It may not be generally known that the final orders of the Court of Directors have been received respecting the move of the head quarters of the Artillery from Dum-dum. These orders are against the move. Our information may be fully relied on."

WRECK OF THE KANDIANA.—The Star announces the loss of the Kandiana, Captain Halbert, from Portsmouth, 29 March. She was anchored off Calcutta with two anchors ahead, when the rush of the ebb tide proved too strong for her, tearing open one of her hawseholes and carrying away several of her planks, in consequence of which she began to fill rapidly. To prevent her going down in deep water she was run ashore, where she is a perfect wreck. Happily no lives were lost.

COTTON-CLEANING MACHINE.—The Friend of India has heard that Mr. Simms has been employed for some time past, by order of the Governor General, in drawing up a detailed report of all the experiments which have been made in the improvement of the Churka, or cotton-cleaning machine, and has presented his lordship with a very clear report on the subject, in which he expresses himself confident of the great advantage which the cotton trade of India would derive from the general introduction of Mr. Mather's machine.

BALL AT BARRACKPORE.—Major-General Sir Dudley St. Leger Hill, K.C.B., having won the hearts of a large majority of the pleasure-seeking youth of the station, it was proposed and carried that a ball and supper should be given to one who knew so well how to gain the applause and attach to himself the affections of those who estimate a man's worth by the number of diners he gives and his claim to distinction by the quality and flavour of his champagne. The ball took place on the 2nd August, in a large house styled the Pandemonium, which was most tastefully decorated for the occasion. The talent and taste of a young officer had been exerted with a good effect in inscribing on the walls, and wreathing round with laurel, the various actions of the Peninsula; stars of bayonets, and the colours of regiments were arranged, the latter marking the glories won by the former weapon, as well in the far East, at the same time it was used with so powerful an effect in the West. Lord and Lady Dalhousie having signified their intention of honouring the party by their presence, the large and spacious rooms were crowded to an extent seldom witnessed at Barrackpore, by ten o'clock, when dancing commenced, and continued with spirit till after three o'clock A.M. Her ladyship stood up for several quadrilles, and really appeared to enjoy the party in so quiet and unaffected a style, as to add much to the general feeling of satisfaction caused by her ladyship's presence at the first public party so graced since her arrival in India. The Governor General, who is looking far from well, left a short time before supper; at half-past twelve, we all sat down to one of those fearfully abundant repasts which fashion styles elegant, but which are certainly far from being in keeping with a climate where the wants are generally of a lighter description, and require not rounds of beef and roast fowls by the dozen. On his health being drunk Sir Dudley rose and said, "He felt no small degree of difficulty in giving expression to his feelings. When this party was first proposed, it was with hesitation he accepted it, feeling that his acquaintance with the society here was hardly sufficient to sanction it; but at last he yielded to the earnest and friendly solicitations he received, being assured that the discipline and subordination of the troops under his command would not suffer by the General joining in these social meetings. He felt proud at the honour done him by the presence of Lord and Lady Dalhousie, and he observed many strangers who had come all the way up from Calcutta to this party, and he thanked them for the trouble they had taken and the honour they had done him." The General sat down amidst overwhelming applause. The brigadier then proposed, "Lady Dalhousie and ladies," which was received with warmth and grateful demonstrations of applause at her ladyship's kindness in honouring so far the society of Barrackpore.

THE OPIUM OF THE NEXT SEASON.—A notification has just been published in the Calcutta Gazette, that the supply of opium for the season of 1846-49 will be 36,000 chests. The supply in 1846-47 was 21,469; in the season now closing it was raised to 23,705. The increase in the first year of augmentation was about 7,300 chests, and that increase has now been doubled. Considered simply in a financial point of view, the experience of the past year does not appear to justify so sudden and so large an extension of the supply. When we had occasion to allude to the subject last, we offered a conjecture that the larger quantity thrown into the market would have the effect of reducing the price to Rs. 1,000 a chest; but the average of the eleven sales which have taken place up to this time has been only Rs. 850. It may, therefore, readily be supposed that the present increased supply, in the face of such a diminution of price, must be the result of orders for enlarging the cultivation which were issued before the effect of that increase on the price could have been known. The larger quantity now advertised for the next year will have the effect of still further depreciating the price of the drug; and it is much to be questioned whether even so much as Rs. 800 a chest all round can be expected for the 36,000 chests to be brought forward in the next ten months. In this case it would appear to be the dictate of prudence to return to the system of more limited supplies. We may possibly have omitted some important element which should enter into our calculations; but if we have not, the financial result of the two years 1846-47, and 1848-49, will stand thus:—

Season of 1846-47,
"	21,650 chests at an average of 1220 Rs. ...	2,64,13,000
"	Deduct cost of manufacture at 300	64,95,000
		Net profit	1,99,18,000
Season of 1848-49,
"	36,000 chests, at an average of 800 Rs. ...	2,88,00,000
"	Deduct manufacturing charges at 300	1,08,00,000
		Net profit	1,80,00,000

IMPORTS.

BRITISH COTTON PIECE GOODS.—Since the date of our report of the 6th ult. very little alteration has taken place in the principal features of our import market. We have continued to experience a brisk inquiry for nearly all kinds of Grey Shirtings and Jaconets, and Bleached Goods have been by no means neglected; indeed, with the exception of Power Loom Cambrics, a lively business has been done in almost all branches of Manchester Piece Goods. Mule Twist has latterly been in less active demand, and 50s. are lower in value than for some time past, while most other Numbers have also given way a trifle. There is, however, a good feeling in reference to this article, and importers, looking at the falling off in shipments from Great Britain, evince considerable firmness in their present demands. Scotch Goods of all kinds, especially the lighter fabrics, remain in a most unfavourable state. Metals have attracted a good deal of attention, and sales to a fair extent have been effected.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE EXPRESS, with the Overland Mail from London, August 7th, arrived at Madras September 10.

PONDICHERY has just got up an emancipator. The belligerent parties are the sable citizens, and the cause of quarrel was this. Upon the publication of the proclamation of Liberté, Egalité, and Fraternité, the Pariah portion of the Pondicherry public considered that this gave their class a claim to equal rank and rights, with certain privileges of dress, with the Malabars, or black bourgeoisie. The latter were horrified at the idea, and stoutly resisted. Wordy combats ensued, followed by blows, and a general engagement took place in the bazars, though with little personal damage to either party, as half a dozen broken heads, a few dislodged teeth, some handfuls of eradicated hair, and sundry cloths torn by tugging in the struggle, being about the sum total of casualties. The fight terminated in the defeat of the Pariah forces, perhaps from the leaning of the Government on the side of aristocracy, which it seems decided that the citizens of the French capital in the East are as yet hardly sufficiently advanced to claim participation in the rights of their Western brethren.—U.S. Gaz., Aug. 8.

THE GOVERNOR.—The Madras Spectator informs us that Sir Henry Pottinger, with a regard for the convenience of the public, which does him credit, has determined on obviating the difficulties that attended his residing so far from Madras, by coming down one morning weekly to Government House, during his stay at Guindy, for the purpose of giving audiences and receiving parties at breakfast.

MR. E. H. HARDING, the superintendent of the Medical School, has been elected a director of the bank of Madras, vice Mr. Ouchterlony.

MERIAHS.—Letters from the South mention that Chokro Bissye continues to find shelter in Domosinghi and Kolabagh, in the Boad Hills, and it is generally believed that he will be able to renew the disturbances next cold season. A report was prevalent in Goomsur that human sacrifices had taken place in two or three parts of Boad; fifty of the lately rescued Meriahs, twenty-five boys and twenty-five girls, had been given into the charge of the missionaries at Berhampore.

THE DISTURBANCE AT SECUNDERABAD.—The investigations into the recent disgraceful affair of destroying or injuring the Catholic chapel at Secunderabad by a few soldiers of that persuasion of H.M. 84th Foot, at the instigation, it was said, of an European priest named McSweeney, have been brought to a close, but their report has not yet been made public. There cannot be the smallest doubt of the complicity of the reverend gentleman and his son in the outrage complained of: the extent to which they were so has, no doubt, been represented to government, who will deal with them according to their deserts. Great blame has at the same time been attached to the brigadier commanding at Secunderabad for the want of courtesy exhibited by him towards the Catholic clergy before and after the occurrence of the recent disgraceful proceedings. A number of the soldiers have been punished for the share they took in the outrage, the non-commissioned officers being reduced to the ranks.—Bombay Times.

THE KOTAGHERY AFFAIR.—Dr. Daubeney, implicated in the death of Mrs. Frere on the Neilgherry Hills, has been escorted to Madras, to undergo an examination before the civil power. It is expected the unfortunate lady's native female servant will turn queen's evidence; if so, the truth of the matter will be arrived at, as there can be no doubt that she is fully acquainted with the whole circumstances of the case.—Ibid.

THE 34TH REGIMENT, of Chicacole Light Infantry, is directed to return to Vellore, it being understood that its services will not be required at Ceylon.

THREE COMPANIES OF THE 51st N. I., says the Spectator, have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness to proceed to Malacca, under orders from the quarter-master general's department.

THE LATE DR. J. W. T. JOHNSTONE.—With a regret, which is shared by half the community of Madras, we record the decease of Dr. J. W. T. Johnstone, who died on Saturday night, after an illness of more than six weeks' duration. To that large class who appeal rather to the sympathy, than to the interest of the medical practitioner, his death has come in the shape of a real calamity, whilst those who could appreciate at their true value, moral excellencies, and high mental acquirements, feel that they have parted from one, whose loss cannot easily be repaired. He was descended from a respectable family in Dumfriesshire, and greatly distinguished himself during his collegiate career in Edinburgh, where he obtained the University medal for a dissertation upon a difficult subject. After his graduation, he became the assistant of the talented Professor Simpson, with whom he remained associated for a year, when yielding to the recommendation of friends, he came out to Madras, which four years since could not boast of a single private practitioner. A correspondent, who had known him from the outset of his career, and whose eulogy is but the honest payment of a debt of heartfelt respect, shall tell the rest of his brief history.

"Notwithstanding the difficulties he had to encounter, and the discouraging opposition he had to contend with on his first arrival, the lapse of two years found him enjoying a good practice, which has ever since been steadily increasing, and had long exceeded the most sanguine expectations of himself and his friends. The bright promise of professional eminence held out by his success in the commencement of his career as a physician, has been fully realised, while those who have benefited by the exercise of his medical skill, can also bear ample testimony to his gentlemanly deportment, frankness and amiability.

Dr. Johnstone had been ailing for some time before the alarming symptoms of an acute inflammation of the liver discovered themselves, but his anxiety about some patients in whom he felt particularly interested, combined with an aversion to any interruption in the practice of his profession to which he was devoted, prevented a timely attention to his own physical state. In his decease, the Society of Madras has lost a useful member, and the medical faculty a bright ornament."

It only remains to be noticed that a crowd of voluntary mourners, paid a last tribute of respect to the remains of their physician and friend.—Athenaeum, August 22.

DOCTOR MOUNT delivered his defence himself on Tuesday last, in the presence of a crowded court, where there were, as a writer observes, some without heads, and some without hearts—some without feelings, and some without understanding, for it is well known that some are but bags of other people's ideas, who are propelled about the world as if on castors, receiving all that those who are near them choose to cram them with—others too there were whose microscopic minds enlarge the atoms under their own eyes, till mites seem mountains, but who yet can see nothing extending an inch beyond their own noses; perhaps it was before some such characters that Doctor Mount delivered his defence in a clear and audible voice:—however, it must have been a trying hour to the good doctor's feelings, when he knew that some there were who wished him well, and others not; for every one must have experienced, that when any abiding sorrow is at the heart, how a fresh scene will sometimes rouse it, as if from sleep, and with all its host of painful memories; consequently at the conclusion of his defence (which was considered an admirable piece of composition), he was overpowered in his feelings, and could not proceed. The Judge Advocate General then read the remaining three or four lines, and the court closed for about ten minutes, after which it was re-opened; it heard the testimony of several officers respecting Dr. Mount's conduct as an officer and a gentleman, amongst whom were the following: General Williams; Majors Macleod and MacCally; Capts. Haines, Halsted, Brett, McCartney, Wood, and Desborough; Lieuts. Brett and Chancey; and Dr. Smith. Dr. Mount also handed into court a very flattering written testimonial of General Lovell's, lately the commanding-officer of H.M. 15th Hussars, together with several others; after this the Court adjourned till the following day, when the prosecutor stated that he had other evidences to bring forward, against which Dr. Mount protested, but it was overruled by the Court, and only two evidences were heard, the Court objecting to the others; here it may be considered that the prosecution has finally closed.—Athenæum, Aug. 31.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The London Mail of August 7 reached Bombay by the Ajdaha on the 4th Sept.

THE LATE SIR ROBERT OLIVER entered the Royal Navy in 1795, and obtained his commission as lieutenant in February, 1810, when on board the Espoir, gun brig, bound for the Mediterranean. On the 4th April, 1804, this vessel, in company with the frigate Success, observed some vessels on the Calabrian coast, and Lieut. Oliver, in charge of one boat, with Lieut. Sartorius in another, with the other boats of his ship, was sent to destroy them. Three of the boats were swamped on sunken rocks as they approached the shore, when the gallant officers and men swam on shore, with their cutlasses in their teeth, under a heavy fire from the guns of the enemy, set fire to the ships, spiked the guns, recovered their boats, and returned to their vessels unharmed. In 1827 he was removed from the Wellesley, where he had been under Rear-Admiral Sir Geo. Eyre, to the Victory, Admiral Sir R. Stopford, and was promoted to the rank of commander, by the Lord High Admiral, for meritorious services. He shortly after joined the Asia, commanded by Sir Hyde Parker, destined for the coast of Portugal. He soon after this returned to England, and was appointed to fit up some of our war-steamer with a variety of pivot guns which he had himself constructed. He afterwards commanded the sloops Phoenix and Dee, and though the occasion noticed as having occurred early in his career was the only one when he had an opportunity of distinguishing himself, he seems to have been known at all times as an able and meritorious officer, of a somewhat antiquated school, and he owed his advancement to command almost entirely to his merits. In 1837 he became post-captain in the navy. At this time Admiral Sir C. Malcolm was about to retire from Bombay, and the Court of Directors, who were anxious to obtain the services of some one familiar with steam navigation in its present state, applied to the Admiralty to recommend an officer from the Royal Navy, and Capt. Oliver was named as a party eminently qualified for the post. He arrived in Bombay in July 1838. Heavy complaints were made against him in the Indian Navy in reference to the retirement of certain officers therefrom, who were averse to the packet service, in 1842: they were fully and satisfactorily replied to, and he himself was shortly after knighted, in testimony of the approbation of his superiors. In 1847 he was elevated to the rank of Commodore of the Indian Navy, and a few months afterwards, was created Commander-in-Chief of the Navy. In October, 1844, he returned to England, having been required to submit to a severe surgical operation; this he got over, and was again in Bombay in December, 1845. It was his intention to withdraw from India in the course of this year, and he only waited to see the launch of the Meane frigate. A stroke of the sun, on the 27th July, was the cause of his death, which took place at Byculla, on the 5th August, at the age of 65. Though rough in his manners, harsh, and sometimes coarse, in his expressions, his heart was kind and generous. The Gentleman's Gazette sums up his character in these words: "In private life, Sir Robert Oliver was esteemed for his social qualities, and we believe there are very few of his friends and acquaintances who do not sincerely mourn his death. Of his public life, it is not denied that, although something might be blameable in many of his acts, the feeling of dislike exhibited by some towards him was by no means general, and there are many of the subordinates in the Indian Navy who will deeply regret the loss of a friend and protector. He may be accused of eccentricity in some acts, and in other instances of harshness and even injustice; but there are few who have experienced such harshness who have not at some other time received kindnesses at his hands, and none who, when his mortal remains were being borne to their last resting-place, did not feel sorrow at his death." A Government Notification, which appears in another column, pays a high tribute to his public character and services.

COLONEL OUTRAM is, we believe, expected almost immediately amongst us. We regret to find that his indisposition is more serious than we supposed, and will prevent him from returning to Baroda for some time to come.—Bombay Times, Sept. 9.

THE MAILS.—Government, we rejoice to observe, have determined that when the 1st or 15th of the month occurs on Sunday, the mail shall be despatched the day before instead of the day after, as heretofore. This is an arrangement we have for five years been clamouring for. It will enable all offices hitherto employed on the Sabbath, when that fell on the 1st, to be closed, and relieve us from the temptation of labouring when we ought to be otherwise employed. The mail, which otherwise would have left on the 2nd Oct., will quit us on the 30th Sept., that of the 16th Oct. on the 14th.—Ibid.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.—The following items regarding the movements of troops to and from Scinde may, we believe, be relied on as correct. A wing of the 1st European fusiliers will arrive from Kurrachee about the 23rd November, when the wing of H.M.'s 8th foot, now at the Presidency, will proceed to take its place in Scinde. Upon their arrival there, the remaining wing of the fusiliers will leave and proceed, via Panwell, to Poona, the head-quarter wing 8th foot quitting that station on their arrival. H.M.'s 60th rifles to quit Kurrachee on being relieved by H.M.'s 22nd from Poona; the movement of the latter to take place in all October. A wing of the 22nd N.I. is to leave Baroda for Bombay, via Tankaria Bunder, on the 2nd November, and will reach the Presidency about the end of that month. The remaining wing is to join head-quarters on being relieved by a wing of the 3rd N.I. from Scinde. The 24th N.I. is to embark for Kurrachee from the Presidency about the 23rd Nov., when relieved by the 28th N.I. The 26th N.I. are to proceed to Kurrachee about the 16th October. The 27th N.I. are to leave Belgaum on the 2nd November for Bombay, where they will arrive about the 21st. The 28th N.I., are to leave Malligaum for Bombay via Nassick and the Thull Ghaut, on the 2nd Nov., and will arrive about the 20th. Five hundred men of this corps are to proceed to Tanna to relieve the detachment 24th N.I. at that station. The 29th N.I. are to leave the Presidency for Kurrachee about the 22nd November.—Bombay Times, Sept. 13.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

COMMODORE SIR ROBERT OLIVER.

Bombay Castle, Aug. 9, 1848.—The Right Hon. the Governor in Council has received, with the deepest concern and regret, the report of the decease, on the morning of the 5th inst., of Commodore Sir Robert Oliver, and feels it to be his duty publicly to record the high and lasting sense entertained of the value and importance of the services which this lamented and distinguished officer has performed while filling the office of superintendent, and latterly of commander-in-chief of the Indian Navy.

Sir Robert Oliver has stood for ten years at the head of the Indian Navy; and during the whole of that period, the records of Government abundantly prove, that he has discharged the responsible and onerous functions of his high office in a manner which has elicited the warmest approbation of every superior authority in India and in England. His energy, foresight, skill, and thorough practical knowledge of every branch of his profession, have always been conspicuous; and these qualities were so displayed in the equipment and fitting out of the vessels despatched to co-operate with her Majesty's navy in the China expedition, that it pleased her Majesty, in 1843, to confer upon him the honour of knighthood, expressly "in acknowledgment of the zeal and ability with which that officer had exerted himself to further her Majesty's service in relation to the expedition sent to the China seas." Under the conduct of Sir Robert Oliver, the strength of the Indian naval force has been largely increased, and its services employed, always with honour and success, in every part of the Indian Ocean. The various marine establishments connected with the navy have been extended, reformed, or organized; a steam-factory of great power and efficiency has been erected, and commodious slips for the promotion of ship-building at the port have been constructed. Other works and improvements, planned or advised by the same master-mind, have been completed or are in progress, the whole designed to render the dockyard of Bombay equal to the important national objects for which it may be required. The great extension given to the Indian Navy generally, and to its establishments in Western India, under the management of Sir Robert Oliver, has caused the Hon. the Court of Directors recently to invest him, in his office of superintendent, with the commission of a commodore of the first class, and the dignity of commander-in-chief.

The Right Hon. the Governor in Council feels it to be unnecessary to do more than point to these leading facts in Sir Robert Oliver's Indian career. Originally selected to fill the office of superintendent of the Indian Navy on account of the qualifications he had been proved to possess in his own service, the Royal Navy, he has amply fulfilled all the expectations based on his appointment. He has devoted the whole energies of his life, with untiring zeal and unflinching honesty of purpose, to the duties of his station. He has died at his post; and the Government deeply deplores the loss of one who, for ability, integrity, and faithfulness to his trust, justly merits to be ranked among the most deserving and distinguished servants of the state.

APPLICATION FOR LEAVE.

Bombay Castle, Aug. 31, 1848.—The Right Honourable the Governor in Council is pleased to direct, that the rule laid down

CEYLON.

The insurrection may now be considered over,—every thing is quiet; the chiefs of all districts are coming into Kandy on deputations to the Governor. The bazaars along the roads are again inhabited, and the tide of immigration is again on the move: estates are now gathering their crops in safety, and tranquillity has been restored almost as suddenly as it was interrupted. Meanwhile the courts-martial are sitting on the captured rebels, about sixteen of whom are now in Colombo on their way to exile by the Inflexible, which awaits a further batch of them ere leaving. A special commission is to sit on those which were captured before martial law was proclaimed, during and after which we imagine martial law will be abolished. We have not learned the names of the convicted rebels, but we hope there is a fair proportion of priests amongst them, as it is well known that they have been the prime movers in the rebellion after it was fanned into a flame by written and printed advices to resistance.—Ceylon Times.

At a public meeting of the Singhalese, Moorish, and Malabar inhabitants of the town of Kandy, held on the 18th August, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

"That, viewing the position of the town of Kandy, in reference to the district of Matelle and Seven Corles, which have raised or joined in the recent rebellion against Her Majesty's Government, and considering that if the said rebellion had not been timely checked, the lives and property of the peaceable inhabitants of this place would have been exposed to imminent danger, this meeting feel it to be their duty most especially to render their sincere and heartfelt thanks to his Excellency the governor for the prompt, energetic, and successful efforts made by the local government for the suppression of the said rebellion almost at its very onset, and to record their opinion that to the adoption of those measures above are attributable to the speedy restoration of public peace, and the dispelling of the very general alarm felt by the residents of this town.

"That this meeting cannot help expressing its belief that the rebellion which broke out at Matelle had been planned by an impostor calling himself a 'Prince,' and that it had its origin long before the enactment of the recent Tax Ordinance.

"That this meeting further considers it to be its bounden duty, at a time like the present, to express most forcibly, and in language not to be mistaken, that it holds the rebellious acts of the misguided inhabitants of Matelle and Seven Corles in utter abhorrence and detestation, and to assure his excellency of the loyalty of the inhabitants of this town to Her Majesty's Government and of their firm determination to stand by it."

Reply of the governor to a deputation, conveying to his excellency the aforesaid resolutions:

"I am much gratified to learn that you fully appreciate the value of the prompt and energetic measures which have been adopted for the suppression of the rebellion in the districts of Matelle and Kornegalle, and for the preservation of tranquillity generally, as well as for the protection of the inhabitants of this town. The success of those efforts has already restored the current of mercantile business, to its regular and ordinary course, and I have every confidence that those inhabitants of the rural districts who have temporarily fled in fear from their homes, will shortly return to resume their usual and peaceful occupations.

"I have received from you with much satisfaction the confirmation of the opinion which I had previously been led to form, that the rebellion in the district of Matelle was not of recent origin, but that it had been long planned, and was only waiting an opportunity to burst forth, long before the enactment of the recent ordinances.

"The open expression of your sentiments upon this subject cannot fail to be productive of advantages to the community at large.

"I trust that the restoration of tranquillity in all parts is not far distant, and that peace and contentment will for the future be completely assured."

The Ceylon Times of the 8th August states that a double of the regal pretender had been taken prisoner. He was tried and ordered to be shot the same afternoon. The "king's" head adigar had also been captured, tried, and shot. The villages in the direction of Kornegalle were all deserted, and great fear was entertained of the inroads of robbers at Negombo. Major Lushington was nominated president of a court-martial for the trials of prisoners. Dambool and the adjacent country appear to be the limits of the insurrection in the vicinity of Trincomalee. A regiment from Madras was expected to garrison the latter station.

Accounts from Badulla represent matters there as extremely placid in appearance; but it is suspected there is mischief lurking beneath. No sign, however, of any intention to break the public peace has yet betrayed itself.

CHINA.

The epidemic among the European troops continued with unabated violence at Hong Kong. H.M.'s 95th regiment has lost about ninety men from the 1st of July, or upwards of twenty per cent. in less than two months. This is much in excess of any of the past years.

The brig Spec which had been seized, and the captain and crew committed by Mr. Consul Alcock, on a charge of murder and piracy, had arrived at Hong Kong, in charge of Lieut. Graham, of H.M.S. Childers, and her captain and crew are in jail, waiting their trial, which would take place before the High Court of Admiralty, after the arrival of Captain Pitman, of H.M.S. Childers, and the other witnesses. The impression is, that though Capt. Cole, of the Spec, acted imprudently in firing into a junk, believing her to be a pirate, he is perfectly innocent of the crime for which he has been committed. The same thing was done a few months ago by H.M.S. Scout, the Chinese authorities declaring that the people captured were peaceful traders. In Capt. Cole's case there is no doubt that the vessel he attacked was actually engaged in piratical pursuits. He was employed by the Chinese merchants of Ningpo to keep the entrance of the port clear of pirates; no fewer than seventy of their traders having been captured the previous year, and the crews murdered if not ransomed. The question is, whether a British vessel can be hired to foreign merchants for such a purpose; and it is desirable that this should be settled, as the Chinese are anxious to hire our vessels both as convoy to their trading junks, and for service similar to that in which the Spec was engaged.

The United States ship Phymouth arrived at Macao on the 15th instant with the Honourable J. H. Davis, American Envoy to China.

Canton was quiet. Business had not improved, as was anticipated, the Chinese merchants combining to keep down the prices of imports. The stocks were small, and the shipments on the way inconsiderable; there was therefore little doubt of an advance at no distant date, as the stocks in second hands were being rapidly cleared off.

The Braganza, with the London mail of June 24, reached Hong Kong August 15.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The Boer farmer, Andreas Pretorius, whose district is situated on the north-eastern frontier, beyond the Orange River, has broken out into insurrection, and is endeavouring to combine with the native chiefs against the British authority, and to destroy the settlement of Natal. The resident magistrate at Weinberg had saved himself by a hasty flight, leaving some of his family in the hands of the insurgents. The British resident at Bloem Fontein, Major Warden, who narrowly escaped capture, whilst engaged in the duties of his office, strengthened his post, where he was attacked, on the 17th July, by Pretorius, at the head of 400 mounted followers, and forced to capitulate, being allowed to retire from the place; so that British authority was expelled; for the time, on the north of the Orange River. A proclamation had been issued offering a reward of 1,000l. for the apprehension of Pretorius, and another of 500l. for the apprehension of Willem Jacobs, of Weinberg, who had taken a prominent part in misleading and terrifying the ignorant and timid to induce them to join in the insurrection. Sir Harry Smith left Cape Town for the frontier, overland, on the 20th July, as soon as the intelligence was known, and detachments of troops were proceeding by sea to the scene of disturbance.

The Frontier Times says: "It is in vain to blink the fact; if a large majority of the Dutch emigrant farmers, who reside beyond the north-eastern boundary of the colony, refuse obedience to British law, no military force sufficient to enforce such obedience will ever be furnished by the British Government; and unless the interference of the British Government in support of its civil authority be effectual, the safest and best policy is not to interfere at all."

Advices from the Cape to the 9th September, and accounts from Sir Harry Smith's quarters, six miles north-east of Bethany, dated August 31, state that, on the 29th, Sir Harry encountered the rebel Boers, who were strongly posted at a place called Boem Plaas, beyond the Orange river, and, after a sharp contest of three hours, defeated and drove them before him with great loss. Lieut. Col. Buller was severely wounded, and Capt. Murray mortally. Sir Harry Smith is also said to have had a slight wound. The Boers, who mustered 1,000 men, are said to have been totally dispersed.

PERSIA.

Letters from Persia, via Trebisond, announce that the King of Persia, Mohammed Shah, had died at Teheran, from a violent attack of gout, to which he had long been subject. He was born in 1806, and his heir is eighteen years of age. If the news be confirmed, it is probable that the Salar, who is in arms near Khorasan, will march upon Teheran, while the princes, who have taken refuge on the frontiers of Turkey, in consequence of events which have taken place in Persia at different periods, will make some attempt on the southern provinces, where they have numerous partisans. It is said that the communications between Tabreez and Teheran are already intercepted. — Journal de Constantinople.

LITERARY & SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

The narratives of the two Chinese Buddhist pilgrims, Fā-hsien and Hsueh-tsang,—the former of whom travelled in India early in the fifth century, the latter at the beginning of the seventh,—which have been translated from the Chinese, throw much light upon the state of the country at that period. The more rigidly their narratives are examined, the more faithful do they appear. An attack recently made upon the authenticity of Hsueh-tsang's Itinerary, by Major Anderson,—who endeavours to prove that it is a modern compilation,—has produced a vindication of the work by Capt. Cunningham,* in which he has not only pointed out the sources of the Major's errors, but established "the minute accuracy" of Hsueh-tsang's details. To give one example. In his mention of Magadha, Hsueh-tsang records the names of five kings who reigned there previous to his visit, which, he says, were Sankaraditya, Budhagupta, Takatagupta, Baladitya, and Vajra. Of the second, fourth, and fifth of these princes, Capt. Cunningham observes, there are coins still extant; "but we have still more explicit evidence of his accuracy, in the date of Budhagupta's inscription on the Eran pillar. This date is 165 of the Gupta era, which, we learn from Abu Rihan, commenced in A.D. 319. The date of the pillar, therefore, is equivalent to A.D. 484. Supposing that Budhagupta reigned until A.D. 500, and that the three following princes occupied the throne during the sixth century, we have the date of A.D. 600 as the earliest limit of the period of Hsueh-tsang's visit."

This new and unexpected accession to the resources of Hindu archaeology seems to have given a fresh impulse to inquiries into the geography, political condition and religion of Ariana, as well as of India, prior to the Mahomedan invasion.

Capt. Cunningham has proposed to the Asiatic Society of Bengal an archaeological investigation into all the remains of architecture, sculpture, coins, and inscriptions, in India, which, he says, "would throw more light upon its ancient history, both public and domestic, than printing all the rubbish contained in the eighteen Puranas." He observes: "The fact that Buddhism continued to flourish throughout India for many centuries, is to be ascertained from monuments almost alone. Buildings, coins, and inscriptions all point to Buddhistical ascendancy until the attacks of the Musalmāns under Mahomed Ghaznavi. In corroboration of this view we have the direct testimony of several Chinese pilgrims and the explicit statements of the Kashmirian History. But in none of the Hindu books is there any allusion to Buddhism. The Institutes of Menu, the Ramayana, the Mahabharata, and the fabulous Puranas are all silent regarding Buddhism, as if that religion had never flourished in India. The publication of all the existing remains of Buddhism, in the shape of architecture, sculpture, coins, and inscriptions, would, I conceive, be equally valuable for the illustration of the history of India, both religious and political, with the printing of the Vedas and Puranas. It is a duty which the Government owe to the country. The remains of architecture and sculpture are daily deteriorating, and inscriptions are broken or defaced; the sooner, therefore, that steps are taken for their preservation, the more numerous, and consequently the more valuable, these remains will be."

At the monthly meeting of the Bombay Branch Royal Asiatic Society, on the 10th August,—with reference to the Government letter dated the 31st July, conveying a request that the Society would appoint the commission, proposed in its letter of the 15th April last, for obtaining authentic information relative to the number and situation of all the monuments and cave temples of antiquity in the territories under the Bombay Government, &c., as the Government of India had signified its entire approval of the arrangements suggested by the Society—it was resolved, that the Rev. Dr. Wilson, honorary president; the Rev. Dr. Stevenson, vice president; C. J. Erskine, Esq., C.S.; Capt. Lynch, I.N.; J. Harkness, Esq., principal of the Elphinstone Institution; Venaick Gungadhar Shastree, Esq., and the secretary, should be appointed for this purpose.

At a meeting of the Archaeological Society of Delhi, on the 7th August, it was resolved, "That a recommendation be submitted to the Government of India, to add to the survey of the district of Delhi, about to be instituted, a commission, to consist of a competent archaeologist, and a draftsman of acknowledged acquirements, to examine the whole of the ancient buildings, sites, inscriptions, &c., at present in existence in the southern pergunnah of Delhi; and that, if the results of the labours of the commission be such as to warrant their extension, other parts of the Upper Provinces be examined in a similar manner."

* Journ. As. Soc. Bengal for June, 1846.

Major Hannay has communicated to the Asiatic Society of Bengal the results of some researches made by him in the jungles north of Suddyah, in Upper Assam, reported to contain the remains of ancient temples, tanks, and other works of a people differing in every respect from the present races inhabiting the country.

The Tamasesree Mai, or copper-temple, is situated on the right bank of the little river Dolpane, in the midst of a dense forest. The interior is a square of 8 feet, the walls being about 4½ feet thick, quite plain both inside and outside. From the basement outside, at the height of 10 feet, there is a projection of stone, slightly fluted on the under side, which forms a cornice. Two lingas are in the middle of a large doorway. The material is a coarse grit; the blocks averaging about one foot thick, the same in depth, and 18 inches long, are smoothly chiselled, and the masonry is evenly and closely fitted. The three blocks forming the doorway, each 7½ feet long, and 2 feet by 18 inches, are reddish porphyritic granite, of an adamantine hardness, and must have required extremely well-tempered tools to work, the chiselling being with the point in right lines, which give a ribbed appearance. In front of the temple is a small brick terrace, which has a low wall on three sides; along the inside of the eastern and western faces, brick tiles, about 14 inches square, are let in, having stamped upon them, in high relief, figures of some of the Hindu avatars, most of the figures having the high conical cap.

Following his visit to the copper-temple, he visited another fane on the left bank of the Dikrung river, and between that and the Dibong, he met with several ancient tanks, with bathing ghauts, &c.; one of them was 280 yards long by 96 broad. These and other remains indicated that this was at one time a densely populated country.

"It would be difficult to account," Major Hannay observes, "for such extensive remains of population so far inland from the Burrampooter. The traditions of the people, however, say that the course of this river eastward of Suddyah ran in former times much nearer to the northern mountains. I have seen, indeed, when the Burrampooter was encroaching upon the station of Koondil Mookh, drift timber of immense size exposed by the abrasions of the river, and at the mouth of the Koondil, it appeared as if a forest had once existed under the Suddyah alluvial deposit."

The exaggerated stories respecting the great boa constrictor of India (Python molurus) have been reduced to their true value by a paper, published in the last number of the Madras Journal of Literature and Science, by Lord Arthur Hay, who has investigated the habits and structure of the animal.

The pythons of Sumatra, Java, and most of the other Eastern islands, he observes, have been found of almost incredible lengths; the ordinary maximum, however, is from 30 to 40 feet, but few are found in Southern India of greater length than from 15 to 20 feet. Lord Arthur obtained what was considered in Travancore a large specimen of the Indian python, which was killed in the jungle just after having swallowed a full-grown spotted deer. The snake was 17 feet long, and 4 in circumference, when it contained its prey. He has heard of several large monsters having been seen, though seldom actually measured.

The python is sluggish in its habits, and prefers lying in wait for its prey. The larger of these snakes, found in the jungle, lie concealed by long grass or a bush, and when motionless resemble the trunk of a tree or piece of stone so closely that the eye is frequently deceived. They adopt this method of lying in wait from the comparative slowness of their progressive motion, their muscular powers being more adapted for constriction than locomotion. At the root of the tail are two organs, resembling hooks or claws, by which the snake fastens itself to a tree, to have greater power and free use of its body when encircling some victim within its folds.

The neighbourhood of water, or the vicinity of a forest-path, is the favourite haunt of this reptile. His tail twined round the trunk or stump of a tree, his body carefully hid from view, he lies perfectly still, waiting for the approach of its prey. The moment the victim comes within reach, the snake darts upon it, making the jaws meet in its throat, and twining in folds around the chest of the prey so as to cause suffocation. When life is extinct, the reptile gradually unloosens its folds, but does not (as commonly believed) break the bones of its prey. In the case before-mentioned, there was not a single broken bone in the body of the deer swallowed. The next act is that of deglutition, which takes time and exertion. The python generally commences with the head, which serves to extend its throat and prepare it gradually for receiving the more bulky part. The mechanism of the jaws is admirably adapted for the distension they have to undergo; the under-jaw articulates so loosely in the upper that dislocation can take place at the symphysis without causing pain, and the lower jaw at length hangs quite loose and disconnected from the upper. The prevalent notion that this snake covers the whole of its victim with saliva from the tongue before swallowing it, is, Lord Arthur Hay says, erroneous; the structure of the tongue, very long and slender, rendering it unfit for licking. The glands that secrete the saliva are only called into action when deglutition has begun. After the entire animal has been swallowed, a lethargy pervades the snake, which may then be safely approached, and the natives attack him without fear.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

SATURDAY, October 28, 1848.

"POLITICIANS are already speculating on the fate of the Punjab, and annexation is confidently talked of," observes a Calcutta newspaper,* adding: "That it would be the best course for the country itself, is not doubted by any person here whose opinion deserves consideration; in fact, the wretched condition of what are called 'protected states' is so apparent, that nothing could induce a continuation of the system, but the prudery of the Home Government, which dreads the accusation of ambition."

These speculations of "politicians,"—probably conversations at tiffin,—must not be regarded as expositions or indications of the views entertained by the Government either abroad or at home; they express the opinions, perhaps the wishes, of individuals, who, with no rapacious motives, reverse the practice of Goldsmith's statesman, and are apt to overlook the right in eager pursuit of the expedient. The notion, that our Government is only deterred by "prudery" from annexing to our territories in the East the whole of the Punjab (which, so late as 1846, we virtually guaranteed to the native rulers), upon no other pretext than that "it would be the best course for the country itself," is simply ridiculous and absurd. We believe that the Government, upon a principle of self-interest and sound policy, would resist to the uttermost the necessity of such wholesale aggrandizement; but we are, at the same time, convinced that, if a necessity for the annexation of a part or the whole of the Punjab territories should legitimately arise, the Government would not be influenced in the slightest degree by the obsolete and exploded doctrine, that appropriation of territory in India by us, under any pretext, is a crime.

Experience has amply tested the comparative advantages and disadvantages of the abstinent policy and that which was characterized as aggressive, and has proved that the middle course is the best, the safest, and the most honourable. When Sir George Barlow assumed the general government of India, upon the death of Lord Cornwallis, he deliberately weighed and considered the line of policy which was essential to "the permanent establishment of British interests in India," and he determined that the security of our empire in that country must be derived from one of two sources; "first, from establishing a controlling power over all the states of India; or, secondly, from the contentions and wars sure to prevail amongst those states if left to themselves." He rejected the first scheme, because "it must, in its nature, be progressive, and must ultimately tend to a system of universal dominion;" and he embraced the last, whereby it became our interest to foment intestine discord and prevent tranquillity in the native states. "The scheme of Lord Wellesley," observes Mr. Wilson,† in commenting upon this theory, "may have been chimerical, but it was benevolent and magnanimous; the cold and selfish policy, of suffering the princes of India to tear each other in pieces, without interfering to prevent them, savours neither of benevolence nor magnanimity."

But in truth it was not imperative upon us to choose either scheme; and although the British Government does exercise a dominant influence over the states of India, other than those connected by subsidiary treaties, interfering to prevent their "contentions and wars," and even requiring, for that object, that their disputes should be referred to its arbitration, this is incidental to our peculiar position, as the sole great state in India, and has not necessarily a greater tendency to a system of universal dominion than a mean and timid policy, adopted by such a state. War, which would be inevitable under either and any scheme, is more frequently forced upon a state whose choice and interest it is to be at peace, than upon one always ready to take arms; some penalty must be exacted for unjust war, since it would be encouraged by impunity, and none could be effectual besides privation of territory and of power.

Let us take the latest example, that of the Lahore state itself. Our forbearance towards that state was pushed almost to an extreme; to have carried it farther, upon the Barlow theory, would have put our very empire to hazard, and our reluctance to come to a collision probably precipitated it. The British Government had no views of "universal dominion" in entering upon the Sikh war; no one has disputed the sincerity of Lord Hardinge's declaration, that "no extension of territory was desired by the Government of India." The forfeiture of territory by the Sikh rulers was a necessary consequence of their unjust and unsuccessful invasion, and our alienation and appropriation of that territory was a necessary consequence of its forfeiture.

The present circumstances of our Indian empire prescribe a course of policy in which its own interests and those of its neighbours coincide. Too powerful to fear even a combination of native states, its possessions too extensive to make an augmentation of them even desirable, our Government has an interest in maintaining the just rights and possessions of the princes of India, with such a qualification only as private property is subjected to in the freest state in the world,—"sic utere tuo alieno ut non ledas;" and whilst, from benevolent motives, it would promote, not check, the tranquillity and amelioration of those states, the contrast presented between their political and social condition and that of its own subjects, is no contemptible element of the stability of its rule. Sir John Malcolm recorded,† as the result of long experience, his opinion, "that it is our policy to maintain, as long as we possibly can, all native states now existing."

The insubordination of one of the Sikh governors, accompanied by the massacre of two British functionaries, which has rendered a military movement on our part necessary, —whence the “speculations” of the Calcutta politicians,—is not an event that would require, and therefore justify, alienation of territory. The Lahore Government, prima facie, is the party affronted and injured by the revolt of its deputy, for whose punishment the Durbar troops are ostensibly co-operating with our own. Should Mooltan fall, as it probably will, into the hands of British troops, some special provision will be, no doubt, made, in concurrence with the Lahore Government, for its future security; and we should not be surprised if the fort were intrusted to the care of an English governor and a garrison of British sepoys. Annexation, even of Mooltan, we apprehend, is entirely out of the question.

THE Madras Government has escaped, through the moderation and discretion of the Queen's judges at that presidency, a collision with the Supreme Court, on a question of jurisdiction.

The facts of the case,—which shows to what a dangerous extent it is believed in India that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Courts can be pushed,—are these. The presidency of Madras, it is well known, has been distracted for the last two years by a quarrel between the Hindu community and the Government respecting the temple endowment funds, and, with a view of supporting their charges against Lord Tweeddale, certain influential Hindus obtained clandestinely some public records, relating to those funds, which were made known through the Hindu newspaper, the organ of the party. The Government immediately set on foot an inquiry to ascertain the individual who had been guilty of the breach of confidence, if not of honesty, whereby these papers had been abstracted, and having, in their opinion, traced the act to a Hindu named Vencataroyaloo, employed as Teloogoo translator (though he denies his culpability), dismissed him from his office under the Government, promulgating the dismissal and the cause of it in the Fort St. George Official Gazette, in the following terms:—

“M. Vencataroyaloo, recently Teloogoo translator in the Petition Department of the Government Office, having shown himself to be unworthy of trust by the systematic abstraction of records from the Government Office, and the unauthorized and clandestine communication of official information; the Most Noble the Governor in Council has been pleased to resolve, under date the 11th January, 1848, that he be dismissed from the public service, and that he be declared disqualified from holding any office under Government for a period of seven years from this date.”

This notification was signed, in the usual form, as “by order,” by Sir Henry C. Montgomery, officiating chief secretary. Strange to say, Vencataroyaloo was induced to bring an action against Sir Henry in the Supreme Court, for a libel, alleged to be contained in what may be termed the preamble of the notification. The Court did not stop the suit in limine; it was formally argued, and it ran the ordinary course of a libel cause between individuals. The judges took time to consider their judgment, and, happily, were led to the conclusion that they had not jurisdiction.

It would have been, indeed, difficult to arrive at any other conclusion. The Act of the Imperial Parliament, which created the Supreme Court, conferred upon it the same powers and authorities as the Supreme Court of Calcutta is invested with, and that Court is, by the 21 Geo. 3, c. 70, estopped from entertaining any suit for an act done under a written order of the Government.

The importance which the Madras Hindus attached to this suit may be measured by the excitement they exhibited upon the subject, and some of the newspapers express alarm at a decision which will permit the Government to “tyrannize over the natives with impunity!” The proceedings on the trial were published in extenso; and we have before us a report, in the shape of a Supplement to the Madras Athenæum, which forms a little book, of sixteen large pages, printed in very small type. The result of the trial may produce a wholesome reaction in the minds of the native community, which are apt to admit vague notions of the absolute power of the Queen's Courts; but the occurrence itself tends to reinforce the suggestions thrown out at the last Court of Proprietors, respecting the evils attending the undefined limits of the jurisdiction assigned to the Supreme Courts in India.

In spite of the munificent aid afforded by the East-India Company to railways in India, the first Indian line, from Bombay to Callian (about thirty-five miles),—a fragment of the Great Peninsula Railway,—is likely to be commenced under rather unfavourable auspices. Great reliance was naturally placed upon the support which these undertakings would receive from the wealthy natives of India; indeed, without their strenuous co-operation, the success of railways in that country would be almost hopeless; it appears, however, that, notwithstanding what has been done at home, and although it was distinctly intimated by the Local Provisional Committee at Bombay, that the shares in the line were to be restricted to 5*l.*, instead of 50*l.*, and that the applicants would incur no liability beyond the former sum, it was with great difficulty that the requisite number of shares could find purchasers before the 14th September, the latest date that could be fixed for registration, in order to be in time for the closing of the lists in London, on the 24th of the present month. The presidency newspapers, whilst they lament this “unhappy apathy,” assign plausible, if not substantial, reasons for it. In the first place, the natives of India, who have no practical knowledge of the nature and working of railways, regard them with that indefinite distrust and apprehension which great innovations always awaken in their minds. It is to be recollected, for example, that Indian society is very differently constituted from that of Europe; that the mixture of castes, in a train of railway carriages, suggests to them ideas totally distinct from those which we associate with confusion of classes, and many of them probably wait to see a railway in actual operation before they lend a helping hand to a novelty which may, they think, some how or other, damage some of their religious or social institutions. Then, again, they are appalled by the calamities which have unexpectedly lighted upon the shareholders of the Union Bank of Calcutta, and are very excusably shy of all joint-stock concerns. “So long as there is room for doubt,” observes a Bombay journal, “the native, after what he has seen of Indian joint-stock companies, naturally holds back.” Moreover, the mere circumstance of a government pecuniary guarantee being deemed indispensable to such an undertaking, though, to a certain extent, it secured the shareholders against loss, was not likely to inspire a shrewd native with very sanguine anticipations of profit from an undertaking which required so unusual a protection. Doubts have likewise been thrown, both in England and in India, upon the trust-worthiness of the estimates of cost and returns of this railway, and local objections have been started to the line which is understood to have been chosen. It appears that the produce of the countries east and north of Bombay is brought to the coast by three routes, namely, the Thul Ghaut, the Malsej Ghaut, and the Bore Ghaut. The line in contemplation is a single one, by the Malsej Ghaut, and it is said that the traffic by the other ghauts, which far exceeds that by the Malsej, will not be diverted to the railway. The Bombay Times says :—

"We have heard a good deal of discussion as to the propriety of the line selected for the purpose of experiment; and though it is allowed on all hands that from Bhewady inland it must be extended, and that the present is only an instalment of what must very quickly be provided, it would be well to have the instalment made as promising as possible, so that there might be all due encouragement to go on given immediately. The Malsej Ghaut, in the first place, conveys a mere fragment of the traffic from the interior, compared to what is brought by the Bore and Thul Ghauts, the contributions of which to the general stream of intercourse must, under the present arrangement, be left out. This is one very formidable matter."

It appears further that the line to Callian will not be a testing experiment, since neither in the cost of construction nor in returns will it afford any ratio of comparison with the extended line.

The "instalment" is, however, hailed by the European community generally as a means of familiarizing the natives with the machinery, advantages, and results of railways, and thereby promoting their construction and success in India. But to this view of the matter there is a counter-view; for if the experiment should fail, or even prove less successful than was expected, the backwardness of all parties will be increased, and the construction of railways by private enterprise may be seriously obstructed. This is a point which was much pressed by the late chairman of the Local Committee (Mr. R. W. Crawford), who observed, that "if the first considerable attempt should fail to be a profitable one, great discouragement to future enterprise will necessarily ensue; on the contrary, a successful railway will be the precursor of many more."

It is with the most friendly zeal on behalf of railways in India,—which, we are convinced, may be made a productive source of private profit as well as the greatest public benefit,—that we deprecate sanguine views and inculcate caution and circumspection. The errors, and they have been great, committed by railway projectors at home, ought not to be thrown away upon those in India, who must besides be prepared for new disturbing forces, and unforeseen elements of difficulty, impediment, and loss.

In our advertisement columns will be found the prospectus of an entirely new branch of business of a most respectable life-assurance office, for some time past well known to our Indian community.

The Family Endowment Society, taking into consideration the regular monthly salaries received by the Government employés and officers in India, has prepared a set of tables of monthly premiums for a term of years, corresponding with the periods of service under Government, which entitle the army and others to retiring pensions, and proposes to grant deferred annuities in addition to the scale of public pensions. The contribution of small sums monthly from the pay and salaries of all in India would demand so small a sacrifice at the time, that it has often been the object of accountants, and of gentlemen in the public services, to project plans for securing future benefits; and thus we have had a variety of ingenious and able schemes for retiring and bonus funds, and other similar associations, in the services; but the present simple plan, under the management of a well-established office, will give effect to all that has been desiderated by the army and civil service.

Our attention has been called by a series of papers, published in recent numbers, to the law of mortality for British India. During the last ten or fifteen years, many scientific, professional, and other gentlemen have successively devoted their inquiries to this interesting and useful topic; and as they all, with slight variations only, come to the same essential results, we may conclude that we have attained a certain basis on which calculations such as those now put forth by the Family Endowment Society may be made with present safety and future security.

Perhaps in no part of the world are better data afforded for such statistics than are to be found in the official records of the lives and services of the European community of British India. Annually, it is well known, some hundred young gentlemen proceed to the three presidencies of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay; all are obliged to produce baptismal certificates before admission into the service of the East-India Company. Their ages are thus accurately established and recorded. The yearly public returns and lists from India follow up the record of their future movements, positions in the service, and in fact of every necessary detail of their Indian life, so as to enable the actuary to calculate on every individual case, and to carry each public officer who has ever served in India to his list of facts and data, and thus to ascertain in his general tables of the law of mortality the exact expectation of average European life for that portion of our empire. Such calculations for India may be said to be safer even than those for the principal capitals or provincial communities of Europe. The tables of mortality frequently in use in England are deduced from the stated results of fluctuating and partially known bodies of men, ever exposed to some little inaccuracy in the facts collected, even where large communities are under public registration. But in India, every man whose life and fate are admitted into the body of facts on which the actuary bases his tables, has been recorded by name, vocation, age, actual residence from year to year, and at last is hunted down and "fairly run to earth" by the unerring calculator. The thousands and ten thousands of names thus set in accurate array can be obtained under no such circumstances in Europe by the inquiry of the statistician.

DISCIPLINE OF THE NATIVE ARMY.—Sir John Malcolm relates a striking anecdote of the high sense of the value of discipline entertained by the native officers of the Indian army. In the campaign of 1791, when Secunder Beg, one of the oldest subadars of the native cavalry, was riding at a little distance on the flank of his troop, two or three horsemen of Tipoo's army came suddenly upon him; the combat had hardly commenced, when the subadar's son, who was a havildar in the same regiment, flew to his father's aid, and slew the foremost of his opponents, when the others fled. Nothing could exceed the age of the old man at his son's conduct; he put him instantly under a guard, and insisted upon his being brought to punishment, for quitting his ranks without leave.

THE NIZAM DIAMOND.—About twelve years ago, a large diamond was found in the Nizam's country in the following manner. It was first seen in the hands of a native child, who was playing with it, of course without knowing its value. An offer of eight annas (about a shilling) being offered for what the poor people considered a worthless stone excited their suspicion, and the "bright stone" turned out to be a real diamond. A piece was chipped off, which, after passing through many hands, was purchased by a native banker for 70,000 rupees. The stone, hitherto unknown, which, in its present state, is of a very irregular shape, may be classed amongst the larger description of diamonds. Its length is 2.48 inches; the greatest breadth, 1.85 inches; and the average thickness, 0.92 inches. The weight is not quite 1,106 grains, equal to 277 carats of weight of the rough diamond, and as rough stones are usually taken to give but one-half of their weight when cut and polished, it would allow 136½ carats, or a weight between the Pitt (or Regent) diamond (136½ carats), and that of the Grand Duke of Tuscany (139 carats), for it in its present condition; and supposing that one-eighth (when polished) was taken off with the splitter sold to the banker, the weight would be 155½ carats, which would place this diamond between the Tuscan and the great Russian diamond, also an Indian stone.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE INDIAN NAVY.—This office, vacant by the death of Sir Robert Oliver, has, we believe, been offered to Capt. Lushington, R.N.; should he decline it, the probability is that it will be tendered to Sir H. Leek. The name of Capt. Maingay has been also mentioned.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER has written a letter to the editor of the Standard, in explanation of a passage of his speech at a dinner at Cheltenham, wherein he spoke "disparagingly" of the "press and Government." He states that, instead of "press," he should have said "that portion of the Indian press which abused him;" and instead of "Government" he should have said "Court of Directors;" and he mentions, as "a sample of the mode in which he has been attacked," that, when in India, he read that Mr. Baillie had said, in a debate in the House of Commons about Scinde, that he (Sir C. Napier) "had been sufficiently rewarded for his services, for he had received 70,000*l.* prize-money;" that he wrote to Mr. Baillie, asking how he could make such a statement, for which there were not the slightest grounds, as he never had received a single farthing of prize-money; and Mr. Baillie answered that he had made it on the authority of a Director; that, on his (Sir Charles's) arrival in Europe, he learned that Sir James Weir Hogg was "the man," and Mr. Baillie stated that when he was speaking on the debate, Sir James, who sat next to him, said "Tell them he has received 70,000*l.* prize-money;" and Sir Charles observes, first, that Sir James Hogg knows perfectly well, ex officio, as a Director and as a trustee for the Scinde prize-money, that he (Sir Charles) had not received one farthing of prize-money; and, second, that Sir James "knew that not only had he (Sir Charles) not received a farthing of prize-money, but that he (Sir James) and his colleagues were, at that moment, trying to prevent his receiving that share of prize-money which their own regulations awarded to the Commander of the Forces; and from which act of injustice on the part of these trustees he (Sir Charles) was protected by the Duke of Wellington, by Lords Ellenborough and Hardinge, and by the Lords of the Treasury." The letter is, of course, characteristic—for example, the explanation we have given commences thus: "There is a man named Hogg—one Sir James Weir Hogg," &c. Sir James W. Hogg, in a temperate letter, published in the Times of the 23rd, states the following facts, and leaves the public, as he may well do, "to judge between Sir C. Napier and himself:"—"By a Royal warrant (11th of November, 1845) the booty taken in Scinde, in 1843, by the forces under Sir C. Napier, was granted to the Court of Directors, as trustees, to distribute, in accordance with a scheme contained in the warrant, and "with the usage of the army of India." When this warrant was issued, it was believed that Sir C. Napier would receive one-eighth of the booty, estimated at upwards of half a million sterling. This estimate justified the opinion he expressed to Mr. Baillie, that Sir C. Napier's share would not fall short of 70,000*l.* The warrant was immediately forwarded to the Government of India by the Court of Directors, with instructions to distribute the booty agreeably to the scheme and the usage of the army of India. Subsequently to the proceedings in the House of Commons to which Sir C. Napier refers, a question, as to the shares to be awarded to him, according to the usage, originated with the General Prize Committee at Calcutta, who, in referring it for decision, observed that one-sixteenth was the share granted to Major-General Sir T. Willshire, in the distribution of the Kelat prize-money. The question thus raised was referred by the Governor-General to the home authorities for submission to the Lords of the Treasury. The Government of Bengal, in communicating this reference to the Court of Directors, observed that, in the cases of Major-General Sir D. Marshall, who commanded the force which captured Hattass, and of Major-General Sir T. Willshire, as cited by the Prize Committee, one-sixteenth of the whole booty taken on these occasions was allowed to the respective commanders, whilst one-eighth of the Bhurtore prize-money was assigned to General Lord Combermere, who, as Commander-in-Chief in India, conducted in person the operations against that fortress. The question thus raised was new to the Court of Directors, and it then became their duty, as the trustees, to make particular inquiry into the usage, the result of which was a decision that Sir C. Napier, not being a Commander-in-Chief, should share in the Scinde booty as a major-general commanding the troops in Scinde, and that, as such, according to what appeared to be the prevalent usage, he should receive one-sixteenth of the booty. This opinion was notified to the Lords of the Treasury. After a considerable time it was determined that Sir C. Napier was entitled to be considered as having been the Commander-in-Chief in Scinde, and to share in the advantages in the distribution of the booty which belong to that position. Orders were in consequence sent to India that one-eighth of the booty should be allotted to him. Whilst this decision was pending, orders were given to distribute the portion of the booty which had been realized, with an allotment of one-sixteenth to Sir C. Napier, reserving funds to pay him the remaining one-sixteenth, if such should be the decision. Under this arrangement a sum of 2,73,677 rupees has been payable to Sir C. Napier in India since the 31st of December last, being one-sixteenth of the amount then distributed; the other sixteenth is the first payment to be made out of the undistributed funds; he will thus receive 5,47,354 rupees, and will be further entitled to one-eighth of the funds that will remain for distribution, and which are in the Company's treasury, bearing interest at 4 per cent. per annum from the date when the property was originally placed there, to be duly paid as soon as the accounts are adjusted. Mr. Baillie has likewise written to the Times (24th), pointing out inaccuracies in the letters of Sir Charles; but they are unimportant after the wholesale refutation of its charges by Sir J. Hogg.

THE CHOLERA.—Dr. Corbyn, in his Treatise on the Epidemic Cholera as it has prevailed in India, amongst the "causes strictly predisposing," mentions "debility, in whatever way induced," as by far the most powerful and most generally present. Hence, he says, the lower classes, those badly fed and ill-clothed and lodged, were found universally to suffer more than persons in better circumstances. In all the different divisions of the Indian army visited by the disease, the Hindoo, who lives chiefly on poor, crude, and acedent vegetables, was more liable to attack than the Musulman, who eats flesh-meat, sometimes drinks spirituous liquors, and is generally warmly clad. For like reasons, the European soldier was less subject than either class of the native troops, and the European officer again less so than the soldier. Thus, too, persons of sober and regular habits enjoyed greater immunity than the drunken and dissipated. Another great predisposing cause was fatigue, and exposure to vicissitudes of heat and cold. All accounts agreed in stating that the young, healthy, and robust were least liable to the disease. Children are subject to cholera, but infants at the breast were found not susceptible of it. People debilitated by recent disease, or by the remedies for its cure, are very susceptible. One attack does not confer immunity from another. Many instances were noticed of cholera supervening on the use of neutral purgative salts; and cases, terminating in death, have occurred after drinking unwholesome liquors.

DR. MILL.—On the 14th October, the Rev. Dr. Mill was elected to the Regius Professorship of Hebrew in the University of Cambridge, vacant by the resignation of the Rev. Dr. Lee.

BAPTISM OF A NATIVE OF CHINA.—On the 23rd September, Chun-ah-yoo, a native of China, aged 21, was baptized in Holy Trinity Church, Birkenhead, by the Rev. J. Baylee, the incumbent. The convert is the son of a Canton merchant, who sent him, about three years since, to England, to learn our language and manners, and to acquire facility in commercial transactions. He was recommended to Mr. Langdon, the proprietor of the Chinese Collection in London, and gradually obtained a knowledge of the English language, and his agreeable manners recommended him to the acquaintance of many persons. He arrived in Liverpool in July last, and was introduced to Mr. Baylee, the Principal of the Theological College, Birkenhead. He was baptized by the name of Chun-ta-kwang, selected by himself, as denoting the "great light" he hopes to diffuse amongst his countrymen on his return to China.

THE GREAT SEA SERPENT.—The existence of this monster of the deep is now placed beyond rational doubt. Capt. M'Quhae, of H.M. frigate Dadalus, in a letter to the Lords of the Admiralty, reports the following facts relating to the serpent, which was seen on the ship's voyage from the East-Indies, between the Cape of Good Hope and St. Helena. He says: "At five o'clock P.M. on the 6th of August last, in lat. 24° 44' S., and long. 9° 22' E., the weather dark and cloudy, wind fresh from the N.W., with a long ocean swell from the S.W., the ship on the port tack heading N.E. by N., something very unusual was seen by Mr. Sartoris, midshipman, rapidly approaching the ship from before the beam. The circumstance was immediately reported by him to the officer of the watch, Lieut. Edgar Drummond, with whom and Mr. William Barrett, the master, I was at the time walking the quarter-deck. The ship's company were at supper. On our attention being called to the object, it was discovered to be an enormous serpent, with head and shoulders kept about four feet constantly above the surface of the sea, and, as nearly as we could approximate by comparing it with the length of what our maintopsail-yard would show in the water, there was at the very least sixty feet of the animal à fleur d'eau, no portion of which was, to our perception, used in propelling it through the water, either by vertical or horizontal undulation. It passed rapidly, but so close under our lee quarter, that, had it been a man of my acquaintance, I should have easily recognised his features with the naked eye; and it did not, either in approaching the ship or after it had passed our wake, deviate in the slightest degree from its course to the S.W., which it held on at the pace of from twelve to fifteen miles per hour, apparently on some determined purpose. The diameter of the serpent was about fifteen or sixteen inches behind the head, which was, without any doubt, that of a snake, and it was never, during the twenty minutes that it continued in sight of our glasses, once below the surface of the water; its colour a dark brown, with yellowish white about the throat. It had no fins, but something like the mane of a horse, or rather a bunch of seaweed, washed about its back. It was seen by the quartermaster, the boatswain's mate, and the man at the wheel, in addition to myself and officers abovementioned." An account, which appeared in the Times of October 7, agrees with the foregoing particulars, but adds a fact omitted in Capt. M'Quhae's report, namely, that "when it extended its jaws, which were full of large jagged teeth, they seemed sufficiently capacious to admit of a tall man standing upright between them." This is not the first well-authenticated account of such a monster by European (not American) witnesses; it was once seen from a merchant ship in the Bay of Bengal. Its characteristics agree strongly with those of the Leviathan of Scripture, "the piercing serpent,—the crooked serpent,—the dragon that is in the sea." This identical monster appears to have been seen by the American brig Daphne,—the Americans have been favoured with many interviews,—in lat. 4° 11' S., long. 10° 15' E., on the 20th September. The mate gave the master of an English merchant-vessel a description of the snake corresponding in every respect with that of Capt. M'Quhae. The American master discharged one of his deck guns, loaded with spike-nails and pieces of iron, at the animal (distant about forty yards), which reared its head in the air, plunged violently, and made rapidly off, foaming and lashing the water at a fearful rate.

MAJOR EDWARDS.—Downing Street, Oct. 20.—The Queen has been pleased to make and ordain a special statute of the Most Hon. Order of the Bath, for appointing Lieutenant Herbert Benjamin Edwards, of the East-India Company's service, having the local rank of Major in the Lahore territories, to be an Extra Member of the Military Division of the Third Class, or Companions of the said Order.—Gazette.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS.—The Mary Stoddart has been engaged for the freight of stores to Calcutta.

THE ABBE DUBOIS.—The death of this venerable missionary, whose opinions and writings caused a considerable stir in the religious world some years back, on his return from India, has attracted but little notice. He died at Paris on the 17th February last, at the age of eighty-three. He was the author of several publications connected with India, besides his "Manners, Institutions, and Ceremonies of the People of India." His conversation, which was much courted by his countrymen, was instructive, and he loved to the last to recount his adventures in the East.

SORTES HAFIZIANÆ.—Divination by the works of Hafiz is used in Persia in the same manner as Rhapsodomancy and the Sortes Virgilianæ were used in Europe. The practice is to open his Diwan, or Book of Odes, at random, and apply the first passage that presents itself as an omen. The custom is earlier than Hafiz, for that poet himself mentions it, and confesses he sometimes resorted to it. Thus, he says: "I resolved one morning, intending to repent, to consult an omen; it proved to be: 'Spring, the breaker of vows, has returned.' What, then, can I do?" When Hafiz died, and there was some hesitation about granting him the usual rites of burial, on the ground of the licentiousness of his poetry, the point was at length referred to the tefau-ool, or divination, by his own works. His Diwan was opened, when the first passage that appeared was—

"Turn not thy steps from Hafiz' mournful grave, Him plunged in sin shall heavenly mercy save."

Every respect was immediately paid to his remains.

The tree, supposed to yield the balsam of Tolu, in the Tenasserim provinces, turns out to be not the Myrosermum toluiferum, but the Liquidamber altingia, and the product, not balsam of Tolu, but liquid storax.

The subsidence of hostility to Christianity, of late years, in Turkey, is attributed to a traditional belief prevalent there, that that faith is predestined to become universal for a limited period of forty years.

AMPHIBIOLOGY.—The Orientals, in all matters of this kind, ever keep pace with us. The following anecdote is not inferior to anything of the kind elsewhere. "Akul, being displeased with his brother, the celebrated Ali, went over to Moaweyeh, who, as a proof of his sincerity, required him to curse Ali; whereupon Akul thus addressed the congregation: 'O people! you know that Ali, the son of Abu Taleb, is my brother; now Moaweyeh has ordered me to curse him; therefore, may the curse of God be upon him!'" So that the curse would apply either to Ali or Moaweyeh.—Addison's Reminiscences.

THE TIBETAN LANGUAGE.—Under the double aspect of the history of languages, and that of philosophy, the Tibetan tongue is worthy of the attention of scholars. To what family are we to refer this monosyllabic idiom which has borrowed from India its alphabet and its literature, and from China some of its vocabularies, and which, nevertheless, has preserved in its substance peculiar and in some respects primitive forms? Are we to discover in the servile letters, which, though not pronounced, perform a part in the composition of words, the relics of an ancient and more developed tongue, which time has mutilated, and of which only fragments have descended to us? What was the literature, what was the creed, of the Tibetans when the religious movement of India drew them into its sphere in the eighth century? These are the problems which criticism will one day discuss when a comparison of a great number of texts, belonging to different ages, shall permit science to repose its conjectures upon a solid basis.—Journal Asiatique.

AN INFANT LAMA OF TIBET, who was eighteen months old, conducted himself at the audience, according to Capt. Turner, "with astonishing dignity and decorum." He never looked at his father and mother, who were present, but kept his eyes almost constantly fixed upon the Europeans, appearing uneasy when their tea-cups were empty, and throwing back his head, contracting his brow, and continuing to make a noise (for he could not speak), till they were filled again. When the envoy had made his oration to the child,—for he was warned not to infer from his want of speech that he could not understand,—the little creature turned and looked steadfastly towards him with the appearance of deep attention, nodding his approbation with repeated slow movements of the head.—Ritchie's British World in the East.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

Facts and Documents relating to the Affairs of the Union Bank of Calcutta, during his Service as Secretary to that Institution, by J. C. STEWART. Calcutta, Thacker and Co. London, Smith, Elder, and Co.

THE revelations contained in this pamphlet, written in vindication of himself, by Mr. Stewart, against the charges and alleged misrepresentations of Mr. W. P. Grant, would be almost incredible did there not subsist between them and the ruin which has overwhelmed the Union Bank the unmistakable relation of cause and effect. Mr. Stewart succeeded Mr. Gordon as secretary of the Bank in December, 1843, and relinquished the office in January, 1847, when the directors tendered him their cordial thanks "for the ability, energy, and skill with which he had conducted the business of the Bank during a very trying period." He has, we think, fully justified himself from all the imputations which Mr. Grant has, most unwisely as well as unfairly, attempted to fix upon him; and in doing so he has, unavoidably, involved other directors, besides Mr. Grant, in the counter-charge of "entering the board of direction, not as proprietors, to protect their interest in a common property, but to absorb for their own speculations as much as possible of that which was committed to their trust." In July, 1845, he brought formally to the notice of the Finance Committee of the Bank (of which Mr. Grant was a member) the fact that "three or four parties engrossed nearly two-thirds of the Bank's capital," which he truly represented as "unfair to the public and prejudicial to the Bank;" but Mr. Grant was unwilling to "stir matters" which he considered "somewhat of a gunpowdery nature;" and in July, 1846, Mr. Stewart represented to Mr. Grant himself his (Mr. Grant's) debts to the Bank amongst those of other "defaulting directors." He states, that when he left, in 1847, "three firms, who always had partners in the direction, were found to have received three-fourths of the capital of the Bank," amounting to 1,000,000, "and other directors owed further heavy sums to it."

Mr. Stewart refers to some of the causes of the Bank's ruin, especially its enormous advances upon indigo factories, which embarked it deeply in that hazardous species of cultivation, making it an "indigo-speculating bank;" but the prominent cause, according to him, is the abuse of their official connection with the Bank by the chief directors, who, he says, were "the Bank's chief debtors," and "a few favoured houses absorbing nearly all the money the Bank possessed." Losses, and balances that should have been written off to "profit and loss," were kept up as living representatives of property, and the dividends were, meanwhile, paid not out of profits, but out of capital. This might all be attributable to negligence or blindness, if the directors were not directly charged by Mr. Stewart with active deception. He states that one director purchased, or induced others to purchase, within the last fifteen months of the Bank's existence, 2,000 of its shares, or a fifth part of the whole stock, the old system being prolonged, after the failure of Cockerell and Co. and other principal debtors, till the money of the Commercial Bank of Bombay was misappropriated, and the true state of the Union Bank burst upon the wonder and indignation of the world.

Railways in India; with an Introduction, illustrative of the practicability of rendering available existing Works in diminution of the Cost of such Undertakings, whereby their Profits may be greatly increased. By JOHN BOURNE, C.E., one of the Engineers of the East-Indian Railway. Second Edition. Williams and Co.

Postscript to the Second Edition of "Railways in India." By the same. Harrison.

THIS rather bulky pamphlet, though treating of "Railways in India," is devoted chiefly to those projected in Bengal, namely, the East-Indian, from Calcutta, through Mirzapore, in the line of the Ganges, to Delhi; and the Great Western, from Calcutta to Rajmahal: the latter has merged in the former.

In his general remarks upon railways in India, Mr. Bourne lays down a very salutary rule, namely, that whereas, in England, railways are chiefly supported by passenger traffic, Indian railways must look for their main support to the conveyance of merchandize. He shews that the goods, now transported on the Ganges, which would probably be secured to the railway, if it were completed to Mirzapore, and if the charges were moderate, would yield an ample return. The last condition involves the question of cost and expenditure, and a main object of his pamphlet is to shew that a single line would be sufficient for all the traffic, whilst it would not cost more than half the expense of a double line, and that the present roads and bridges might, to a considerable extent, be made available for a railway. In order to attract the water traffic to the railway, however, he maintains that the charges must not be higher than the existing rates on the river, and that the railway must, in order to prevent the necessity of transhipment, be carried in an unbroken line from Calcutta to Mirzapore.

The views of Mr. Bourne with respect to the East-Indian Railway are repugnant to those of the Company, and the Introduction to the second edition of his pamphlet, as well as his Postscript, are almost exclusively occupied with his own vindication, and a reiteration of the facts upon which his conclusions are based.

With respect to the other Indian lines,—the Great Indian Peninsula and the Madras Railways,—he considers them both as promising; but whilst he believes that the traffic anticipated on the Great Peninsula by Mr. Chapman (the managing director) will be fully realized, he pronounces the estimate of 10,000l. per mile, for the construction of a double line, too small, and recommends that the Indian Peninsula Railway should be a single line.

We have not space to enter into the details of the pamphlet, but the whole subject is discussed by Mr. Bourne in a calm and quiet tone, and with more moderation than we are accustomed to meet with in controversial publications upon railways.

The indefatigable Mr. B. H. Hodgson has procured a vocabulary of the language of the Khas, one of the aboriginal tribes of the eastern sub-Himalayas, mentioned in the Puranas and by Hindu classical authors as barbarian tenants of those hills. "No one," he says, "practised in ethnological researches can fail to discern the aboriginal and Mongolian origin of the Khas in their forms and faces; nor does their language want some vestiges of that origin."

It appears from the Hindi tazkira, entitled Majma-u-lintikháb, of Shah Muhammad Kamal, that the poet Sádi not only wrote in the Rekta dialect, but that a fragment from his pen is the oldest specimen of Urdu Hindi composition extant. Kamal goes so far as to term Sádi the "inventor of the Rekta language."

&c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavour to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the utmost despatch will be used in the shipments from London.

PEAT feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are not of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior qualities. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12th saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9 lbs., at present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. She also strongly recommends a beautiful description of Merino Vest and Drawers adapted for the East and West Indies.

Mrs. W. takes this opportunity to thank her friends and the public for the liberal support she has received for the last six years, and begs to assure them that as she devotes the whole of her time and attention to her business, that the best attention will be paid to all orders she may be favoured with for either ladies or gentlemen, enclosing an order for payment on a bank or any house of known responsibility in London, will meet with immediate attention.

MOURNING.—COURT, FAMILY, AND COMPLIMENTARY.

THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

The LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, 247, 249, and 251, Regent Street.—W. C. JAY, Proprietor.

A WIDOW LADY, residing in a pleasant neighbourhood, in a large and airy house westward of St. James's Park, is desirous of receiving charge of TWO or THREE CHILDREN, who, while they would have the concomitant advantages of a home, their education would be superintended with that of her own little girl and boy. To parents in the East Indies, or about to leave England, who may wish to intrust their children to the care of a lady who will undertake to provide for their comfort and bestow upon them every kind attention, the opportunity which is now offered may be deemed eligible. A resident governess and a good nurse are kept, whose time is entirely devoted to the children. References as to respectability required of those who may apply, and the same afforded by the Advertiser, with every further information.

WORTHY OF PUBLIC ATTENTION!!!

CHAPMAN'S UNIVERSAL PILLS, a combination of the most approved virtues of the Vegetable Kingdom, blended together in such due and just proportions, as to form at length an article which, they confidently venture to affirm, will be found superior to any thing of the kind hitherto made known; they contain not a particle of Mercury, or any other pernicious ingredients, but act almost imperceptibly, but none the less surely, as a gentle purifier of the blood and invigorator of the system. Their private use has been for many years co-extensive with that of the Universal Salve, to which they will be found most valuable agents.

The Proprietors might say much in their favour, and would enlarge upon their merits, were they not anxious that they should stand upon their own, and not have the appearance of being (as is too commonly the case) puffed into notice. They will, therefore, content themselves by saying that, in all cases of Bilious Attacks, Indigestion, Constipation of the Bowels, Sick Head-ache, frequent Nauseas, Chronic Rheumatism, Lumbago, violent Cold or Cough, Jaundice, and in short all Internal Diseases, their aid will be found to be invaluable. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d., each. Wholesale Depot, 5, Swallow Place, Regent Street.

Be particular in asking for CHAPMAN'S UNIVERSAL PILLS. Agents:—Messrs. HANWAY and Co.; SARGENT and Co., Oxford Street; and by most of the respectable Chemists in the United Kingdom.

EMIGRATION and COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote EMIGRATION, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CARLIN-PASSENGER OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 66 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at ST. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

FINE HEAD of HAIR.—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR

OIL.—The extraordinary efficacy and happy amalgamation of its purely exotic materials have rendered it justly renowned throughout the world for its remarkable virtues in nourishing, preserving, and beautifying the human hair. It insinuates its balsamic properties into the pores of the head, nourishes the hair in its embryonic state, accelerates its growth, cleanses it from scurf and dandruff, sustains it in maturity, and continues its possession of healthy vigour, silky softness, and luxurious redundancy, to the latest period of human life. Its operation in cases of baldness is peculiarly active; so that, in numerous instances wherein other remedies have been tried in vain, Rowland's Macassar Oil has superseded the ornaments of art, by reinstating, in full plenitude, the permanent gifts and graces of nature. In the growth of whiskers, eyebrows, and mustachios, it is also unfailing in its stimulative operation. For children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair, and rendering the use of the fine comb unnecessary. A small pamphlet accompanies each bottle of Rowland's Macassar Oil, wherein important hints and advice will be found on the culture of the hair of infancy, and on its preservation and beauty through the several stages of human life. Its invaluable properties have obtained the especial patronage of her Majesty the Queen, the Court, and the whole of the Royal Family of Great Britain, and of every Court of the civilized world; and the high esteem in which it is universally held, together with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits.—Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; or family bottles (equal to 4 small, 10s. 6d.); and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION.—On the wrapper of each bottle of the genuine article are these words, in two lines.—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL. The same are engraved on the back of the wrapper nearly 1,500 times, containing 29,028 letters. Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by all Chemists and Perfumers.—* Beware of spurious "Macassar Oils." Some are offered under the implied sanction of Royalty and the Government Departments, and similar attempts at deception.

A MOST INVETERATE SKIN DISEASE CURED

BY HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT & PILLS.—James Hazlett, millwright, Menagh, county of Donegal, was affected with a dreadful skin disease, being covered with sores from the ear to the elbow, and down the right side, which rendered him totally unable to work at his trade. His malady was of so malignant a nature, that he became a loathsome object of pity. In this state he was presented with some of Holloway's Ointment and Pills, and by persevering in the use of those wonderful remedies for a few weeks he has been soundly cured, and is now able to resume his laborious occupation.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 344, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 10th of May, 1848, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES.

IN ONE VOLUME ROYAL OCTAVO, PRICE £2. 12s. 6d.

A DICTIONARY
HINDUSTANI-ENGLISH & ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.,

Professor of Oriental Languages in the King's College, London; Member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland; Member of the Asiatic Society of Paris; and author of several Works on the Hindustani and Persian Languages.

This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgement of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—may now be procured. It contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

ELEMENTARY WORKS RECENTLY PUBLISHED

GRAMMAR of the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE, in the Oriental and Roman Characters, with numerous copper-plate illustrations of the Persian and Devanagari Systems of Alphabetic Writing. To which is added, a copious Selection of Easy Extracts for reading in the Persian and Devanagari Characters, forming a complete introduction to the Bagh-o-Bahar, together with a Vocabulary and explanatory Notes. By DUNCAN FORBES. 8vo. cloth 12s.

HINDUSTANI MANUAL: a Pocket Companion for those who visit India in any capacity; intended to facilitate the essential attainments of conversing with fluency, and composing with accuracy, in the most useful of all the languages spoken in our Eastern Empire.

IN TWO PARTS.

PART I.—A compendious Grammar of the Language, with Exercises on its more prominent peculiarities; together with a Selection of useful Phrases, Dialogues, and Subjects for translation into English.

PART II.—A Vocabulary of useful Words, English and Hindustani; shewing at the same time the difference of idiom between the two Languages.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

Second Edition, considerably improved. 18mo. bd. 5s. 6d.

Extracted from the "Friend of India," published at Serampore:—

"We have been favoured with a copy of the 'Hindustani Manual,' published by Dr. FORBES, the Professor of Oriental Languages and Literature in King's College, London. It is a small duodecimo volume of 156 pages, within which narrow space more instruction is condensed than is to be found in works four times its size and cost. . . . The Work can be honestly recommended to all who are desirous of acquiring the elements of the language, or of making themselves understood among the people of this country. We have seldom, if ever, seen such a small pocket companion with such a variety of useful instruction. The language of the Vocabulary and of the Dialogues appears quite unexceptionable. Any one acquainted with Hindustani will at once recognise its idiomatic accuracy, and cheerfully recommend it to the notice of all those who desire to come out to India not altogether unprepared to convey their own wishes to those who surround them."

BAGH-O-BAHAR; consisting of entertaining Tales. By MIA AHMED, of Delhi. A new edition, carefully collated with original Manuscripts, having the essential vowel points and punctuation marked throughout. To which is added, a Vocabulary of the Words occurring in the Work. SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

FIVE days ago, we announced, upon the concurrent testimony of all accounts brought by the last mail, that, with the exception of Mooltan and an isolated and insignificant eruption of a mutinous spirit amongst the Sikh troops in the Hazareh country, "the Lahore territories remained perfectly tranquil." Our present advices would lead us to conclude that the whole of the Punjab, from its base to its apex, is one scene of commotion; "almost the whole Punjab has risen against us," says the Bombay Telegraph; "there is scarcely a place that can be considered secure, scarcely a chief or sirdar who can be depended upon; everywhere disaffection and treachery prevail." Making all the abatements which the sober caution of the Bombay Times prescribes in the "excessive exaggerations of the alarmists," it is evident that a very widely-spread conspiracy has been silently organized throughout the country, and we may extract from this fact another proof, in corroboration of the lessons of all experience, that peace in India is of the most fugitive quality; that the sunshine of to-day may be a prelude to the hurricane of to-morrow; that allies are often but foes in deep disguise, and that political safety can be found only in being fully prepared in the most tranquil for the most turbulent season.

The very ample details which we have given elsewhere of the military operations before Mooltan, render unnecessary more, in this place, than a narrative of the leading events.

In our last Review we brought down the movements of the British forces to the end of August, when the columns from Lahore and Ferozepore had joined the camp of Major Edwardes, and were waiting the arrival of the battering-train to commence operations. On the 1st of September, Major-General Whish, the commander of the British forces, with a body of engineer officers, accompanied by a strong escort, made a reconnoissance to the northward of the fortress, carrying his observations close up to the eedgah, or temple, where Mr. Agnew and Lieutenant Anderson were murdered, about 800 yards from the ramparts. To facilitate the reconnoissance, Major Edwardes, with nearly the whole of the original attacking force, was sent round to divert the enemy's attention by an attack on the south side, which brought on a smart affair with the Dewan's troops, who were driven back, and our party returned to the camp. The reconnoissance, which was completed under a fire from the fort, the practice of the guns being described as "beautiful," showed that the place was much stronger than had been imagined, the fort being a mile in circumference, surrounded by a ditch twenty feet wide, the defences regularly constructed. Moreover, the approaches are difficult, groves and mounds furnishing excellent positions for the guns of the enemy.

On the 2nd and 3rd there was some firing between Major

Edwardes's troops and the Mooltanis, who occupied one of the mounds, and a fire was opened from the fort upon the sappers and miners and pickets, which did little damage. On the 4th, when a little skirmishing took place, in which Col. Cortlandt's men were engaged, the siege-train, of thirty-four pieces of heavy ordnance, arrived, and next day a proclamation was issued by the Commander of the British forces, and circulated in the city, "inviting" the garrison and inhabitants to an unconditional surrender within twenty-four hours, upon a pledge that the former would be permitted to withdraw unmolested, "on giving up Dewan Mookraj and his immediate associates, and laying down their arms," and that private property would be respected.

The beleaguering forces now took up their positions,—the commander of the forces, with the Lahore and Ferozepore brigades two miles from the east angle of the fortress, Major Edwardes and the Bhawalporeans, a mile and a half south-east of the town; Shaikh Emam-ood-Deen, a like distance to the south, and Rajah Shere Singh, with the Durbar army, about two miles west by south.

On the 6th, two guns were made over to the Nawab of Bhawalpore, to enable him to operate against the mound of Sheedes Lall, whence the Mooltanis had fired upon Major Edwardes on the 2nd, and in the evening the mortar batteries opened, and shells were thrown into the town, creating the utmost alarm, and driving out a number of the inhabitants. The more serious operations, however, did not commence until the 7th, when, after moving up the guns to within 400 yards of the walls, it was expected a breach would be established, and the town was to be carried by assault. The strength of the fort, the numbers and determination of the insurgents, and the slaughter that would have taken place during a conflict in the streets while the citadel was in possession of the enemy, induced the general to change his plans, and proceed by regular approaches against the suburbs and the city. Some sharp skirmishing took place on the 7th and 8th, between parties of our troops and the Mooltanis, who were driven, at the bayonet's point, into the town. On the 8th and 9th, attacks were made by the Dewan's troops upon our working parties, with little or no effect, until the night of the 9th, when the officer commanding in the trenches resolved to dislodge a party of the enemy, who annoyed them from a garden and village about 100 yards in front of the Ram Tirhut, where (it afterwards appeared) they had strongly intrenched themselves. The attack was made by a party of the 10th foot and a portion of the 49th N.I. with resolution, but the position was too strong; a loop-holed house in the village resisted all attempts to force an entrance; and so hot was the enemy's fire, that the European soldiers were compelled to seek shelter, and ultimately to retire. Four officers were wounded, Brigadier Markham slightly; Lieuts. H. A. Hollinsworth, W. Irwin, and J. F. Richardson, of the 49th, severely. The 10th had 40 men (out of 90) wounded; the 49th, 28. The post was about 600 yards from our outworks.

On the 10th, the discharge of round shot, grape, and shrapnell, from our batteries, is said to have been tremendous; but the enemy, well protected, did not appear to suffer. On the following day little was done on either side, but the enemy had become aware of the strength of their position, and of the efficacy of night attacks, and began to establish a regular battery in the garden whence they had repulsed us.

The Commander of the forces now determined to make a general assault upon the outworks on the attacked side of the city and fort, on the morning of the 12th. Accordingly, a force, consisting of a troop of horse artillery, a squadron of horse, twelve companies of Europeans, and two regiments of native infantry, 2,500 in all, under Brigadier Hervey, marched at daybreak against the intrenchment, or rather intrenchments, in the garden, which they carried in spite of a desperate resistance and tremendous fire from the enemy, who are described as "perfect fiends to fight." On the other hand, the Europeans, remembering their former failure, "fought like furies." There followed a scene, which we report in the words of an eye-witness, published in the Delhi Gazette :—

"After taking this second intrenchment, and setting fire to it, away we went at the enemy's trenches; but after advancing and firing into them for some time, and just as we had got close up to them, they brought out such a fire of guns, junjals, zumbooraks, bows and arrows, &c. upon us, that we were obliged to fall back, as was upon the second intrenchment we had taken, and when there the men, both European and native, mounted the walls, determined that not a soul should escape. Certainly the massacre that took place within a taekhana (enclosed on all sides by loop-holed walls, and intrenched all round,) was something awful to one who had never been on service before."

In short, 400 men, in a narrow square, were all shot or bayoneted! In this fierce struggle our loss was severe, especially in officers, of whose names we subjoin a correct list :—

KILLED.—Col. R. T. R. Pattoun, 32nd foot; Major T. S. Montizambert, 10th foot; Quartermaster G. Taylor, 32nd foot; Lieut. T. Cubitt, 49th N.I.; and Ensign C. C. Lloyd, 8th N.I. (cut down while parleying with the enemy).

WOUNDED.—Capt. A. L. Balfour, H.M.'s 32nd foot, slightly; Lieut. C. T. King, ditto, slightly; Lieut. J. Swinburne, ditto, slightly; Lieut. W. A. Birtwhistle, ditto, slightly; Capt. M. McGregor, H.M.'s 10th foot, slightly; Col. Franks, ditto, slightly; Lieut. Herbert, ditto, ditto; Major Napier, engineers, ditto; Lieut. Lake, ditto; Lieut. Binney, horse artillery, ditto; Capt. W. Christopher, Indian Navy, badly (leg amputated above the ankle); Capt. F. T. Wroughton, 8th N.I. slightly; Lieut. A. Turnbull, ditto, ditto; Ensign F. H. Kennedy, ditto, ditto; Lieut. E. C. Vibart, 11th light cavalry, ditto.

The number of killed and wounded in the European corps is about 100; in the native regiments, 180.

This success, though dearly purchased, placed in our hands all the defensible points on that side of the city, and enabled the battering-guns to be advanced within 600 yards of the Khornee Boorj, or Bloody Bastion, of the town, on the 13th; on which day, a furious, but ineffectual, attack was made on Major Edwardes's camp. The next day the British troops carried the outwork called the Hummund Ghurree, from which post batteries could fire into both town and fort without impediment, and breaching might be begun at almost point-blank distance.

And now, when the prospect of success was so promising, treachery began to act.

Rajah Shere Singh, who, with the Durbar army of 5,000 Sikhs, was, as we have said, located to the west of the fort, had been ordered to cause a diversion by an attack on his side; instead of which, on the morning of the 14th, he went over to the enemy with his whole force and artillery, twelve guns and eighty zumbooraks. Two of the Sirdars alone remained faithful, Ittar Singh, who brought the news of the defection to Major Edwardes, and Shumshere Singh, who likewise managed to effect his escape to our camp. This movement, which seems to have been less expected by the enemy than by ourselves, made it imprudent, in the opinion of General Whish and a Council of War, to prosecute the operations, the siege was raised on the 15th, and the troops and guns were withdrawn to a position six miles from Mooltan, the materials prepared for the siege, a large quantity of ammunition, and a month's supply of biscuits, having fallen into the enemy's hands. The forces had been but a short time in their new position when (it is said, but this requires confirmation) they were obliged to retire, though in a fortified camp, to a post eighteen miles from Mooltan, in the direction of Bhawalpore,* where the late besieging force was transformed into an army of observation, waiting for reinforcements to balance the large diminution of their own force and the corresponding addition to that of the enemy, who are said to have taken two of our engineer officers. The latest Delhi Gazette contains a letter from Bhawalpore, stating that General Whish had dismissed all the Sikh Sirdars from his camp, and intended to send away Shaikh Emam-ood-Deen and Dewan Jwahur Mall, retaining only the troops of Colonel Cortlandt.

The Indian journals are loud in their denunciations of the delay on the part of the Government, to which they impute this reverse.

"Such," says the Bombay Times, "are the bitter fruits of vacillation and hesitation: while we were debating on the size of the army to be sent and the most fitting time for sending them—calculating how much cost or inconvenience might be incurred, or probable sickness occasioned by a march one month compared with that by another—we were tempting traitors into the field and holding out a bribe for insurrection. A strong brigade half the size of the army of observation under General Whish would, if despatched in May, have settled the matter in a week's time. By delay and vacillation, a chance explosion of anger and haphazard attack has waxed into a widely-ramified and deep-rooted treason—fast rooted to the spot whence it sprung, and extending itself throughout every part of the Sikh dominions."

It is some consolation to know that our troops are in perfect health, and, in spite of their disappointment, in the highest spirits. The check has delayed, and only delayed, the fall of Mooltan, for, attacked, as it will soon be by an overwhelming force, separate armies advancing from the north and south, strong in every arm and complete in equipment, to reinforce the late besieging army, in all human probability, its fall is certain.

Expresses were sent from the British camp for reinforcements, for which arrangements were immediately made at Lahore and in the Upper Provinces. An army of 30,000 men was ordered to be formed at Ferozepore, under General Gilbert, half of which was to be sent to Mooltan, and 9,000 Bombay troops were directed to rendezvous at Reesee, on the Indus, under Brigadier Dundas. A force was collecting in Scinde (into which troops were pouring), under Major-General Auchmuty. Some of the Madras regiments would reinforce the Bombay stations, at the same time that a general advance was preparing from the Bengal frontier. No troops could, it appears, be spared from Lahore, but it was considered the cavalry regiments still left in Ferozepore would be quite sufficient to keep open the line of communication with the camp of General Whish; in other words, to check any rising between him and the capital.

The transactions in other parts of the Lahore territories show an intimate relation with the state of affairs at Mooltan. At the capital, four chiefs had been arrested (including Runjoor Singh), and almost all the leading Sirdars, except Noor-ood-Deen, are said to have been plotting with Moolraj and Chuttoor Singh. The British resident had ordered the palace to be occupied with European troops (the 53rd foot) and some sepoy, under Mr. Cocks; and, on receipt of the intelligence from Mooltan, he at once secured under a guard the person of Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, as a hostage, to influence those who wavered, as well as to frustrate attempts made by the Sikhs in arms to get possession of the Maharajah's person. The Resident had also caused the fortress of Goindghur to be occupied by British sepoy, and laid hands on the famous Koh-i-noor diamond, as a measure of precaution.

The occurrence in the Hazareh districts, which turns out to be connected with the Mooltan conspiracy, possesses all the importance attributed to it in the extract from the Delhi Gazette, inserted in our last Summary. Chuttoor Singh, Atareewalla, the leader of this insurrection, the father of Shere Singh, the Mooltan traitor, is a chief of influence, and was one of those who signed the treaty of 1846. At the head of a considerable force, he attacked our political agent, Capt. Abbott, and forced him and Lieut. Nicolson to fall back upon Husan Abdall. It appears that when Lieut. Nicolson, then in the fort of Attok, learned the defection of Chuttoor Singh, he applied for reinforcements to Major Lawrence, at Peshawur, who sent some Sikh troops with Lieut. Herbert. Lieut. Nicolson, considering that he could depend upon his Patan garrison, quitted Attok on the 1st of September; whereupon Chuttoor Singh, who had been advancing thither, retreated to Rawul Pindie, and afterwards took post at Kala Serai. Lieut. Nicolson, who was to the east of that place, attacked a detachment of Chuttoor Singh's men posted in the Margulla Pass; but the sirdar coming up to their relief with his whole force, after a long struggle, the lieutenant was compelled to retire, with the loss of six men killed and many wounded, himself and Colonel Bood Singh amongst the latter. Lieut. Nicolson, however, held the pass so as to prevent the passage of Chuttoor Singh. The last accounts stated that these officers hoped to be able to hold their ground until the arrival of reinforcements, which were on the march from Jullunder and from Peshawur.

The last-mentioned place is not in a satisfactory state. A conspiracy had been discovered amongst the Sikh troops to seize the guns, and Sultan Mahomed Khan, hitherto a firm ally, had shown signs of the general taint of treachery, having been detected in corresponding with the rebel sirdar. Major Lawrence, it is believed, relies upon the fidelity of the mass of the Sikh troops at Peshawur.

The universal spirit of rebellion had manifested itself at Noorpore and Puthan Kets; but the immediate objects of the insurgents would appear to be merely to take advantage of a time of disorder in order to plunder the country. Troops were promptly despatched to these disturbed districts under Major Fisher, who, coming up with a large party of the rebels, encamped outside the fort of Shahpore (a place of some strength), immediately attacked them, killed one of the leaders, put the rest to flight, and took possession of the fort. The chief of the rebels, named Ram Singh (described as hereditary visier of the Noorpore rajah), was attacked by Major Hodgson on the 19th of September, in a strong position he had taken up at Banaha, a few miles from Noorpore, and defeated with sixty killed and wounded—one-fourth of his force; with the rest he retreated into the territories of Maharajah Golab Singh.

* The reader is referred, for a guide in following the narrative of these operations, to a Map of the Western Provinces of Hindoostan, the Punjab, Bhawalpore, Rajpootana, Scinde, Kabool, &c., engraved by Mr. John Walker.

The movements of this personage are watched with much anxiety. The general opinion seems to be, that he is, likewise, deeply implicated in the Punjab plot; this, perhaps, may be a mere inference from the habitual duplicity of the man. Two of his regiments had joined the Hazareh rebels; but the Maharajah, it is stated, expressed his anger and regret at the occurrence, which, he alleged, he could not prevent.

The importance of the events already touched upon has compelled us to encroach upon the space allotted to the transactions in British India Proper, but they call for little notice. Our own territories enjoy tranquillity.

The Governor-General, according to the Calcutta journals, had fixed the 10th of October for his departure for the Upper Provinces. In the Supreme Court at that presidency, another discovery of peculation had been made on the part of one of the persons employed in the Master's office, and which took place during Mr. Grant's time. "Had it been discovered before his suspension," observes the Englishman, "it would have afforded the Chief Justice a better argument for that measure than any he has used in his judgment." The creditors of the Union Bank are invited to receive 25 per cent. of their claims, on condition of their agreeing to certain terms, which only bind them not to proceed against such shareholders as may have paid the full amount of their respective assessments. This offer is said to have been accepted by nearly all the creditors. The Bank Schedule of Assessment has been published; it amounts to upwards of £520,000—the individual assessments varying from £500 to £30,000! A criminal information, laid before the police magistrate at Calcutta, against Mr. J. S. B. Scott, broker to the Union Bank, by Mr. Ayrton, agent for the Commercial Bank of Bombay, in the matter of the fraudulent misappropriation of certain of its moneys intrusted to his charge, has failed,—the chief magistrate being of opinion there was not proof sufficient to send the case before a higher tribunal. It is said, however, that the matter will be brought before the Supreme Court for trial.

At Madras there is nothing to notice except the statement from Hyderabad, that the Resident, acting under instructions from the Supreme Government, has refused all interference.

Bombay contributes a few local incidents as the sister presidencies. At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the Oriental Bank, on the 22nd of September, the address read by the Chairman disclosed the amount of the Bank's losses during the late unexampled commercial crisis to be three and a half lacs of rupees; after deducting £22,400 held in reserve from previous profits, it is proposed to charge the amount at once to the reserved fund, and replace it by a reduction from current profit, at the rate of one per cent. on the capital each year, but so as not to reduce the dividend at any time below six per cent. per annum. A deficient supply of rain had considerably injured the crops in various parts of the country.

The rebellion in Ceylon had been entirely suppressed.

A collision with the Boers at the Cape of Good Hope has been attended with much bloodshed.

BENGAL.

OPERATIONS BEFORE MOOLTAN.

The intelligence from Mooltan given in our last overland summary came down to the 24th August. At this time the columns from Lahore by the Ravee and Chenab, and from Ferozepore by the Sutlej, had joined close to the scene of future operations. The battering-train was about to proceed from opposite Bahawalpore, where it had remained till the 28th, preparing for the march; two companies of H. M.'s 32nd, for which boats could not at first be procured, were on their way down the river. Escorts from the 11th irregular horse and 49th N. I. waited upon both detachments to protect their baggage. The 32nd had ninety sick on their arrival in camp, and had lost eighteen men on the way. On their arrival they speedily began to recover, and are now, like the other troops around Mooltan, in the highest health and spirits. The insurgents continued indefatigable in their exertions, and were every now and then able to seduce a few Sikhs from our side, and to capture considerable numbers of baggage-camels and bullocks. Moolraj tried to corrupt our sepoy by an offer of a shilling a day of pay to them, with leave of absence once every three years, and a suitable pension; and a couple of deserters did on one occasion cross over to him. On the 29th, the whole force moved forward a few hundred yards nearer the fort, and encamped in a line. Meanwhile the party engaged in cutting off the supplies of the watercourses from the Chenab were actively engaged some seventeen miles from Mooltan, protected by the steamers in the river, and by 1,000 Sikhs under Mallee Singh, who were defended by heavy guns and intrenchments. The river rapidly rose, and twice were the bunds of wood, stone, and mud they had thrown up, burst through, when, the waters once more subsiding, everything was complete. These works were placed under the charge of Mallee Singh, with a powerful detachment of Sikhs; they were defended by strong intrenchments and heavy guns. The working party was next directed to cut down jungle and brushwood for fascines and gabions, ten boat-loads of which were ordered to be sent down for the use of the besiegers.

On the 1st of September the general and staff, with a body of engineer officers, reconnoitred the fort, and Lieut. Edwards, with Lieut. Lake, Col. Cortlandt, and Eman-ood-deen, with nearly the whole of the original attacking force, were sent round to the opposite side to make a feigned attack, and distract the attention of the enemy. They proceeded to take possession of a garden, where a picket of the enemy, which fired on them and then retired, was stationed. The troops now drew up in line. The Dewan, hearing the firing, made immediate arrangements to reinforce the outposts. Some sharp skirmishing ensued, when the Mooltanies were driven back at all points, and obliged to seek shelter in a ravine close to the town. The Daoudpootras were at one time hardly pressed, but being reinforced, rapidly recovered their ground. The artillery force for a short time occupied the position they had forced, when, as evening drew on, the object of their mission having been accomplished, they returned to camp. The reconnoitring officers consisted of Gen. Whish, commanding the forces; Col. Franks, H.M.'s 10th; Col. Markham, H.M.'s 32nd; Major Napier, engineers, with a number of amateurs. The escorting party consisted of H.M.'s 10th, two companies of H.M.'s 32nd, wings of the 8th and 58th N.I., six guns, a troop of the 11th cavalry, and 18 troopers of Wheeler's horse. They made their way to the temple where Mr. Agnew and Lieut. Anderson were murdered, at about 800 yards from the ramparts. So effectually had the garrison been occupied by the skirmish on the opposite side, that it was some time before the reconnoitring party were observed. So soon as they were perceived, a number of guns were brought to bear on them; the practice was beautiful, and the shot fell close beside them. One struck the temple, another the wall, under the feet of Dr. Thorp, of the irregular horse, and passed just over the head of the general; another fell amongst the mappers, but did no harm. Major Napier ascended the minaret, and had a fine view of all the works, and of the ground immediately around. The fire becoming disagreeable, the party returned by a detour some 1,100 yards from the ramparts, the guns firing on them all the way, the distance being such that the shot nearly all fell short.

It was now apparent that the place was much stronger than has been imagined. The fort is about a mile, the city two miles, in circumference. The former is surrounded by a ditch 20 feet wide at bottom, and the defences are regularly constructed. The wall of the town joins that of the fort. The approaches are difficult, in consequence of the groves of large trees, the enclosed gardens, and mounds formed by old brick-kilns, which everywhere abound. The latter furnished excellent positions for the guns of the defenders, and will probably require to be taken in detail. The number of watercourses cutting the country in all directions was incredible—scarcely could a rider stir without falling in with some of them, indicating the extreme care bestowed on cultivation and the great capabilities of the country. It was free of marsh, and mostly well adapted for encamping-ground.

At this date, head-quarters were about two miles from the east corner of the fortress; Edwardes, Lake, and the Bahawalpore troops, about three-quarters of a mile south-east of the town, and the Sikhs under Shere Singh immediately to the west. The besieging force now stood pretty nearly as follows:—H. M.'s 10th from Lahore, and 32nd from Ferozepore, or in all about 2,000; the 8th, 49th, 51st, 52nd, and 72nd N.I., 3,700—5,700 in all; the 11th light cavalry, and 7th and 11th irregular horse. The artillery portion of the force consisted of the siege-train of 34 guns, two troops of horse and a company of foot artillery, with sappers and miners, and a full engineer corps—the whole British portion amounting nearly to 7,000 men. The strength of the force near Mooltan, before the arrival of that under Gen. Whish, seems to have stood as follows—but here we are far from being assured of the accuracy of our facts; the troops of the Bahawal Khan are estimated at 6,000 or 7,000; those accompanying Col. Cortlandt and Capt. Edwardes from the Derajat at from 4,000 to 5,000—probably 12,000 in all, with 20 guns, though some estimates bring them up to 10,000 before the junction of Sirdar Uttur Singh, with 6,000 men, ten guns, and two mortars, on the 14th of July. These may be guessed in all, therefore, at probably not under 23,000 men with thirty guns. Besides these, Shere Singh, the Durbar leader, sent out in May from Lahore, had 3,000 men under his command; so that the total number, regular and irregular, can scarcely fall much short of 32,000 men, with some 75 pieces of ordnance of one sort or another at their disposal. The strength of the enemy, latest accounts reckon at from 7,000 to 12,000, with fifty-two guns. From the determined attitude of defiance now assumed by him, with a force so overwhelming as that already enumerated before him, we are led to suspect the accuracy of much of the information formerly received in reference to his fears. It is sufficiently apparent, from the state of matters on both side, that both he and we are under the conviction that the friends of his cause throughout the Punjab are numerous and powerful.

On the morning of the 4th the siege-train arrived and took up its position in the open space reserved for it. It consisted of 34 pieces of heavy ordnance. It was accompanied by an escort of the 11th irregular horse and 49th N.I.; 280 bullock-carts and 3,500 camels were required to carry their stores, and such was the length of the train that the head of it had arrived at Mooltan before the other extremity had got out of camp, eight miles behind. On the 5th a grand parade of all the troops was ordered, and a royal salute was fired in honour of the occasion. This was returned by a continued discharge from the ramparts,—which proved harmless, the shot having fallen short. A proclamation was now made and distributed about the town, intimating that for the next twenty-four hours such of the inhabitants as desired it would find protection in camp; after this no one could be suffered to pass the gates. On the evening of the 6th the mortar batteries opened, and a large number of shells were thrown into the town, doing considerable injury and occasioning the utmost alarm. Rungram Singh, a kinsman and principal officer of the Dewan, had been detected communicating with the Lahore Durbar, and was in consequence thrown into prison by his master. Six 18-pounders and four 8-inch mortars were ordered to be advanced towards the town in the course of the night. The howitzers and mortars were to be put in position about 1,200 yards from the south-east angle of the town, and when the suburbs and intervening grounds were cleared of the enemy by their fire, the 18-pounders were to be moved up within 400 or 500 yards of the walls, and battering to be commenced. A breach was expected to be established in the course of the day, when the town was to be carried by assault; the storming party to consist of H. M.'s 32nd, the 49th and 51st N.I., to be accompanied as far as possible by M'Kenzie's horse artillery. It was expected that the storm would be attempted late in the afternoon of the 7th or at daybreak on the 8th.

Further consideration induced the general to alter the whole plan of his operations, and on consideration of the extreme determination of the enemy, the strength of the place, and the severity of the conflict likely to be carried on in the streets while the citadel continued in the hands of the insurgents, it was resolved to avoid so heavy and so superfluous a sacrifice of life as this was likely to occasion, and to proceed by regular approaches. It turned out afterwards that the enemy had improved their time, and very skilfully intrenched or fortified every tenable point betwixt our camp and the walls.

On the evening of the 6th, we had begun to throw shells into the town. The troops were ordered to assemble at 3 o'clock on the morning of the 7th, and the quartermasters of regiments to meet the quartermaster-general at daybreak to take up new ground for the force. Some time before daybreak the 72nd N.I., three guns under Capt. Anderson, and the greater part of the 11th irregular horse, proceeded to take possession of a hamlet and mound where a gun had been placed from which the enemy used to fire on our pickets. So soon as daylight allowed them, the 72nd threw out its skirmishers, and the artillery got into a position well sheltered from the guns both of the fort and city. After some sharp firing, in which the rifles played a conspicuous part, the enemy, at least five times as numerous as their assailants, were driven from their position. They took shelter in a village right under the guns of the city and fort; from this they were quickly driven at the bayonet's point by our troops,—nor did they slacken their speed till fairly within the town. The Dewan continued to play his guns unceasingly from the walls; the shots passed over the heads of the parties for whom they were intended, and came rolling down towards the camp. The sappers and miners continued incessantly at work in the trenches, 800 Europeans taking the place overnight of a corresponding number of sepoy kept at work throughout the day. On the morning of the 8th, the 52nd N.I. made an attack upon another outpost; they fired a heavy volley into the village, and then drove the enemy before them at the bayonet's point; scarcely any injury was sustained by them. Throughout the day it was held by three companies of the 52nd. On the following morning the 52nd was relieved by the 49th, and the post previously held by the three companies of the former was now occupied by a like number of the latter corps amounting to 120, under a captain and a subaltern. The enemy were in possession of a strong post about 100 yards in front—from this they maintained a dropping matchlock fire on us, so well directed that the moment a man showed himself he was sure to be hit. It afterwards appeared that they had here strongly intrenched themselves, and as soon as night drew on, and the European soldiers of the 10th began to excavate a new parallel, a furious and deadly fire was opened upon them. This they immediately returned, but with small effect, in consequence of the denseness of the thicket and the shelter around. The officer commanding in the trenches at length attacked the garden and village from which the enemy were annoying us. Some companies of the 72nd here joined in the fray, and at first the enemy were driven out of their cover. The post in the garden was a strong one; in the village one large house full of men was loopholed; and though the door was forced by Lieut. Richardson, the troops failed to effect an entrance. So hot meanwhile was the fire of the enemy that the European soldiers were compelled to seek shelter and ultimately to retire. The enemy pressed on them until they had fallen back on the entrenchments; they then moved off in line to re-occupy the garden from which they had at first been driven. The fire was not, it is said, surpassed in fury at Moodkee or Sobraon. Out of ninety men engaged, H. M.'s 10th had forty wounded—almost all of them severely; the 49th N.I. twenty-eight. Brig. Markham, Lieuts. Hollinsworth, Richardson, and Irwin were all wounded. The post assailed was about 600 yards from our outworks: the assault was boldly made, but the place was much too strong for capture. The detachment of the 49th was now strengthened by one company of H. M.'s 10th, and the rifle company of the 72nd. All night long, the enemy continued to cannonade them, but luckily without doing much mischief. At day-break on the 10th, some guns were got into position, and a tremendous discharge of round shot, grape, and shrapnell, was maintained for three hours—to all appearance, however, without effect; the enemy were well protected from danger, and seemed not to suffer from alarm. In the course of the forenoon a battery was got advanced to within a very short distance of the post, and a heavy fire recommenced, but without better results than that which had preceded.

During the whole of the 11th, a virtual armistice was maintained on both sides, but the insurgents were now aware of the strength and importance of their position, and of the effect of night attacks upon us, and began to establish a regular battery in the garden. An order was now issued by Gen. Whish, directing an attack to be made on them about seven o'clock on the morning of the 12th; the attacking force to consist of a troop of horse artillery, a squadron of cavalry from each of the three regiments, 12 companies of European and two regiments of Native Infantry, about 2,500 in all. About seven in the morning they began to prepare batteries near the building from which they had on the 9th repulsed us. They were attacked by one European and two native regiments. The Europeans, remembering how their comrades had been foiled, and how they had suffered fought like furies. They found 400 men in a narrow square, and shot or bayoneted every one of them. A mine had been blown up by them, and hundreds of scorched and shattered bodies were found piled over the ground. Sixty of those who had cut down Ensign Lloyd, when parleying with them, were destroyed by H. M.'s 10th—only five of the party escaping. The artillery destroyed 100 in one mass. A troop of horse artillery, a squadron of the 11th cavalry, the 7th and 11th irregular horse, five companies of H. M.'s 10th, with as many of H. M.'s 32nd, the 8th and 49th N.I., were the troops engaged. Col. Franks commanded one column of five companies of Europeans and a native corps; Col. Pattoun another—the whole under Brigadier Hervey. The success, though dearly purchased, was of much importance. It placed all the defensible points on this side the city in our hands, and enabled the battering guns to be advanced within 600 yards of the wall—a position they could not have attained by regular approaches in less than a week.

About two o'clock in the morning of the 13th a furious attack was made on Edwardes' camp, fortunately without effect. On the 14th the British troops carried the Hummund Ghurres, or outwork, having previously occupied a position close beside it. From this new post the batteries were supposed likely to be able to fire into the fort and town without impediment, and everything now seemed drawing to an auspicious close. It was hoped that breaching might be begun almost at once, and, considering that we were within almost point blank distance of the walls, it was supposed that in thirty or forty hours at the outside the assault might be commenced—when a sudden act of treachery on the part of our allies blighted all our prospects, and compelled us to raise the siege and convert the besieging army into one of observation. Shere Singh, a Sikh officer and nobleman of distinction, was despatched early in May by the Durbar, with a force of 3,000 men, with a view, it was said, of keeping the Moolraj in check. We know little of his proceedings until we find him in company with Col. Cortlandt and Lieut. Edwardes before Mooltan. It does not appear that he took any active share in military operations, and his fidelity was said to be held more than questionable. Early in July, his father, Chutter Singh, Governor in the Hazareh province at the other extremity of the Punjab, headed an insurrection still in progress, and said to have been promoted with a view of taking advantage of the absence of our troops from Lahore. About seven o'clock on the morning of the 14th, information was brought to Lieut. Edwardes that the Rajah Shere Singh had gone over to the enemy, taking with him above 5,000 Sikhs with twelve guns and howitzers, and eighty of the lighter pieces called zamboorucks. The movement appeared to have taken both parties equally by surprise; latterly, we had in some measure ceased to suspect, and so dubious was the Dewan of the trustworthiness of his new allies, that he for a time assigned them quarters beyond the walls, but under the batteries of the town. With so formidable a defection from our strength—so large an accession to that of the enemy—it became at once obvious that it would be imprudent for the present to continue the siege. We had already seen with what desperation our opponents were determined to resist us: and with 5,000 added to their numbers—men belonging to the old Sikh army, and who knew that now they fought with hakers round their neck and could not even look for quarter—it was vain to proceed until reinforcements arrived. Gen. Whish, therefore, had his camp removed to a safe distance from their batteries, while the guns and all the working parties were called in, and our force was transformed into an army of observation occupying a fortified camp. Our rear was annoyed but not much damaged by the enemy. We had been but a short time in our new position when it became evident that we should find ourselves much more agreeably situated a considerable way further from the town; we accordingly once more decamped, and on the 17th took up a post 18 miles from Mooltan in the direction of Bahawalpore. Particulars of this movement have not hitherto reached us further than this—that the material prepared for the siege, a large quantity of ammunition, and a month's supply of biscuits had fallen into the hands of the enemy. Animadversions on the arrangements of Gen. Whish are very severe; we are said to have permitted the enemy to strengthen himself at every point most strongly and elaborately in the suburbs, and then to have proceeded as if there were no obstruction in our way. A considerable portion of the troops which went over with Shere Singh seem disposed to quit Mooltan with as little delay as possible.

The moment the tidings of this unfortunate affair reached head-quarters, preparations began to be made to reinforce the besieging army. The Bombay Government was written to by express, and orders immediately issued for assembling an army of 9,000 men at Boree, under command of Brigadier Dundas, of H. M.'s rifles. Of these, 2,000 are Europeans. It is not likely they will be required to do more than perform the duties of an army of reserve or observation—perhaps they may be afterwards called on to occupy the city after the siege is over should the Bengal troops be needed elsewhere. They can hardly reach Mooltan before Christmas, and if the town is not ours early in November it will be strange indeed. At Ferozepore there are about 4,000, at Lahore about 8,000 men, and these will be reinforced immediately to 7,000 and 12,000 respectively. The siege train from Sukkur is said to have been ordered up; this, in addition to thirty-four pieces of heavy and as many of light ordnance, now in camp, will make the artillery arm of the force very powerful indeed. A force of 10,000 men, of which details have not as yet been supplied, is meanwhile being formed on the Lahore side, under the command of Gen. Gilbert; and this will, without loss of time, move on Mooltan, so that the army before the place will shortly be as strong as that which fought at Moodkee, or that with which in April, 1842, Gen. Pollock forced his way to Cabul. The Delhi Gazette states, that the army to be formed at Ferozepore will consist of five European regiments (5,000), with sixteen corps of N.I. (say 750 each) (12,000), and six regiments of cavalry (2,000), nine troops of horse artillery, and five field batteries (1,500), in all, above 29,000 men. Whether this includes the force now at Ferozepore, or whether the whole is meant for service, does not appear.

Our latest news from Mooltan comes down to the 18th, two days later than that received by the Delhi route, the intercourse in this direction appearing for the present to be interrupted. At present the accounts which reach us from many quarters bear the impress of such excessive exaggeration that we are compelled very carefully to sift them—omitting all that seem improbable or transparently untrue. We think the correctness of the greater part of what has been stated may be relied upon. We must caution the European reader against believing much more than has been set down. The statements of the alarmists may prove correct—we have hitherto for the most part found them to be the contrary, and at present most assuredly we entirely disbelieve them.

The following are the names of those who have been killed or wounded:—Killed—Lieut.-Col. R. T. R. Pattoun, and Quartermaster G. Taylor, H. M.'s 32nd foot; Major G. S. Montizambert, 10th foot; Ensign C. O. Lloyd, 8th N.I.; and Lieut. T. Cubitt, 49th N.I.—Wounded—Lieut.-Col. T. H. Franks, C. B., Capt. M. McGregor, Lieut. H. A. Hollingsworth, and J. S. Herbert, H. M.'s 10th foot; Lieut.-Col. F. Markham, Capt. A. L. Balfour, Lieut. C. T. King, J. Swinburne, and W. A. Birtwhistle, H. M.'s 32nd foot; Major Napier, and Lieut. Lake, Engineers; Lieut. Binney, horse-artillery; Lieut. E. C. Vibert, 11th cavalry; Lieut. W. Christopher, I.N., Indus Flotilla; Capt. F. T. Wroughton, Lieut. A. Turnbull, and H. R. Drew, and Ensign F. H. Kennedy, 8th N.I.; Lieut. J. F. Richardson, T. H. Plumer, and W. Irwin, 49th N.I.—Bombay Times, Oct. 3.

On the 1st September General Whish made a reconnoissance to the northward of the fortress of Mooltan—carrying his observations close up to the Eedgah, where Messrs. Anderson and Agnew were murdered. Lieut. Edwardes had been ordered to divert the attention of the enemy by an attack on the south of the town; and in carrying out these instructions, an engagement ensued with some of the Dewan's troops, in which Lieut. Edwardes and his men were signally victorious. At this time all the troops had arrived except the siege-train. On the 2nd and 3rd there was some firing between the troops under Lieut. Edwardes and a party of Moolraj's men, the latter of whom were stationed on an elevated spot called the Mound of Sheedes Lall. Next day the Dewan opened fire on the sappers and miners, and outlying pickets; but fortunately did little damage—his shots being fired at a great elevation. On the 4th, which day passed off pretty quietly, with the exception of a little skirmishing between Moolraj and General Cortlandt—the magnificent siege-train, consisting of thirty-four pieces of ordnance, arrived on the ground, and took up a position between the columns, in an interval left for the purpose, a regiment of N.I. being in the rear of the centre, and forming a rear guard. The force being now complete, no time was lost in proceeding to business; and accordingly, on the 5th all the troops were paraded, arms presented, a salute fired, and a proclamation issued, giving the Dewan twenty-four hours to surrender. A copy of this document is subjoined: it sadly wants the energy and emphasis which would have distinguished the composition of an Ellenborough or a Napier.

"PROCLAMATION."

"By Major-General Whish, C.B., commanding the army before Mooltan, addressed to the inhabitants and garrison thereof. I invite both to an unconditional surrender within twenty-four hours after the firing of a royal salute, at sunrise to-morrow (Sept. 5th), in honour of H. M. the Queen of Great Britain and her ally.

Maharajah Duleep Singh. I shall otherwise, in obedience to the orders of the Supreme Government of India, commence hostilities on a scale that must ensure early destruction to the rebel traitor and his adherents, who, having begun their resistance to lawful authority with a most cowardly act of treachery and murder, seek to uphold their unrighteous cause by an appeal to religion, which every one must know to be hypocrisy. If the town be surrendered to me as above suggested, private property will be respected, and the garrison of the fort will be permitted to withdraw unmolested on giving up Dewan Moolraj and his immediate associates, and laying down their arms at one of the eastern gates of the town and forts respectively. Given under my hand, this 4th day of September, 1848.

“(Signed) W. J. WHISK,
“Major-Gen. Comg.”

In answer to our salute, the Dewan fired (as in defiance) five or six 12lb. shots, which came pretty close to our men, but did not hit any of them. Lieut. Edwardes and General Cortland continued to fire all day.

On the 6th two guns from the siege train were made over to the Nawab of Bhowulpore, for the purpose of enabling him to operate on the mound of Sheedee Lall. A detachment of irregulars and two howitzers were also sent to Lieut. Edwardes. In the afternoon of the same day a few shells were thrown into the town, which had the effect of driving out a number of the inhabitants, who were anxious to effect their escape. The formal operations, however, did not commence till the 7th. Below is a brief description of Mooltan from the pen of a correspondent of the Delhi Gazette.

“The fort is about a mile, and the city two miles in circumference, and Moolraj is supposed to have 6,000 or 7,000 men and 52 guns of all kinds—the natives say he has many more men—and they are not unlikely to be correct. The fort has a ditch twenty feet wide at the bottom, and the defences are regular and formidable. The wall of the town joins that of the fort, but I am not certain whether it has a ditch also—the natives say it has. The approach, both to the town and fort, is difficult on account of the number of groves of large trees, enclosed gardens, water-cuts, and mounds formed by old brick-kilns, the latter affording very good positions for the enemy's guns, and probably they will have to be taken in detail. Mooltan itself is built on a mound of some height, and its appearance from a distance is striking, from the number of domes visible, denoting the shrines of several Mahomedan saints. The country round is flat and generally destitute of trees, the soil is rich and bears the marks of careful cultivation. The number of water-cuts is surprising, and you cannot take a gallop of a few hundred yards without coming across one.”

It was at first arranged to adopt a summary mode of attacking the town; but this, it was thought, would be attended with too great a sacrifice of life, and the plan, consequently, was abandoned. Another writer in the same paper, under date the 7th inst. says:—

“At last our plan of attack has been matured, and we are to make regular approaches against the suburbs and city. It was at first intended to seize the suburbs, and drive the enemy into the town with infantry and two small guns only; but Edwardes and Gen. Courtlandt, it is understood, so strongly represented the danger of this, that it was abandoned. The fact is, that the suburbs between us and the city are very extensive; the gardens, buildings, and brick-kilns are very strong; besides which, Moolraj has been hard at work intrenching along the front. There would have been a heavy loss forcing these. Now we shall clear our way with heavy guns, and drive the enemy in with our shells. A working party went out last night, and this morning a place called Ram Terat was taken by the 49th N.I., and Anderson's guns; also two howitzers advanced.”

The same correspondent speaks of the Dewan's force as consisting of about 2,500 cavalry, and 10,000 or 12,000 infantry and Goolundaz, with some 50 large, and half a dozen light guns. The attack and capture of Ram Tirhut are thus described:—

“This morning at gun-fire, the whole of the troops were under arms, and at 3 o'clock Capt. Anderson, with three of his guns, with the 72nd regt. N.I., and the greater part of the 11th Irregular Cavalry, moved off, before it was day-break, to take possession of a small village and mound, where the enemy had placed one gun, from which he used to play upon our pickets. As soon as the day broke, the 72nd Regt. threw out their skirmishers, and the artillery were in position, well sheltered from the guns of both the fort and city. After some rather sharp firing from the rifle company, the light company helping them, they drove the enemy from their position, and sent them flying like sheep before them into a small village, completely under cover from the fort, but they had not the pluck to make a stand for it, although I suppose at least five times their number. The rifle and light companies of 72nd regt. N.I. gave them a volley and drove them right into the city at the point of the bayonet. I fancy they will never stand against us in the open field, but they will now keep to the city and fort. The horse artillery gave them two or three rounds pretty well laid in, but we have not as yet heard how many the enemy have lost. Up to 12 o'clock we had not lost a man, and only one sepoy of the 72nd Regt. wounded in the hand.”

Meanwhile Lieut. Edwardes continued to keep up a sharp fire of shrapnell from his howitzers, though it could hardly be ascertained with what effect.

On the 8th two or three attacks were made by the Dewan's troops upon our working parties; the enemy, however, were repulsed with considerable loss, and little damage was sustained from their assaults. Some similar attacks, attended with similar results, appear to have been made in the early part of the 9th. Meanwhile the work progressed, and it was hoped that, in a short time, we should arrive near enough to the walls to be enabled to effect a breach. But all was not destined to go on so satisfactorily as we anticipated. On the night of the 9th a heavy loss was sustained. The enemy were annoying us from a garden and village about 100 yards in front of Ram Tirhut, and the officer commanding in the trenches consequently resolved on dislodging our assailants. A party of the 10th foot and a portion of the 49th N.I., were the troops employed. The assault was made boldly, but the place was found somewhat formidable, and our men suffered severely from the heavy matchlock fire with which the Sikhs greeted them. The garden was seized; but of the village possession could not be obtained. A writer from the scene of action says,—“There was a loopholed house crammed with men; the door was broken open by Lieut. Richardson, 49th N.I., in the most gallant manner, but the Europeans could not force an entrance, and were obliged to get under cover, and eventually retired; thirty-three men of the 10th foot wounded, almost all very severely, having been shot within a few yards of the house, and twenty-eight of the 49th N.I.”

On the 10th and 11th, but little appears to have been done. On the 12th a general assault was made by our troops on the outworks on the attacked side of the city and fort. Of this the best and most graphic account we have seen is to be found in the annexed letter from the Delhi Gazette of the 23rd ultimo:—

“Camp, before Mooltan, 13th Sept. 1848.

“Yesterday morning, a wing of H.M.'s 32nd regiment, and the 49th regiment, under Col. Pattoun, called the right column, and a wing of H.M.'s 10th foot, and the 8th regiment N.I., under Col. Franks, the whole under the command of Brigadier Hervey, were ordered out at daybreak to attack this same entrenchment. At about half-past seven o'clock, A.M., the two columns were drawn up in line. At the word ‘forward,’ we gave them one huzza, and advanced. When within fifty yards of their entrenchment, we lay down, and received their first volley in that position; immediately on receiving it, away we went, in very good line, regularly up to them before we gave them a volley; but that was of little avail, for the entrenchment was so strong that our musket-balls did not tell as we could have wished. However, many kissed mother earth, and those who survived the first volley did not get away (for we were all round them), but fought like maniacs, killed and wounded a good many of our men over the walls, and through the loopholes. It was no good; a strong party was left there to knock over any fellows who might try to escape, and away we went headlong at a second entrenchment farther on, where we were also greeted with a very warm reception. However, the Europeans very soon knocked in the windows and door-ways, and drawing up in front fired such volleys into them, that very few lived to tell the tale, and those who did get out, had not time to get far from the intrenchment, for we were all over the place, as we were obliged to be, to screen ourselves somewhat from the tremendous fire kept up from the enemy's parallels. After taking this second intrenchment, and setting fire to it, away we went at the enemy's trenches, but after advancing and firing into them for some time, and just as we had got close up to them, they brought out such a fire of guns, jinjals, zumbooraks, bows and arrows, &c. upon us, that we were obliged to fall back, en masse, upon the second intrenchment we had taken, and when there the men, both European and Native, mounted the walls determined that not a soul should escape. Certainly the massacre that took place within a tacekhana (enclosed on all sides by loopholed walls, and intrenched all round), was something awful to one who had never been on service before. At this intrenchment Lieut. Cubitt, of the 49th regt. N.I. was shot by a wounded man; after being sent up to camp he survived only about seven hours. Poor fellow! he will be a sad loss to his regiment, for a better soldier never breathed; he was universally beloved by his brother officers, and, indeed, I might say by all who knew him: at least nearly all, for where is the man who has not some enemy? After setting fire to this intrenched place in several places, we returned to the intrenchment we had first taken, and this we were obliged to get scaling ladders to take, as it was so strong. No sooner were the scaling ladders up than Colonel Pattoun was the first to ascend, and down he jumped, right amongst the enemy within, when, as a matter of course, he was instantly cut to pieces; for these fellows, immediately you attempt to close with them, draw their tulwars; and they know how to use them too, as several officers and men can say, for they have left their marks on many. Here, too, fell Lieut. Taylor, Qr. m. of H. M.'s 32nd foot, and Major Montizambert, of H. M.'s 10th foot, besides three or four other officers wounded.

But not a man escaped, for the doors, &c. were burst open, and an attack from above and below made, when every man within those walls fell a victim to the bayonets of both Europeans and Natives. After all was over I counted 108 dead bodies, lying about in all directions, and in the other intrenchment there must have been 200 dead bodies at the least, besides those who had fallen in the enemy's trenches from the effects of Mackenzie's guns and our musketry. Also those who had been massacred away on our left by Colonel Frank's column, and Bahawal Khan's men. There must have fallen in that action, on the enemy's side, at least 500 killed and wounded; and on ours, I should say about 60 at the utmost, but I cannot speak positively. There is one great mistake, however, made, and that is in not giving Bahawal Khan's men some distinguished difference of dress from the men in this part of the world, for if they do not so we shall lose many more men and officers than we otherwise should do. In this way, viz. Moolraj's men go strolling about, evidently to cut up the officers or Europeans, and join in among our Jack sepoy, and when asked who they are, they say "Bahawal Khan's" sepoy. Upon this they are allowed to go on unmolested, and they then turn upon the first European officer they come across, as was the case with poor Lloyd, of the 8th N.I., yesterday. Some Europeans were going to take a shot at a party of some thirty of these blackguards, when poor Lloyd saved their lives, telling the Europeans they were Bahawal Khan's men, whereupon they left them alone; but no sooner had they gone on, than these brutes turned upon poor Lloyd with their tulwars, and killed him on the spot. Fortunately some sepoy of the 49th regiment and 8th regiment N.I. saw what had happened, and bayoneted them to a man, so that they gained nothing by their bravery. After having taken possession of the enemy's intrenched outposts, we immediately set to, and intrenched ourselves there, leaving three Co.'s of H.M.'s 10th foot, and 8th regt. N.I. in the advance one, and some sepoy in the rear one, with four Co.'s of H.M.'s 32nd on our right flank, to prevent the enemy from coming round and attacking our flanks. In the evening four heavy guns were brought up to the advanced post, and placed in battery, and the 49th regt. N.I. placed in the trenches communicating from our first parallel. All was made snug for the night; however, at about seven o'clock, the enemy came out in force and made an attack upon the intrenchment, with a view of gaining possession of it again. They very soon found out that they could not take the place from us though we had taken it from them the same morning. During the time their infantry were attacking us in front, they brought a most awful fire upon us from the fort, city, and every place from which they could bring a gun to bear, but we held our own, and only had two men wounded.

"The action in the morning lasted about one hour and three quarters, and certainly during that time the volleys of muskets and matchlocks, not to mention the whizzing of cannon balls, and zumboracks balls, made us keep our eyes wide open for fear of being knocked over before we knew where we were.

On the 13th matters proceeded favourably. A heavy battery was completed at 600 yards from the Khoonee Boorj (or bloody bastion) of the town. Next day a place called the Hummund Ghurree was carried—a sharp fire being exchanged meanwhile between the British batteries and the guns of the Dewan posted on the Khoonee Boorj. But the British were now destined to sustain a sad reverse of fortune. Rajah Shere Singh, who was to the west of the fort at the head of 5,000 men, had been ordered to cause a diversion by an attack on his side; but to the mortification of our troops, he converted the move into a desertion, and went over with his followers to Dewan Moolraj! Sirdar Ittur Singh himself brought this unpleasant news to Lieut. Edwardes; and the only other Sirdar of consequence in Shere Singh's camp—namely, Shumshere Sing—managed to effect his escape to the British. The desertion of Shere Singh was considered of so much consequence that the operations were forthwith suspended, a council of war was held, and it was decided, with the full concurrence of the engineer officers, to raise the siege, and retire to some distance from the town. Thus, after our seven days' work, the defection of a man who from the first ought never to have been trusted, compelled us to withdraw from our position, and wait until reinforcements could be obtained. Later intelligence has been received to the effect that General Whish had "retired eighteen miles towards Bhawalpore," also that he had taken two of our engineer officers prisoners. These statements, however, require confirmation. The following is from the Delhi Gazette :—

"A letter from Bahawalpore says that General Whish had dismissed Uttar Singh, Shumshere Singh, and Kher Singh, from his camp, desiring them to return to Lahore via Bahawalpore. It was also his intention to dismiss Shaikh Emam-ood-deen and Dewan Jawahur Mull, retaining only the troops of General Cortlandt."

On the arrival of news of the raising of the siege, arrangements were made at Lahore and the upper provinces of India to send troops to the aid of General Whish. The following extracts from the Delhi Gazette and Mofussilite will show the nature and extent of these preparations :—

"Colonel Cureton was to leave Simlah immediately to resume command of a cavalry brigade, which is to take up a position at Kusoor, to consist of H.M.'s 3rd dragoons, two regts. light cavalry, and two regiments of irregulars, while Col. Eckford is appointed to the command of a brigade to move immediately on Mooltan. The 60th rifles have been ordered up from Kurrachee, as also the Sikh siege-train from Bukkur."

The 18th royal Irish to be ordered up from Calcutta, to take the place of H.M.'s 24th foot at Agra.

"Umballah.—We are all to move, 1st, 2nd, and 4th companies, 4th battalion, and 1st company, 6th battalion, to Ferozepore, to be joined at Umballah by the head-quarters, 2 brigade horse artillery, and No. 17 light field battery; the whole to be at Ferozepore by the 12th, where an army is to be formed, consisting of the following number of corps :—5 regiments European infantry, 16 N.I. 6 cavalry, 3 dragoons, 9 troops of horse artillery, and 5 light field batteries. "I fancy there will be plenty to do, as Chutter Sing has beaten Abbott and Nicolson."

"Lahore, Oct. 22.—I have nothing to tell now that has not appeared in your Extra, except that as soon as 10,000, of whom the 29th, 98th, and 2nd Europeans are to be part, can be collected, they are to move to Whish. General Gilbert is to command—poor Whish!"

On the receipt, in Scinde and Bombay, of expresses announcing the raising of the siege event, measures of military preparation were adopted by the authorities in those places. The Bombay force, which is to assemble at Roree, and to be under the command of Major General Auchmuty, C.B. will be composed as follows :—

THE PECUNIARY STATE OF THE ARMY IN INDIA.

The Directors of the Agra Bank have recently published in various local journals an abstract of the applications made to it for loans by the officers of the army, which were either sanctioned, or declined, during the twelve months ending in June last, and a classified abstract of the loan balances to the 30th June, 1848, due to the bank by the military and medical services of the three presidencies, including her Majesty's army. We are thus furnished with an opportunity of ascertaining with some degree of accuracy the influence which the north-western banks have exercised on the independence of the officers of the army, and the extent of pecuniary embarrassment under which they labour. The subject is one of deep and painful interest, and worthy of the serious consideration of those who preside over the adminiadministration of public affairs. The reader has not forgotten the address delivered to the military students at Addiscombe on a recent occasion, by the Chairman of the Court of Directors, Sir James Hogg, in which, among other valuable articles of advice, he very strenuously pressed on them the necessity of "keeping out of debt." The abstract of applications to which we have alluded will serve to show the honourable Court how far this advice was likely to be strengthened by the examples of self-restraint and frugality which would be presented to the young soldiers on their arrival in India. The number of applications for loans from ensigns to one bank alone in a single twelvemonth amounted to two hundred and thirty-five. Supposing the aggregate applications to the other four banks during this period to have been only three hundred, we shall have five hundred and thirty-five ensigns, out of a body of about nine hundred, anxious to begin their Indian career by involving themselves in debt. It is true that one hundred of the most extravagant applicants to the Agra Bank were refused; but the mere application demonstrates the lamentable state of feeling which prevails in the subordinate branch of the army, and the utter indifference to the blessings of independence which the officers contract on their arrival in India. What is the value of Sir James Hogg's advice, when exposed to such counteracting influences?

The schedules published by the Agra Bank give us as the total number of officers personally indebted to it, 1,274. The other four banks have a capital of a crore of rupees, or a million sterling, distributed also in loans, and we may therefore consider ourselves within the mark in assuming the number in bondage to them as exceeding, rather than falling short of, 3,000. The armies at the three presidencies, Queen's and Company's, comprise about 8,000 officers; and we have thus nearly one-half the number involved in debt, which bears interest, varying, insurance included, from twelve to fourteen per cent. But if we take into our calculation the sums advanced to regiments, of whom not fewer than five-and-thirty applied for and obtained loans from the Agra Bank in a single twelvemonth, to the extent of four lacs of rupees, it must be evident that more than one-half the members of the military service in India are under direct pecuniary obligation to these banks. The sum due by officers to the Agra Bank amounts to 30 lacs of rupees; and we may add 10 lacs more for regimental debts, making a sum of 40 lacs to one of these institutions. Of the crore of rupees distributed in loans by the other banks, we may reasonably assign 60 lacs to the army; which will give us one million sterling of debt under which the officers of the army of India are now groaning.

It is difficult to calculate the extent of misery which this system of pecuniary embarrassment entails on those who are unfortunately within its vortex. Those honourable feelings of independence which it is so desirable to encourage in all ranks, but more especially in the army, are at once, and too often for ever, extinguished in these melancholy circumstances. It is most distressing to witness the various shifts to which men of the most delicate sensibilities are reduced after they have signed the bond and parted with their freedom. Those who have been accustomed to assist at the Military Courts of Requests can alone fully comprehend the wretchedness to which the officer is subject after he has thus made an irrevocable assignment of pay to the banks when he is summoned before the court by the tradesmen, and called on for a monthly retrenchment of his allowances, and is constrained to confess that he is already under stoppages to such an extent as to have scarcely enough left him to maintain the appearance of a gentleman. Unfortunately, when an officer has once come under these obligations, he is rarely free from them during the rest of his life. Some few possess sufficient decision of character to make, and to keep, the resolution never to incur a second debt after the first has been cleared off, and the restricted expenditure which they were constrained to adopt from necessity, is subsequently continued from choice; and they are for the rest of their lives independent and happy. But in the great majority of cases one debt is no sooner cleared off than another is contracted. Debt unfortunately becomes a habit, which it is found impossible to shake off, and the chains are riveted for the whole period of the officer's Indian career. Let the directors of the Agra Bank confirm or contradict this assertion by giving us a statement of the relative number of officers who have been to its coffers for relief, and who, after having punctually discharged their obligation, have not returned for fresh loans.

It has been repeatedly asserted that the officers of the Bengal army have always been in debt since the battle of Plassey; that before the banks existed they had recourse to the great houses of business in Calcutta, who have long since gone into the Insolvent Court, or to the native money-lender, and that the position of the army generally has been easier since the Agra

Bank and kindred institutions were set up, than at any former period. To these assertions we are unable to give our assent. It is highly probable that many officers were more deeply indebted to the firms in Calcutta than they are allowed to be to the banks in the North-West, and in this respect those institutions have done great good by imposing a limit to extravagance; but we fear it will be found that at no period were there so few, comparatively speaking, in an independent position, and at no period was there so little shrinking from the inconveniences of debt. What clearer proof can be desired of the absence of this high feeling of independence than the fact, that one-eighth of the whole body of officers in the Indian army applied for loans, to the extent of thirty lacs of rupees to one bank alone, in the brief period of a twelvemonth—as though debt was the natural condition of the army? From those who have had the best opportunities of watching the progress of feelings and the course of events, for the last quarter of a century, we receive the assurance that there is generally perceptible a more expensive scale of living, and less restraint on indulgence than was formerly manifested, and this change is clearly to be traced to the facilities which have been created for obtaining loans. We cheerfully accord to the directors of the Agra Bank all the credit which is due to them, for the wisdom and prudence they have exercised in rejecting the application of the three hundred and forty-seven spendthrifts who applied to them last year for loans; and for keeping the officers, both civil and military, out of the hands of native sharpers, who reduced them to a state of absolute slavery, and fleeced them without remorse. In this respect the banks have done much individual good, and rendered no small service to the state. Since their establishment, we have ceased almost entirely to hear of the native officers of a district appointed by the native creditor of the judge, and the district itself delivered over to pillage.—Still it is impossible to consider the state of the army, while under such large obligations to the banks, as in any degree satisfactory. While the Chairman of the Court of Directors is reading the youngsters at Addiscombe a lecture on economy, nearly one-half the officers of the army are subject to the endless inconveniences of debt; indeed, including those who are responsible for the debts of regiments, we may say that fully half the army is directly in debt. Nor must it be forgotten that by the exaction of two sureties for every debtor, those who are not involved in debt on their own account, are under obligations for others, and we question whether it will be found that there is more than one man in ten who is not bound to these banks, either for himself or his friends. While, therefore, the banks have in some respects benefited the services, we cannot say that the public interests of society would suffer if they were to cease. Some twelve or fifteen hundred individuals would be obliged to content themselves with five, instead of ten, per cent. for their money, but double that number would be restrained from debt. There are no longer any great houses of business in Calcutta, ready to accommodate the officers with loans; and the native money-lender has become too circumspect, or too suspicious, to make them advances.—Friend of India.

STATE OF OUDE.

Since the cession, in 1801, of half the territories of the Nawab of Oude to the British Government, in commutation of a subsidy of seventy-six lacs annually, for the external defence of that province, the portion under the Company's rule has greatly increased in value and importance, while the reserved dominions of the Nawab have deteriorated in proportion. As the comparative fertility and other natural advantages of the two divisions are rather in favour of, than against, the reserved dominions, to what are we to attribute this difference? That it does not arise from the inability of so small a territory to meet the expenses of the native government with its king and small court, appears evident from the fact, that, with the exception of Ghazee-ood-deen Haider, the first king, and his immediate successor, every ruler of Oude, since the treaty above mentioned, has been able to accumulate an annual surplus in his treasury.

In what manner, then, does it happen that, with such circumstances in its favour, and such ample means at the disposal of its local government for the internal improvement of the country, we see it gradually getting worse, whole districts laid waste, jungles growing up where there were fertile fields, villages everywhere in ruins, and murders and robberies committed with impunity in open day? How is it that the channels of intercourse, both by land and river, are infested with plunderers, official or otherwise, levying their exactions with or without authority, so that trade and traffic are everywhere paralyzed, and the government powerless (unless by force) to insure protection?

To explain this extraordinary state of the Oude dominions, as contrasted with the wealth of its rulers, it must be remembered that, by the treaty of 1801, the British Government undertook to provide for the external defence of the territory reserved by the Nawab, and consequently relieved him from the necessity of keeping up a greater number of troops than was required for the internal police of the country. By a very liberal but erroneous interpretation of this treaty in favour of the Nawab, he also obtained the assistance of the Company's troops in coercing his refractory zemindars, and in enforcing payment of his revenues, and as by his arrangement with our government providing for the external defence of Oude, he had nothing to fear from the ill-will of these zemindars, and doubtless often exacted in money an equivalent for military services which he no longer required, it becomes very easy to understand how Saadut Ali should have been able to accumulate so large a surplus treasure as eighteen crores, after providing for all the expenses of his government.

The more expensive government of his successor Ghasee-ood-deen Haider, after he was raised to the dignity of a king, and the diminishing resources of the country from bad government, prevented, during his reign, any surplus revenue, and even caused a drain on the treasure which had been left to him by Saadut Ali; but as he had in this abundant means at his command for all the expenses of his government, the diminution of his yearly revenues attracted less attention than might have been the case under other circumstances, and it was only during the reign of his son, Nusseer-ood-deen Haider, and after he had, by a course of the most reckless extravagance, expended all the treasure which had been amassed by his grandfather Saadut Ali, that the deficiency in the direct revenues of Oude became so apparent.

As our Government had, during the latter years of the reign of Ghasee-ood-deen Haider, carefully abstained from interference in the internal management of the country, by affording the assistance of our troops, it became necessary for the Oude Government to increase the number of troops in their pay, for the purpose of enabling them to collect the revenue, and in consequence their expenses proportionately increased, as the influence which they had derived from the support of the British Government was withdrawn. Finding that they had no longer the troops of the British Government to contend with, the zemindars became more bold, and determined on resisting the exactions of the king; they also employed large numbers of men for their own defence, when occasion required, repaired their old forts, and supplied them with artillery.

During the reign of Nusseer-ood-deen Haider, and in consequence of the state of misrule which then existed, this opposition on the part of the zemindars became established and systematic; upwards of 100,000 men were thus employed by them in Oude, and either a resort to actual force, or at least a display of it, in collecting the public revenues, came to be the rule rather than the exception.

During the reign of Mahomed Ali Shah, some improvement was effected in revenue arrangements, and that monarch was enabled, by judicious reductions, again to make the current resources of his government to exceed its ordinary wants. This has also been the case, though in a less degree, under his late majesty Amjud Ali Shah, notwithstanding the manifest decline in the revenues of the country which has existed during his reign, and the necessity which a bad system of government has occasioned of keeping up an army of nearly 50,000 men for the internal duties of his kingdom. At the present time it is believed that the number of private retainers in the pay of the zemindars is not less than it was in the time of Nusseer-ood-deen Haider (100,000 men), and if we may judge from the cannonading which may be heard in Oude every day, and the frequency with which the officers of that state are called on service, they manage to afford the royal troops pretty constant employment! Under such a state of things, it is scarcely to be wondered at that the kingdom of Oude should present the lamentable picture it now does of lawlessness and misrule; on the contrary, the wonder is that, under such a system, the government should not only continue free from debt, but in the comparative prosperous state which has been above described.

To explain this apparent anomaly, it is necessary to point out that the same system of misrule which acts so unfavourably on the prosperity of the country itself, is admirably adapted for raising up, among a naturally warlike people, a body of men in every respect well suited for our regular military service, and that the consequence has been that the province of Oude has, for many years, furnished the best recruits for our Native army and been considered the nursery of our Indian sepoys.

When the habits of this class of people, when at a distance from their homes, are considered, their general carelessness and frugality, and their anxiety to save as much of their pay as possible to remit to their families, it will readily be believed that the sums of money thus yearly brought into Oude must form no inconsiderable amount; by far the greater number of these men are of the agricultural classes (to whom in Oude, the sword and the ploughshare come equally handy), and they are more or less interested, through their respective families, in the cultivation of the soil; if therefore happens, in very many cases, that a great portion of these savings is expended in the payment of revenue to the native government to enable them to retain in their possession the fields which their forefathers had held, although they may be unable to cultivate them.

In addition, however, to this source of revenue, derived from the families of men who are absent on service, must be included the whole class of our military pensioners in Oude, and the advantages which arise from the yearly influx of money into the country in the payment of interest on promissory notes of the Indian Government held by many subjects of the king, allowances to the Company's troops employed there, pensions to "waseelahdars," &c. Then we must also take into account the large sums of money which must be remitted, through private channels, by natives of Oude employed in different parts of India, and which, from necessary restrictions on the issue of drafts on the resident, must be considerable; the expenditure from the residency treasury alone falls very little short of fifty lacs of rupees per annum, all of which is, with a very trifling exception, spent in Oude, and adds directly to its resources.

Taking, therefore, all these circumstances into consideration, and, at the same time, remembering that to counterbalance this yearly influx into the Oude territories, there is no corresponding drain on its government in the shape of subsidy or otherwise, causing external expenditure, and that from the exactions upon merchandise, and the want of proper roads or other means of communication, comparatively little traffic exists, or demand for foreign produce, it becomes no very difficult matter to understand how, with a country rapidly falling to decay, and presenting such a picture of misrule, more than sufficient revenue may still be obtained, for many years to come, to meet the expenses of its government. Of the 110 lacs, or whatever the exact amount may be, which forms the yearly revenue of Oude at present, we firmly believe that not more than eighty are obtained from a legitimate source in a country which, at the period of the treaty in 1801, yielded nearly twice that sum.—Deli Gaz.

THE UNION BANK IN LIQUIDATION.

The regular monthly meeting of the shareholders of the Union Bank took place on Saturday evening.

The Chairman (Mr. T. C. Morton), as president of the Executive Committee, said that the Committee had drawn up no report, as in reality there was nothing to report upon, except the result of the private meeting held subsequently to the last regular monthly meeting. The result of this private meeting was, that it had been resolved, that a combined effort should be made to raise, by contributions amongst shareholders, a sufficient fund to enable the Executive Committee to declare a considerable dividend in October next, payable only to such creditors as shall concur in the proposed scheme of liquidation. Several shareholders had declared their readiness to contribute the amount of their assessment in full, attaching no other condition to this promise than that unless a fund equal to twenty per cent. of the aggregate liabilities of the Bank should be collected by the 1st of October, no dividend would be declared, and that the money contributed would, in that case, be returned to the respective contributors. If, on the other hand, the required amount should be contributed by the specified date, a dividend would be declared as soon as the Special Committee should be satisfied that the scheme had been sanctioned by such a number of creditors as would give a reasonable assurance to parties paying up their assessments, that they would be guaranteed from future molestation. Three gentlemen had been appointed a Special Committee, of whom two were not shareholders, and all were of known and undoubted integrity; and he was in hopes that, if undisturbed, they would be able successfully to carry on the work of liquidation under the above resolution. He regretted to mention that one large creditor of the Bank had determined to put his claim in suit against certain shareholders, without reference to their being consentient or dissentient to the scheme of liquidation, as the readiest mode of realizing his demands. It must be mentioned, that no petition of appeal had been filed against the claim of this particular creditor, as had been done in some other cases; and the reason was, that it was believed that the creditor would so far co-operate with the Executive Committee, that he would not, in the first instance, attack consenting parties. It now appeared to be his intention, however, to proceed against consentients as well as dissentients, and indeed the former made up the larger number of the parties selected. He did not intend to charge any breach of faith against the creditor who contemplated this step, but it could not be denied that this was as great a disappointment to the Executive Committee, as it must be a heavy blow to the efforts made towards a liquidation. But if this should be the only creditor who should have recourse to this mode of proceeding, the effect, he conceived, would not be calculated to neutralise altogether the endeavours that were being made to make up the affairs of this Bank without ruin or serious loss to shareholders. For his part, he still had hopes of success, and would still persist in his endeavours to attain it. Notwithstanding the exception that had been made in favour of the claim to which he had referred, the Bank was still at liberty to file a petition of appeal regarding it, and put forth its most vigorous efforts to resist any legal proceedings, so far as the interests of the constituents were concerned. If, on the other hand, a dividend of twenty per cent. should be declared in October next, and this creditor should become more reasonable then, and support the scheme, or, at all events, limit his legal proceedings to dissentients at first, the Executive Committee would adopt other tactics with him, and withdraw the petition of appeal. All that could be done to-day, however, was to adopt a resolution publicly giving effect to the principle involved in what had been approved and sanctioned by a considerable number of shareholders at the private meeting, and, also, to resolve that the regular monthly meetings should be superseded by special meetings, to be called whenever occasion might require.

The following resolution was accordingly put, and carried unanimously:—

“That the resolution passed at the private meeting of the shareholders be adopted by this meeting, and that all the shareholders of the Bank be earnestly exhorted to aid in carrying out the plan.”

The Chairman now mentioned to the meeting, that the secretary had received a letter from Mr. James Sutherland suggesting the publication of a schedule of creditors and the representatives of creditors, with the amounts due to them respectively. The suggestion was made by Mr. Sutherland with reference to a rumour that certain bill-holders were proceeding indiscriminately against the shareholders of the Bank. There appeared to be some difficulty, the Chairman said, in the way of publishing such a schedule, as the claims against the Bank were principally of a negotiable character, and the holders of the securities were varying from day to day; but it being said by Mr. Judge in reply, that it did not matter who were the actual holders of certain bills, but that it was of some importance that the amount of the bills outstanding should be made known, the Chairman consented to prepare the schedule as requested.

By the Union Bank scheme of liquidation the creditors are offered 25 per cent. down on condition of binding themselves not to take legal proceedings against any shareholder who shall have paid up the sum which he may have been assessed by the Creditors' Committee. The acceptance of these terms does not bind the parties to spare the negligent or recalcitrant shareholders, who are to be left to the tender mercies of the law. It is impossible to say whether the proposal is fair towards the shareholders till we see at what sums they are estimated; but admitting that the assessments are just and equitable, the proposition is without objection, and will, we think, be very generally assented to. The creditor may possibly think that he can do better for himself by adhering to the letter of the Union Bank Act, and selecting a fat shareholder for legal proceedings. But as the Bank Committee have publicly threatened to avail themselves of the law's delay to the utmost, and as there is no particular satisfaction in spending money in the Supreme Court, it is probable that the great majority of creditors will take the 25 per cent. offered, and trust to Providence for the rest of their money. It is for the creditors to examine whether the assessments now made include all the solvent shareholders or not, and if they do, whether the total amount will suffice to pay the claims in full or not. It is obvious if a smaller sum is raised by this scheme, and the sale of the Bank's assets, than will pay 16 annas in the rupee of all the claims on the Bank, that the creditors will be compromising their claims for less than is due to them; and we have heard that many were willing to do so, provided they are to be paid quickly.—Englishman, Sept. 19.

We understand that, with the exception of the Messrs. De Sousa, not a single creditor of the Bank has intimated any objection to the scheme of liquidation or the schedule of assessment; and the Executive Committee expect fully forty-five lacs out of the entire fifty lacs of claims to be sent in during the very first week. This is a cheering prospect for shareholders, and (we think) for creditors too; for the greater the unanimity amongst them, the better for all parties concerned.—Hurkaru, Sept. 21.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL, with letters from London to August 7, arrived in Calcutta September 14.

EMBEZZLEMENT.—The head clerk of the office of the Master in Equity has embezzled from Rs. 20,000 to Rs. 25,000 and bolted. Can this be wondered at?

THE COURT OF DIRECTORS has declined the prayer of the Anti-Hypothecation memorial sent from Calcutta.

PRINTED MEMORIALS.—A despatch extracted in the Gazette, embodies a prohibition from the Court of Directors of the practice of sending in printed memorials from the Company's military officers.

THE DALHOUSIE is to take ten lakhs of treasure to England from the Government.

MR. J. J. WARD, the Hurkaru hears, is appointed to officiate as joint magistrate at Malda, in the room of Mr. Kemp.

FROM FERROZPOOR we learn that more ordnance stores were under despatch by the river to Bahawalpoor. We regret much to hear that the loss of the right wing of H. M.'s 14th light dragoons, on their march from Ferrozpoor to Lahore, is stated to have been sixteen men and nineteen horses.—Delhi Gazette, Aug. 30.

A LAHORE LETTER, of August 30, states that Runjoor Singh, the vanquished hero of Aliwal, and afterwards, we believe, a judge at Lahore, was arrested a few days previously on a charge of disloyalty.

A LOODIANAH LETTER states that it was expected the 56th and 70th N.I. would proceed to Jullundur, and be replaced by corps from Umballah and Meerut.

A DARJEELING LETTER of Sept. 4 mentions that the previous Sunday, just as the blessing was given, the iron roof of a double verandah of the church fell down with an awful crash, and the wall on the entrance side was seen tottering, when the whole of the congregation rushed out, fortunately without any casualty; the fall was in consequence of the very heavy rain; one of the officers of the Depot was obliged to abandon the “Eagle's Nest,” it having been condemned by a committee of engineer officers; other houses were expected to fall down if the rains did not cease soon.

IN BEHAR sickness was very prevalent, as also in Tirhoot.

A LUCKNOW LETTER of Sept. 2nd mentions that the previous day was the festival of Eed; the little Prince Wahud Ali, attended by his younger brother, the general of the Oude forces, a child of seven or eight years of age, went to pray in the Mosque of Hosseinabad, at the tomb of Asuf-ood-Dowlah, his grandfather; he went in procession, accompanied by the vizier and all the nabobs the kingdom can boast of; the cholera was raging fearfully; at Cawnpore, fifty miles distant, the same epidemic is said to have carried off nearly a hundred men from the Bengal Fusiliers alone; fever was also very prevalent; there had been very little rain for the last fortnight, and the weather generally very warm.

THE BARK ‘JOHN WOOD,’ Capt. J. Rose, which left the Sandheads on the night of Sept. 7, got on shore on the north end of False Point, at half past nine o'clock on the following evening. She was bound to the Mauritius, and is not making much water.

THE HONOURABLE SAMUEL GARLING, Resident Counsellor at Penang, is on his way to Calcutta, with a view of obtaining his furlough to Europe. Mr. W. T. Lewis acts for him.

THE DUTCH ATTACK ON SELUR has been unfortunate.

A NUSSEERABAD LETTER, of Aug. 29, says, that the fate of Doongur Sing is now known; instead of hanging him up as an example to deter others from committing the like crimes, he has been handed over to the Rajah of Jodhpore, who will look after him, and be responsible to the government that he commits no more depredations.

AT BIRMINGHAM the season had been very unhealthy, owing to the scarcity of water in the tanks. The 14th regiment had on Sept. 9 upwards of forty-nine men in hospital, and a short time previously had nearly 100; the officers suffered as well as the men, no fever cases proved fatal.

WRACKS.—The Belleisle, of Glasgow, ran upon the Reef Head on the 12th Sept., and was totally lost: the crew, with the exception of the carpenter, were saved. The Singapore Free Press mentions the loss of the schooner Triumph, of London, on a coral reef near Macassar, and of the Greencock barque, Mary Louise, on Discovery's Western Bank, Corimara Passage. “Lot's Wife,” a well-known mass of rock, near Singapore, had suddenly disappeared. It is not said whether it is the identical “pillar of salt” that has thus found a “briny pillow.”

COMMISSARIAT DEPARTMENT.—We are happy to hear that Lieut. Simpson, of the 66th N. I., has been appointed to the commissariat department in the room of Capt. Mainwaring, lately deceased.—Mofussukite, Sept. 12.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE.—The government have given notice that, under instructions received from the Court of Directors, bills of exchange for repayment of advances made in India upon goods hypothecated to the East-India Company are from the 1st Nov. inst. to be drawn in triplicate at 6 months' sight, instead of 10 months' date.

TREASURE has been shipped, on private account, very freely of late.

THE HURKARU contains the following amusing story:—One of the Mysore princes, named Meahdee, sent for a pleader of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to consult with him upon some legal business. A variety of papers were produced, but after reading and commenting upon them, the pleader refused to give his opinion till he had received his fee. The prince immediately walked out of the room and held a consultation with another of the fraternity, but the pleader, resolved on obtaining his reward, walked off with the papers as a security. The retainers of the prince followed him and snatched them from his hands, and, it is said, struck him. An action for assault was brought on this ground against the prince, but the warrant was delayed from pressure of business.

FIRE ON BOARD THE "HADDINGTON."—On Tuesday, Sept. 19, the steam-ship Haddington narrowly escaped serious injury by fire. According to the standing orders of the commander, the spirit-room of the vessel is to be opened only once a day, and under the supervision of an officer who has charge of the key, and whose duty it is to see that no lights are introduced. But on the night in question the wine-room steward, wanting some brandy, opened the door of the spirit-room by means of the key of the room of which he had charge, and was drawing off a bottle of brandy when the spirit caught fire as it flowed from the cask, which exploded and enveloped the room in flames. The fire was, by dint of considerable exertion, got under before any great harm was done, but the unfortunate man who was the cause of it was so much scorched that he died in hospital a few hours after the accident.

COLONEL SLEEMAN.—We are glad to learn that Col. Sleeman, who intimated in the beginning of last year his desire to retire from his present appointment, has, in compliance with the strongly expressed wishes of government, consented to remain at Gwalior for the present. The appointment, it was understood, would, in the event of a vacancy, be conferred on a civilian. There is no truth whatever in the report of the gallant officer having been put in nomination for the Rajpootoonah States. We should be sorry indeed to hear of the occurrence of any circumstance likely at an early date to deprive us of the services of so valuable a man as the resident at Gwalior.—Bombay Times.

A LETTER from Meerut informs us that H. M.'s 9th lancers, and the 68th N. I., would probably be ordered up towards the frontier; and another from Agra, dated the 11th, intimates that the commissariat officer had "just received instructions to have carriage and supplies ready for all the troops, in the event of their services being required."—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 13.

STEAM-NAVIGATION TO MIRZAPORE.—The native subscribers to the Benares and Mirzapore Steam Company are much disappointed and disconcerted at the result of the first experiment. The Kashijee, a steamer built at Calcutta, made ten voyages to and from Benares and Mirzapore, and the produce was Rs. 443, whereas the outlay had been upwards of Rs. 60,000. After the first four or five voyages her gear of pumps got out of order, and the stroke of the engine was too short for working them, and in consequence of stoppages it was found necessary to have the vessel repaired, to the great discontent of the subscribers. The number of passengers who embarked in the vessel for the whole ten voyages were, from Benares, 136; Mirzapore, 220; and Chunar, 306. This is a singular result, for it is exactly in an inverse ratio as to the population of the three cities. Had the number of passengers in the two first been in the same proportion as the last three, the vessel would not have supplied the wants of the passengers. The Benares Recorder observes: "It is surprising to us that the natives are incapable of a sustained effort in public undertakings. The eagerness with which they came forward when the scheme of having a steam carrier of their own was proposed and adopted is now changed to apathy and discontent when they are in possession of the thing they wanted. The solution may be found in their prejudices. In reality, we have been told that some kind of dharma shubha among the orthodox of the city exerts an evil influence against the interest of the steamer. They say that it is an insidious agent to overturn the Brahminical faith and introduce Christianity. A more absurd objection could hardly have been invented, and we are unwilling to believe the story as anything else than a bitter squib let off by some inveterate joker; and yet we believe little was done by the shareholders as a body to procure passengers and freight, when it was obviously their interest to do so. Let us hope that their exertions will be stimulated when the vessel returns." The Friend of India, however, says: "We must confess that we have great confidence in the genuineness of the report. We have heard from more than one source that the strongest objections have been manifested by the inhabitants of the two cities to the innovation. It was an inroad on the conservatism of the Hindoo system. We believe that, except among a few enlightened natives of Calcutta, the same kind of prejudice would be manifested by the orthodox natives in and about that city. In all the improvements which modern science introduces into India, we shall have the same strength of native prejudices to contend with for a considerable time. A similar objection will, we fear, be manifested at first to the use of the rail, when it is established, and the returns from passengers will exhibit the lamentable strength of national and religious prejudices; but they will be found gradually to subside, and in a few years even the pious and exemplary brahmins will overcome their sacerdotal scruples, and ride on pilgrimage to the Holy City."

THE AGRA BANK has recently declared a dividend of 10 per cent., yet its shares are only at a premium of from Rs. 50 to Rs. 70, or from 10 to about 13 per cent.; while those of the Bank of Bengal, the last dividend of which was 8 per cent., are still, though they have much declined, at a premium of very nearly 50 per cent. What is the reason of this extraordinary difference in the value of the shares of these two Banks in the market? Is it because there is any fear of the actual solidity of the Agra Bank? Not at all; but simply because the other has a charter, and the amount of every man's risk being defined and limited, whatever mismanagement may occur he cannot be made liable for a pice beyond the loss of his shares; whereas, however flourishing any joint-stock association without that advantage may be, the fearful example of the Union Bank has shaken confidence in the continuance of such prosperity, and rendered it impossible for the shares in any such institution to rise to the rate they would bear with reference to the known condition of their affairs and the dividends declared, as in the case of the Agra Bank.—Hurkaru.

THE NATIVE ACTOR.—The Poornochoondroday is happy to learn that the first appearance of a native on the English stage has not been a complete failure. Doubts were, it is said, entertained in different quarters that Baboo Auddy would only make himself ridiculous by the attempt; but the fact has proved otherwise. The repeated indications of satisfaction and applause from hundreds of Europeans showed that the performance was not altogether unsuccessful. The Poornochoondroday, therefore, hopes that other natives will follow the example of the Baboo, and occasionally grace the boards of the theatre.

BABA APTEEAH.—A correspondent of the Mofussil at Gwalior writes that the notorious Sooba of Malwa, styled Baba Apteah, has been detected in some state intrigue by the Regent Mama Sahib, for which crime he has been ordered to be banished the Maharajah's territories as a felon.

EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY.—The encouragement now held out may be considered as a guarantee that Government will use the local experience which is obtained in the construction of this short line, both with regard to the engineering difficulties peculiar to India and the expense of the enterprise, for the purpose of continuing the line, either by the agency of the East-Indian Railway Company, or through its own officers. We cannot believe that it is the intention of Government to limit its assistance to the construction of sixty or seventy miles of rail, when the rail, to be of the slightest commercial utility, must extend to five hundred miles. We are confident that, if once commenced, it will not be allowed to stop short of Delhi. How invaluable would a line of rail to that city have proved during the last three months, during this inauspicious affair of Mooltan. How easily could the Governor-General have proceeded to the north-west and met the Commander-in-Chief, and discussed the relative propriety of crushing the rebellion as soon as it reared its head, or of allowing it to become mature, with the design of assembling a magnificent army in winter, at an enormous cost, to march under the personal command of the Commander-in-Chief, with all the pride, pomp, and circumstance of war!—Friend of India, Aug. 24.

COMBINATION.—The Englishman states that the steam-ferry, lately established by Mr. Calder, has been stopped by a combination of boatmen, who, jealous of the monopoly they have enjoyed from time immemorial, planted their boats at the ghats and prevented the landing of the passengers.

INDIAN ARISTOCRACY.—A native correspondent of the Englishman makes the following rather bold assertion: "The young native aristocracy of Calcutta will be generally found to preserve the most strict regard for the institutions of their forefathers."

CHANGES IN THE COMPLEMENT OF THE NATIVE ARMY.—We mentioned recently that orders had been issued to all native infantry corps to recruit up to 800 privates, or, if still above that number, to maintain their complement. We have since had the curiosity to ascertain the various changes which have been made in the complement of this arm of the service, and it appears that, within the last twenty-two years, the complement of the native regiments of the Bengal army has been altered no less than thirteen different times, and that eleven of these alterations have occurred within the last ten years. We presume that no civilized army in the world ever underwent such an extraordinary number of mutations. We shall be curious to learn whether the present call for recruits is responded to by the population of those districts which have hitherto supplied the army with soldiers; for we have heard that a very reasonable mistrust as to the permanent nature of the present increase has been found to prevail, and that the example of many hundreds of starving soldiers, who took their discharge with gratuities on the occasion of the last reduction, seems likely to deter a very numerous class from joining a service so apparently precarious.—Englishman.

EXEMPTION OF PENSIONS FROM SEIZURE.—A Draft Act has been read before the Legislative Council, extending the operation of the law which exempts military pensions and other superannuation allowances from seizure under process of law. In the operation of the Act are included all officers,—soldiers, sailors, or artists,—of the army or navy, or other parties, who may now receive retired allowances from Government,—the pensions or allowances, or by whatever name they may be called, being incapable of mortgage, and exempt from seizure.

FREE CHURCH.—The ceremony of opening the Free Church of Scotland took place at Calcutta on the morning of the 13th August, when the Rev. Mr. M. Kall delivered the opening address. The Hurkaru says of the new building, "The appearance of the church is very beautiful in the interior, and the effect is increased by bronzed lustres and treble branched wall-lights. It surpasses the bishop's church in grandeur and beauty."

COURT MARTIAL.

ENSIGN EDWARD JOHN MATHIAS, H.M.'S 80TH FOOT.

Head-Quarters, Simla, September 9, 1848.—At a general court martial assembled at Dinapore, on Wednesday, August 2, 1848, Ens. E. J. Mathias, H.M.'s 80th foot, was tried on the following charges, viz.:—

1st. For having, at Dinapore, on or about June 28th, 1848, repeatedly struck, and otherwise ill treated, a native in his employ, named "Kadir Buki sh."

2nd. For having, at Dinapore, on the evening of June 28, 1848, appeared in public in a state of intoxication; such conduct being unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and in direct violation of his written promise to Lieut.-col. T. Bunbury, C.B., 80th reg., his commanding officer, bearing date April 25, 1848.

Additional Charge.—For highly unbecoming conduct, in having, at Dinapore, on or about July 21, 1848, obstructed and opposed a party of the police of Patna and Dinapore, sent to execute a writ from the civil court at Patna upon the property of Lieut. Kingsley,

H.M.'s 80th reg., and for having, then and there, threatened and offered violence to, and abused Saiyud Koorsheed Ullee, nazir of the civil court of Patna, and maltreated Shabbaz Khan, chokedar of the sudder bazaar of Dinapore, and some of the chopprassies, when in the performance of that duty.

Finding.—The first charge, "guilty."

On the second charge, "guilty."

On the additional charge, "guilty."

Sentence.—To be cashiered.

Revised Sentence.—To be severely reprimanded in such manner as his Excellency the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief may be pleased to direct, and in addition, to loss of regimental rank, by being placed at the bottom of the list of ensigns in H. M.'s 80th regt., to which he belongs.

Confirmed,

(Signed) GOUGH, General Commander-in-Chief,
East Indies.

Head-Quarters, Simla, September 6, 1848.

Recommendation of the Court (on Original Sentence).—The Court having performed the painful duty of awarding punishment in strict conformity to an article of war, beg leave unanimously to recommend the case of Ensign Mathias to the merciful consideration of his Excellency the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief, on the ground of his youth.

Remarks by the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief.—The Court having passed their original sentence under an erroneous impression that they had no alternative, a revision was directed that the Court might pass such sentence as they might consider adequate. The Commander-in-Chief has confirmed, though he cannot approve, the revised sentence. The officer commanding the Dinapore division will severely reprimand Ensign Mathias, and admonish him against a repetition of the serious misconduct of which he has been convicted. Ensign Mathias will then be released from arrest, and return to his duty as junior ensign in H. M.'s 80th foot.

MISCELLANEOUS.

EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY.—A letter appears in the Athenæum of August 17, under the signature of "a Holder of 200 shares," complaining of the directors of the East Indian Railway Company having incurred unnecessary and extravagant liabilities to Mr. Macdonald Stephenson, without the sanction of the Indian shareholders, and disputing the right of the body of English shareholders to bind the shareholders in India. The letter concludes with the ominous assertion: "I say distinctly that I shall submit to no loss at the hand of the London directors and shareholders, from which law can relieve me."

TORTURES have been extensively, and for a long time inflicted by various officers of the Travancore government; and yet it is only at this late day, that an attempt has been made by the controlling authorities to check the practice. The conclusion therefore is unavoidable, either that they knew it without checking it, or that they knew it not. We adopt the latter, and have reason to believe that the British resident has but lately been convinced that tortures are practised, and that he has brought it to the notice of the Madras government, not specially as the enormity deserves, but casually in remarks in his diary. The Madras government took a more serious, and therefore correct view, and wrote to the Travancore government on the subject.—Athenæum.

The following list of the modes of torture is given by a correspondent of the paper:—1st. Beating, varied both by the instrument, and by the part of the body to which it is applied,—specially divisible into two kinds, that on the back or limbs to elicit desired statements; and that on the mouth to suppress unwelcome revelations. 2nd. Racking the arms by straining backwards with cords tightened with increasing severity. 3rd. While the arms are thus tied, bearing down the neck by a heavy weight pressing on the nape. 4th. In several ways wrenching various parts of the body, even to the dislocation of bones. 5th. Using an instrument called the kitti, formed by two sticks connected by a loose joint at one end which serves as a fulcrum; the two sticks being levers between which the fingers, &c., are squeezed,—the degree of tightness is not limited; but increased according to the nature of the case, and the will of the torturer. 6th. Whipping with a species of stinging nettle. 7th. Tying two women together by their long hair, and suspending a weight on that hair between them. 8th. Using a long iron rod with rings which slide on it, each one fitted to contain a leg; when these are filled, pulling the rod with violence through a hole in the wall or wooden frame by one end, so that all the legs are jammed up together at the other end. 9th. Suspending by the hands on a pole for a lengthened time. It is not needful to tie the hands together; they can be constituted self suspenders in this manner: while holding the hands in front with the palms inward, towards the chest, and the fingers extended, turn them inward, and then lock them one in the other, so that the ends of the fingers on one hand rest in the palm of the other; then a pole passed across them inside will suspend the body, its pressure preventing the fingers from slipping out. 10th. While suspended in this manner, lighting a fire beneath the victim. 11th. Adding to his sufferings by throwing the strongest red pepper on the fire, so that its severely pungent fumes assails his eyes, nose, and throat. 12th. Shutting up in a close room, and there smoking the sufferer. 13th. Applying hot pincers, and that to parts of the body which cannot be mentioned. 14th. Enclosing a number of pinching beetles in half a cocoa-nut shell, and tying it on the navel, so that the horrid sensation of digging into the bowels is inflicted. 15th. Rubbing the arm from the wrist to the elbow with salt and sand, then applying longitudinally a number of cekil, or ribs of the cocoa-nut leaf, and tying them on firmly; then forcibly drawing them out one by one, the finer end first, so that each one by its own increasing thickness, and aided by the salt underneath, cuts burningly into the flesh and leaves its smarting sting.

COUG VENCATAROYALOO.—The documents, which led to the summary dismissal of Vencataroyaloo from the public service, belonged to the revenue department of the government office, with which Vencataroyaloo had no concern, he being employed in the petition department during his connection with that office. He was merely a translator, and consequently he could have no access to the records of any department. There is another remarkable feature connected with this case, and that is, that the documents in question appeared in the columns of the Crescent long after he left the government office, and we are therefore at a loss to divine how the offence could be fixed upon him. The affair partakes altogether of mystery, which nothing but time can unfold. Vencataroyaloo does not know the names of his accusers, nor the nature of the evidence given against him. He applied to Government to furnish him with these necessary papers, but was refused, or rather answered by a notification, published in the Fort St. George Gazette, proscribing his name, and declaring him unworthy of confidence—a proceeding utterly unjustifiable on any pretext.—Circulator, Aug. 18.

CASTE QUARRELS.—A correspondent at Pondicherry, writing to the Athenæum, says:—"Towards the end of July, some Pariah people, who wore slippers, were quietly passing along the streets, when they were attacked and unmercifully cudgelled by a band of Malabar miscreants, who pretended that slippers were a luxury interdicted to outcasts by Mahmool. The sufferers went to complain to the police authorities, but, instead of the redress they expected, they were imprisoned. Exasperated at what appeared to them a denial of justice, they were no sooner released than they armed themselves with sticks, and, in their turn, drubbed their Malabar assailants; the consequence was that they were imprisoned a second time. Meanwhile, the avengers of Mahmool came to the resolution of chastising the whole Pariah community for the alleged sins of some of its members; therefore, on the 21st July, they set fire to a Pariah village near Pondicherry; a woman was murdered, and two children perished in the flames."—This is probably the émende referred to in our last.

SALE OF INDIAN OFFICERS.—It is a melancholy thing to know, that the Hon. Company sells its old officers off at auction, without having the decency even to announce that there are reserved biddings for the lots. In the Madras Commercial Advertiser of yesterday, it is announced that Messrs. Waller and Co. will sell at their periodical auction, on Wednesday next, amongst a quantity of miscellaneous articles, "The property of an officer proceeding to sea, 35 English and Bengal sheep; a fine English ram; an English boar and sow, with a litter; Brigadier J. Ketchen, and several other gentlemen." In these dull times we wonder what a second-hand brigadier will fetch, and what will be the average price of the lot of gentlemen. Will they go at their own price? if so, the auctioneer's commission will be worth fingering.—Athenæum.

A DETACHMENT OF H. M.'s 25th REGIMENT, under the command of Capt. R. H. Lindsell, of that corps, arrived from Trincomalee on board M. H.'s steamer Fury, on Saturday evening last, September 16.

SPECIE.—The Windsor and Carnatic have each been taken up by the government for the conveyance to England of ten lacs of rupees.

SECUNDERABAD.—The Spectator informs us that the Right Rev. Dr. D. Murphy, Roman Catholic Bishop of Philadelphia, the Rev. Mr. McSweeney, with his brother, and Rev. Mr. Doyle, had been ordered by Government to be expelled the Secunderabad cantonment after they had received twenty-four hours' notice to quit. The cause of this somewhat extreme measure is stated to have been the part the reverend gentlemen took in exciting the late outrageous conduct of a number of the Catholic soldiers of H.M.'s 84th foot.

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL, with letters from London to August 24, reached Bombay by the Atalanta on the evening of Sept. 27.

THE LIBEL CASE.—The case of Ardaseer Dhunjeesha v. MacKenna came on for trial yesterday morning before the Supreme Court (both judges presiding), when, after a hearing of something less than two hours, a verdict was given for the plaintiff, with Rs. 1,000 damages. The plaint alleged two libels, one being the famous letter of "Alexander," in which Mr. Stewart was charged with drunkenness, and Ardaseer with a variety of crimes too numerous to mention; and the other a communication signed "Alexander Redivivus," which appeared in the Gentleman's Gazette of the 20th May last, and which likewise contained a series of most slanderous attacks directed chiefly against Ardaseer. The defendant had relinquished all idea of attempting to justify, and had put in a plea of "Not Guilty," his object being simply to appeal to the Court for a reduction of damages. Amongst the witnesses examined were Mr. Gregor Grant, of the civil service, and Mr. John Connon, secretary to the Chamber of Commerce,—the latter a writer in the Gentleman. Mr. Howard's speech for the plaintiff was brief, but energetic and to the point: that of Mr. Crawford, for the defence, occupied a considerable time, and was mainly directed to establishing, first, that his client, though he had displayed neither judgment nor discretion, was actuated by an honest motive in publishing the libels,—and secondly, that being in poor pecuniary circumstances, heavy damages would ruin him, and completely swamp a very tottering concern. This earnest appeal to the compassion of their lordships evidently had some weight, and although a pretty strong suspicion existed that there were parties behind the scenes, prepared to pay any expenses Mr. MacKenna might incur, and any penalty that might be imposed on him, the sum of Rs. 1,000 was considered as being sufficient, under the circumstances of the case. The Chief Justice made a point of stating, distinctly and emphatically, that in coming forward as plaintiff in a civil action, and offering Mr. MacKenna the opportunity of proving his charges, if able to do so, Ardaseer had done all that could be expected of him, and that he would go forth without the slightest stain upon his character, while the accusations against him would henceforth be regarded as entirely false. We shall endeavour to supply a full report of the trial to-morrow: in consequence of the departure of the mail we are unable to give it to-day. It should be remarked that both the counsel for the defendant, and the learned Chief Justice, took far too favourable a view of Mr. MacKenna's conduct, in supposing that, in publishing the letter signed "Alexander," he acted under the belief that Mr. Hutt's report was other than the very document which led to Ardaseer's trial, and in despite and disproof of which he was "fully and honourably" acquitted. Mr. MacKenna knew precisely what he was about; the facts of the discussion regarding Surat affairs were patent to all; and had the time and place suited for such an inquiry, it might have been fully proved, from the Gentleman's own columns, that he was quite familiar with the leading features of the question. Not a word was said as to the notorious author of the libellous letters; and we almost regretted that the fire of Mr. Howard's eloquence could not be brought to bear on the individual who, after publishing the most scandalous and disgraceful blackguardisms, and giving out that he would prove his charges, if a trial could be brought about, has shrunk, like a coward, from the self-selected ordeal, and left his poor deluded tool to bear the shame and humiliation of a pitiable defeat. The party, however, is known, and he will doubtless take the expressions of indignation and disgust which are to be found in the proceedings, and apply them to himself. The law may have been cheated by his refusal to avow himself; but society has its revenge.—Telegraph and Courier, August 31.

SIR R. OLIVER.—Some of the friends of the late Sir Robert Oliver have, we understand, resolved to subscribe for the erection of a monument to his memory.

SCINDE.—Recent letters from Upper Scinde convey to us the gratifying assurance that the border country continues in a state of profound tranquillity, and this state of affairs promises to be permanent. Occasionally, a marauder ventures from his mountain fastness in the hope of laying his hands upon any stray cattle that may incautiously be left within his reach; but as such occurrences are the general rule in almost all our districts bordering upon foreign territory, it cannot be held to argue an unusual insecurity of property.—Delhi Gazette, Aug. 26.

The Bombay lawyers are rejoicing in the prospect of a very lively business in the approaching term. One attorney alone has upwards of sixty cases, all in some way connected with the recent opium transactions.

GRIEVANCES.—The Gentleman's Gazette has heard of a printed circular which is handed about amongst the engineers of a naval establishment connected with this port, inviting a general meeting of their confraternity, to consider certain grievances of which they complain.

STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—It will no doubt be gratifying to the shareholders of the Steam Navigation Company to learn that Government has granted the Company a contract for four years for the conveyance of the mails between Bombay and Kurrachee.—Telegraph, Sept. 15.

VISCOUNT FALKLAND, it is understood, will not proceed to Mahabuleshwur this season, but return to Bombay in the course of a few weeks.—Ibid.

INDIAN NAVY.—A commission as commodore of the first class has been conferred upon Captain Hawkins, the acting superintendent of the Indian Navy, and he has hoisted the "broad pennant" about which so much discussion took place some time ago, and which has recently been authorized by a special warrant from the Lords of the Admiralty.—Ibid.

TRANSLATORS TO THE SUPREME COURT.—The Gentleman's Gazette understands that some important alterations are about to be effected in the offices of translators to the Supreme Court, in consequence of the anticipated resignation of Mr. R. X. Murphy, who has applied for the pension due to him for a quarter of a century spent in the service of the Company.

DR. WILSON, the author of the "Land of the Bible," and the polemical work against the Parsees, had arrived at Aurungabad, on his way to view the Caves of Ellora, accompanied by an Abyssinian prince and officer of engineers.

THE TRADE OF BOMBAY appears to have suffered much during the past year. The imports, during the past five months of 1848, as compared with those of 1847, had decreased Rs. 20,23,731, and the exports, Rs. 61,91,213. It is curious to notice the sources of these deficiencies. They originate in the two great trades in which Bombay is engaged. Thus, more than the entire deficiency on all imports for these five months is seen on those from Great Britain alone, and more than the entire deficiency on all exports occurs in those to China itself.

PERSIAN GULF.—The following is extracted from a letter, dated Bagdad, July 15th last:—"The heat here this year day and night, is the most fearful ever known. The old pasha has shown his teeth lately, and has been behaving very badly to us, so we have cut him; he will, of course, get the worst of it; he tried the same game when pasha of Damascus, and got turned out in consequence. In Persia every thing is going wrong. The grand Turkish army for this place has dwindled by the way down to almost nothing; they are expected daily, and are said not to exceed 3,000 instead of 20,000, which were reported to have left Constantinople.—Gentleman's Gazette, Sept. 5.

SCULPTURES.—The sloop-of-war Clive has brought to Bombay from the Persian Gulf a large cargo of sculptures collected by Major Rawlinson, and sent down to the mouth of the Euphrates for shipment. There is still a very large collection of relics at the mouth of the Euphrates, some of which, as mentioned by us some eight months since, are much too large for transport. Unfortunately scarcely any of the sculptures are in marble, and the gypsum, from which nearly all are made, though durable enough if kept dry, is partially soluble in water, and wears rapidly away in rain or heavy dew. These relics are designed for the British Museum.

CAPTAIN ROSS has felt compelled, by the state of his health, to resign the office of President of the Bombay Geographical Society, the duties of which he has for ten years so successfully and ably discharged.

ANNEXATION OF SCINDE TO BOMBAY.—We understand that intelligence has been received intimating the intention of the Court of Directors in reference to Scinde, and that the arrangements in contemplation have been adopted at the suggestion of Sir George Clerk, our late governor. It is to be annexed without delay to the Bombay Presidency, and hereafter to become a divisional command, with three brigade commands, one at Kurrachee, one at Hyderabad, and a third at Sukkur; one of these is to be a first, and the other two second class brigades. Along with the military arrangements, the offices of judges, collectors, &c., will, we believe, be transferred from the military to the civil service.—Bombay Times, Sept. 9.

BYCULLAH SCHOOLS.—The Bombay Times announces a donation of Rs. 5,000 to the Bycullah schools from the same person who recently presented a like sum to the Laurence Asylum. No names have been mentioned, but Lieut.-Col. Outram is fixed upon as the donor.

THE LATE COLONEL SUTHERLAND.—It has, we learn, been determined to have a monument erected by public subscription to the memory of the late Colonel Sutherland.

THE NAWAUBSHIP OF SURAT.—An act, relative to the long pending questions connected with the administration of the estate of the late Nawaub of Surat, has been passed by the legislative council. It enacts that, No writ or process shall be sued or prosecuted against the person, goods, or property of the widows and family of the late Nawaub, unless with the consent of the Governor of Bombay in council first obtained, and the Governor of Bombay in council is empowered to act in the administration of the property left by the late Nawaub of Surat, in regard to the settlement and payment of the debts and claims standing against his estate at the time of his death, and to make distribution of the remaining property among his family.

MAHRATTA TRANSLATION SOCIETY.—This society, formed for the translation into Mahratta of standard works for native use, to be supported by donations and subscriptions, proposes advertising for translations; and they hope that, by the sale of these, and by the contributions they may receive from the friends of the scheme, they will be able to go on regularly issuing annually a very considerable number of books from the press such as the native reader may take pleasure in studying. Poona is to be the head-quarters of the society, and from the talent and energy of its originators, and the importance of the objects it has in view, we see no reason to doubt of its success.—Bombay Times, Sept. 6.

Mr. Flynn, the interpreter to the Supreme Court, observes:—“Since the higher classes of the native community, then, are so deficient in what Europeans conceive to be the needful knowledge of rational beings, it is not wonderful that one should daily meet Hindoos of the middle ranks displaying the keenest intellect in matters of business and commercial speculation, yet professing the most anti-copernican principles in astronomy, and implicitly believing that the world still rests on one of the heads of that fabulous monster the Hindoo hydra Shéshu. Nor is it less striking to find others again, who betray the crudest notions of geography, who, although perhaps actively engaged for half their lives in shipping consignments of cotton to the emporium of Liverpool, would be quite incapable of answering the simple question as to whether England is an island or a continent; and who know nothing whatever of the commonest and most prominent facts of European history.”

THE RELIEFS.—In addition to the items regarding the reliefs given in our last, we learn that the 24th N. I. are to be stationed at Kurrachee, the 26th at Shikarpore, and the 29th at Sukkur. The regiments whose places they are to take are the 4th rifles, and the 3rd and 11th N. I.—Times, Sept. 16.

DR. BURNES we observe leaves Poona this morning with the view of proceeding to Bombay and taking his place at the Medical Board in room of Dr. McLennan. He takes up his residence for the present we believe with Major Holland, Mazagon. He will not fail to receive a hearty welcome from his old friends and brethren, medical and masonic.—Ibid.

THE LATE COMMANDER H. C. BOULDERSON, I.N.—It is with regret we learn of the death of Commander H. C. Boulderson, I.N., which occurred at Madras on the 8th instant. Commander Boulderson was at one time deputy or assistant to the superintendent of the Indian navy before the appointment was raised to the position it now enjoys; and in 1844, during Captain Montrou's absence on survey, he acted as draftsman. He was an officer of considerable talent and good attainments, but had for many years suffered from a tumour in his throat, which could not be operated on, and had long threatened to prove fatal to him. In the monsoon of 1846 he commanded the Auckland steamer, and shortly afterwards obtained leave to proceed to the Neilgherries on sick certificate. He was one of the officers who was said to have been fortunate enough generally to retain the favour of the late superintendent. This is the third casualty which has occurred within these few months amongst the seniors of the service, if we include Lieutenant Bird, who would, it is said, have been restored had he survived.—Times, Sept. 20.

ORIENTAL BANK.—A report of the proceedings of the shareholders of the Oriental Bank, held on the 22nd of September, has been published, which presents their affairs under a new light, which must be eminently gratifying. The losses of the bank, about which so much has occasionally been so loudly talked, have amounted during the year to no more than 35,000/., a sum almost miraculously small, considering the amount and complication of their transactions, and the frightful commercial crisis that has just passed over us. During the two preceding years, the net profits of the bank have reached ten per cent., and the proprietors have resolved to draw on the reserve fund to make up the dividend of the present year—the fund to be once more raised to its former amount by the withdrawal of one per cent. or so annually from the sum which would otherwise become divisible. The two most important matters are the determination of the bank to permit India to be converted into English stock, at two shillings to the rupee, when shareholders propose returning to Europe; and the resolution to publish hereafter a more detailed account than heretofore of their transactions.

THE RIGHT HON. THE GOVERNOR, LORD FALKLAND, was expected to have quitted the Deccan yesterday, and to have been here to-morrow, but the arrangements seem for the present to have been broken through: he may be expected at the Presidency in the course of the week. Capt. Harrison, H.M.'s 10th hussars, has resigned his appointment as A.D.C., and will, it is said, be succeeded by Capt. Murray, of the same corps: Lieut. Henry, late A.D.C. to the Governor, goes as extra A.D.C. to General Ahmuty; he will be succeeded by Capt. Fyfe, of the 22nd N.I. Capt. McMahon, who after proceeding to join his corps (14th dragoons, now at Lahore), was permitted to return to his appointment as A.D.C., is now with H.M.'s 32nd before Mooltan.—Times, Oct. 2.

COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

MONDAY AFTERNOON, FIVE O'CLOCK, OCT. 3, 1848.—The early part of the past fortnight was marked by the same activity in our Import market that had prevailed for some time previous, and large sales of manufactured goods were effected at full prices. Subsequently a lull occurred, dealers seeking to reduce their stocks somewhat previous to making fresh purchases, so that our market remained quiet for a few days, and the amount of business transacted during this interval was trifling. After this, when it was expected dealers would again come forward to supply their wants, advices from Marwar mentioned the supply of rain that had fallen there as being deficient, and a scarcity of grain was consequently apprehended. This news has had the effect of keeping the Marwaris dealers out of the market; and should later advices confirm the intelligence of a deficient fall of rain for the season, the prospects of a considerable business with an important district will be materially lessened. As the monsoon, however, was not yet over, there is still some hope that a further fall of rain would take place, and thus relieve the apprehensions entertained with regard to a failure in the crops. In our Money market we have still to report a continuance of the healthy state that has now prevailed for some time past.

COTTON PRICE GOODS.—40 inch Grey Shirtings are in the same state as at the date of our last report.—45 inch Shirtings. These fabrics have not been in so much request as was anticipated would be the case, and the sales have been to a limited extent.—Grey Madapolams continued in good inquiry till the general lull; since then some large parcels have been placed by importers at a slight reduction on former rates for the higher kinds. The lower qualities maintain their value, and stocks are light. In Grey Jacquets we have no change to notice with respect to the value, but the inquiry during the past few days has been confined to the higher qualities.—Grey Domestic were in fair demand for a few days after the date of our last report, but of late there has been less inquiry.—Grey Long Cloths have been in better demand, and stocks of the heavier kinds being small, some advance on the prices ruling at the date of our last has been obtained.

BLEACHED GOODS.—Shirtings continue scarce, and in request, but stocks being light, few sales are reported.—Blanched Jacquets and Cambrics continue in good inquiry.—Light Scotch fabrics generally have been in less demand, the inquiry that has existed being chiefly confined to Mull Mulls.—Turkey Red Goods have been in good inquiry.

COTTON YARN.—There has been little inquiry during the past fortnight, and one or two large sales that have been reported show a slight decline upon some Nos. The sales amount to 450 bales Mule Twist, 200 lbs. each, and 50 bales, 400 lbs. to 500 lbs. each. Of Water Twist, the sales are 111 bales, 400 lbs. each.

DYED YARN.—Turkey Red has been scarcely inquired for during the past fortnight, and the only sale reported is thirteen bales, Nos. 40 to 50, at Rs. 1½ per lb. Orange continues in fair inquiry, and a parcel of 25 bales, 300 lbs. each, lately arrived, has been sold at as. 12½ per lb. for Nos. 30 to 50, of middling quality.

COTTON THREAD.—Five cases Ball Thread, 200 lbs. each, Nos. 20 to 100, 140 balls to each, are reported as sold at Rs. 1-2½ as. per lb.; and ten cases, Nos. 16 to 100, at Rs. 1-2½ as. per lb., 160 balls to each lb.

COCHINEAL.—Immediately after the date of our last sale of 3,200 lbs. was effected at Rs. 3 per lb., and a further quantity of 3,000 lbs. at Rs. 2-15 as. per lb. Since then no transactions are reported, the bulk of the late supplies consisting of small lots for native importers, who have been retailing what they received to the dealers in the bazaar.

METALS.—Copper, which was looking down after the date of our last, has again improved somewhat during the past week.—Iron. Swedish Bar continues scarce, and our quotations are slightly advanced. British Bar, on the contrary, remains very dull, and the sales effected show a further decline in price. Other kinds remain unchanged.

SPIRITS.—There is a fair inquiry for Brandy, and some advance has taken place in the price. Gin continues scarce and in demand.

BEER.—Our market has been quiet during the past fortnight. Of Allsopp's we have only a sale of 50 hhds., at Rs. 70, to report, the deliveries being chiefly confined to the lots sold to arrive. Of Bass' sales to the extent of 76 hhds., at Rs. 70 per hhd., have been effected.

EXPORTS.

COTTON WOOL.—There has been little doing in this staple during the past fortnight, but holders are firm and prices have advanced further on some kinds. The purchases reported only amount to 3,300 bales for China.

OPIMUM.—Our market has continued dull, and a further decline in the value of the drug has taken place. We quote the price of the day at Rs. 1,300 to 1,400 per chest. Some parcels of the new Drug, deliverable in December, have, we understand, been freely offered at Rs. 1,275 per chest.

A RAMBLE IN CANTON.

Perhaps the best way to give a sketch of Canton is to copy a page or two of my journal, recording some of our rambles, and the reader probably will not be displeased to accompany me to the lacker manufactory of the renowned Hip-qu.

At 10 o'clock in the morning my friend and I quitted the French Hong, turned the corner of the old Spanish Factory, and soon arrived at No. 15, Tung-wan Street. Hip-chwang, one of the partners of Wang-tae (better known by the name of Hip-qu), put on his shaong-aham, took his inseparable fan, and we followed him at a quick pace.

The first street we passed through was the Shap-sam-hong-lane, or "Thirteen Factories Street." The Canton shops differ singularly from ours. Each has a little niche on the left-hand side of the threshold, where, morning, noon, and night, matches burn in honour of the god of wealth. Under this niche is a red tablet bearing an inscription, in elegant characters, inviting all who enter to "chin-chin the Joss," or salute the god; and opposite to the entry is a little altar profusely decorated with flowers and tinsel, with the figure of some powerful genius of the Taou creed. The shop is almost entirely open; it has neither door, window, nor glass front. The counter is fixed on the left, and forms a right angle. On both sides of the entrance are suspended long vertical wooden tablets, which, in red, blue, or black characters, specify the name of the shopkeeper, and tender his services to the public.

We passed warehouses containing cloths of cotton, silk, and ma (a kind of grass); basket-work in bamboo, ratan, reed, and palm-leaf; slippers prettily embroidered; bamboo-paper, &c. At every step was a little workshop, in one of which a man was carding cotton; in another, lanterns were being made and painted; carpenters, coffin-makers, hatters, ambulatory restaurateurs, and fruiterers, crowded the street. Turning into White Rice Street, and entering Ing-shan-fong, we no longer hear noise and tumult, or jostle a dense and active crowd; a few poor hawkers cry flowers, fruits, and sweets; now and then a tattered mendicant will pass by, a barber, or a restaurateur, balancing on their shoulders, the one his implements, the other his furnaces and his pantry. The streets are in this part wide and deserted; the houses look like prisons, no window breaking the continuity of grey wall, and even over the entry falls a jealous curtain of bamboo, which excludes the intrusive glance of the curious from the interior. This part of the city was the most interesting to us, because it is unvisited by strangers, who are not attracted thither by business or curiosity, so that it is a really a Chinese city. Females abounded there, with their tiny feet and pale complexions, slightly painted with a rosy tint, and in extremely simple though elegant costume. Law and tradition have fixed the fashions of dress, which vary according to age, position, and rank. A Fan-kwei (European) is a curiosity to Chinese ladies; the patriotic hatred of their husbands paint these foreigners in the frightful colours of a Blue-beard, so that their wives and daughters are at once eager and afraid to look at them. They crowded the doors, bashful and terrified at us. Some of the young women were beautiful.—Journ. Asiatique.

LABUAN.

THE H. C.'s steamer Auckland, Captain Young, arrived here last from Labuan. The accounts which have been received by her of the progress of the young colony are promising, representing the preparations for the settlement as actively progressing, the natives from the mainland flocking over, and the most perfect health prevailing amongst the present settlers, including the Government officers and others who went there about two months ago. A site for a cantonment has been pitched upon about a mile and a half from the flagstaff, on the summit of a hill which is about 100 feet above the level of the sea. It is covered with light timber, which will allow of its being easily cleared, and as it is well drained by streams at the base, it is likely to prove healthy. The physical conformation of the island would appear to be very similar to that of Singapore, consisting of small hills with rivulets running through the hollows, so that it presents a very pleasing appearance, and will afford many admirable sites for houses for the European settlers, such as those which within these few years past have begun to stud the hill tops in the neighbourhood of Singapore, enlivening and improving the aspect of the country, and standing out in grateful contrast to the dark masses of the jungle. A road is in process of formation from Fort Point to the cantonments, and the erection of the necessary buildings for the reception of the troops will by this time have been begun. The temporary houses for the accommodation of the government officers were also in progress, and will be ready by the beginning of August. Kadjang and attaps, which have as yet to be procured from Brunia, are in consequence of the water carriage, comparatively expensive, but there can be little doubt that these will probably be manufactured on the spot a short time hence, as soon as the Malays have settled themselves and had time to look about them for materials. With respect to the salubrity of the colony, regarding which serious apprehensions have been entertained, and to which the deaths that have taken place at various times would seem to lend some countenance, it is highly satisfactory to learn that the actual experience of these first regular settlers has not confirmed these fears. The causes of the sickness which has heretofore been experienced at Labuan, must therefore be sought for in the over-fatigue and reckless exposure to damp and night air, to which we have heard it attributed by some, and which is rendered more probable from the proverbial thoughtlessness regarding such matters of the class who have been chief sufferers, —sailors. At all events, we find that as far as can be perceived, there are no irremovable physical causes by which the settlement can be rendered permanently unhealthy. The only things which might be productive of fever, fresh-water swamps, have been formed by the beds of the streams having been choked up by the accumulation of vegetable matter to about the level of the surrounding surface. Nothing more is therefore required for their removal than to clear out the beds of the streams, which will no doubt be at once done in the quarter where it is proposed to erect the nucleus of the future town of Labuan. The climate is described as even and moderate, the rain, though abundant, falling at night. There is nearly always a refreshing sea-breeze, and the temperature does not seem to rise much above 82° or 83° in the middle of the day. That important desideratum to a settlement, especially in the East, water, is abundant in supply, and of the best quality. It may be obtained without much labour by digging, being contained in strata of decomposed porous coral lying a few feet below the surface. Stones for building purposes have not yet been found on the island, the only rocks observed being of a soft friable formation, unfitting them even for road materials. Clay suitable for making bricks is abundant, and will provide the materials for the more permanent edifices which will, in due time, take the place of the temporary buildings which are run up at the first foundation of a colony. The advance of Labuan will no doubt be much accelerated after it is thrown open to traders and settlers, and the government is organized, and in full operation. We trust it will be our pleasing duty to make many more reports upon its progress as satisfactory as the present.—Singapore Free Press.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The following are the official details of the operations against the rebel Boers in the country beyond the Orange River:—

On the 22nd August, nearly all the troops required for military operations having then reached Colesburg, Sir H. Smith commenced the passage of that river, and had, on the 23rd, conveyed the greater portion across to the right bank. His Excellency's passage of the river was followed by the happiest effects. The loyal portion of the population beyond the Orange River were inspired with confidence, and expressed their readiness to join the Queen's troops, and act against the rebels. On the other hand, his proceedings filled the rebels with consternation and dismay. They fell back to Winburg, leaving the passage of the river uncontested. They commenced their backward movement the moment the infantry advanced, their outposts flying from the banks of the river, leaving the meat half-cooked upon the fires.

On the 26th of August the Governor commenced his march towards the position where the rebel Boers were supposed to have taken their ground, but he did not find the actual spot where they were posted until the morning of the 29th; he then ascertained from the shepherd that they were posted at Bloem Plaats. He approached the place, himself leading the reconnoitering party, when the Boers commenced their fire. The troops were put in position, and for three hours a very brisk engagement was kept up on both sides, at the end of which the rebels were driven from their fastnesses, and retreated, leaving 49 killed, and 150 were supposed to be wounded; on our side 10 killed and 39 wounded of the men, and 1 officer killed and 7 wounded. The rebels fought most bravely, and shewed much skill and courage. Sir Harry pursued them that day until nightfall, when he encamped for the night, and the next morning moved over two miles to Bethany, a missionary station, which was abandoned, and had been robbed by the rebels. He ascertained that the Boers had fled in all parts of the country, and were quite dispersed. Sir Harry had caught two rebels, whom he intended to take to Bloem Fontein, to try by court-martial. On his way to Bethany he found many horses of the Boers, clothes, waggons, &c. He was supported in the engagement by 250 Griquas, under Waterboer and Kok, who proved most useful and loyal. The troops behaved very gallantly, and the courage of the officers is highly spoken of and commended by Sir Harry, who was struck on the leg—only a graze—and his horse hit on the nose.

Boem Plaats, where this action took place, is on a branch of the Riet River. Bethany is about 12 hours (72 miles) from the Orange River, and 6 hours (36 miles) from Bloem Fontein.

It will be observed that the number of officers wounded is far beyond the usual proportion, which makes it probable that they were aimed at by the rebels from behind their sheltered positions, and Sir Harry among the rest.

A Government Notice, dated Cape Town, 9th September, gives the following particulars of the action:—

"His Excellency moved the troops with the greatest rapidity in the direction of Bloem Fontein, in pursuit of the rebels, whom, on the 29th, he found posted in a very strong position at Bloem Plaats, on the Krom Elleboog River. There is here a succession of ridges of low hills, backed by a higher range, through a pass in which the road runs. On a reconnoitering party, accompanied by his Excellency, approaching the first ridge, the rebels suddenly sprang up, and opened a heavy fire upon them, the left of their position was, however, quickly carried by the Rifle Brigade, 45th, and 91st regiment, the artillery (6-pounders) opening at the same time a very effective fire. The rebels' right, having been considerably thrown forward, was gallantly attacked by the Cape Mounted Rifles, under the orders of Lieut. Col. Buller, and driven back towards the pass, in the direction of which the enemy were now at every point hurrying, pursued from ridge to ridge of the low hills by H.M.'s troops, and suffering great loss as they retired from the guns which opened upon them wherever they could be brought to bear. It was afterwards found that 12 men had been killed by one well-directed round shot. On reaching the summit of the pass, the enemy made a bold, though fruitless, effort to maintain their position; but, by a combined attack of the Cape Mounted Rifles, with a body of the Griqua auxiliaries, they were at length driven from this, their last position; on abandoning which they fled in the utmost disorder, and in all directions, over the plain beyond, leaving behind them many horses and various articles of dress, &c. His Excellency continued the pursuit for several miles, and until dark; but, it being evident that the rebels were completely broken, halted for the night at Calver Fontein. In the hope of overtaking and capturing the train of waggons, he marched next morning for Bethany, which he reached early in the day; and there ascertained that the enemy's camp no longer existed, they having fled with their waggons in all directions."

Our loss is 7 officers wounded; 8 men killed, and 30 wounded. The officers wounded are, Lieut. Colonel Buller, Rifle Brigade, severely; Capt. Murray, ditto, mortally (since dead); Capt. Armstrong, Cape Mounted Rifles, severely; Lieut. De Salis, ditto, dangerously; Lieut. Mill, ditto, severely; Ens. Steele, ditto, dangerously; Ens. Crampton, 91st regt., dangerously.

The following paper, headed "Warning to the Rebel Boers," was issued by Sir H. Smith, from Colesburg, on the 17th August:—

"Know all ye assembled in arms under one Pretorius, whom I have proscribed, that ye are British subjects, and that the act of your thus assembling in this reckless manner is illegal, and in opposition to her Majesty's sovereign will. You are guilty of rebellion. Remember, before you force me to fire upon you, that I have already given you fair warning in my manifesto on the 29th of March last. I now again warn you to pause ere you compel me to use the force now assembled at my disposal, and close at hand. What is it that you seek? To be slaves to the black men, and to hold your lands from them, and not from her Majesty? I went among you last January, with a heart full of affectionate feeling towards the Boer. I have done for you all that you asked me to do. Each Boer now holds his land in perpetuity, not on an expiring lease of forty years, and you have the privilege of almost entirely governing yourselves. I have rendered the districts of Bloem Fontein and Caledon happy—most happy and grateful to me. Ask every man of any property in either of them if this is not the case. Now, all possess their land in security. I have legalized all marriages. I have two ministers coming from Holland, and schoolmasters on the road. Your rebellious conduct has driven many from their homes, with their wives and their children; plunging them into misery in this inclement weather, and destroying their flocks and herds. Is this the good that you seek for your countrymen? Choose war or peace. The one I will vigorously prosecute; the other I will secure for the benefit of good men and God's church; and I will establish such military posts as shall not be subject to insult in future. Pretorius is an outlaw, a proscribed man, and I will never communicate with him; the proclamation, offering 2,000*l.* for his apprehension, remains in full force. Some of you rebels, I know, have large sums of money in the colony; beware, if you fire a shot, lest I seize them to assist in defraying the expenses of this outbreak, which you have so treacherously and traitorously brought about, and in reimbursing, where possible, the good men for the losses they have suffered by your invasion, your threats, and your robberies. The native chiefs are under the sovereignty of her Majesty, and can make no treaty that is binding till ratified by her Majesty's representative. Any treaties, therefore, that they may have been forced into by the rebels are null and void. As I advance, whatever armed party awaits me I shall regard as having fired the first shot, and the blood be on their heads. Thus murder and rebellion become united. So soon as I reach Winburg I will hear what Mynheer Potgeiter, and all peaceable men and loyal subjects, have to represent to me for the general benefit."

The editor of the Grensblad had received from Pretorius, the leader of the rebellious farmers, a letter which he had addressed to his Excellency, repudiating British interference, which is stated to be signed by 1,050 persons. This document is important, as it contains what the emigrant farmers consider to be their "case." In it the farmers, or Boers, say—

"Your Excellency has distinctly said, if the majority were not disposed for British supremacy, that you would leave us at peace and without further interference. Now, we say to your Excellency, and we tell it to the world, and say it as men of pure hearts and of much experience, that we, white African farmers, cannot live with any feeling of security in a country with so many black tribes, under her Majesty's Government,—the more so as they are allowed to be under their own laws, and we are bound under other laws. We repeat it, as well to your Excellency as to the world, that had we also been blacks, it might, perhaps, have been different, but now it is impossible, because we are white African farmers. We speak not boastfully,—we speak not because we bear hatred to any one, and because we were oppressed under British rule (which oppressions we will not even name, for these no newspaper could contain, they would certainly fill a large volume), but we will simply, in support of our complaints, briefly adduce two examples—how many years have not the inhabitants of the old colony, where there were blacks, lived in insecurity? and how many irremediable losses and hardships have they not endured under British rule? We were all youngsters and children, and there was Caffre war and devastation, and now we are gray-haired men, and there is still Caffre war; and we ask, whether the inhabitants there have been compensated for their losses, occasioned by war under British rule, as well in 1835 as in 1846-47? The answer we leave to your Excellency and the world." In conclusion the address says:—"Oh, we could unfold a large volume of grievances to your Excellency, which we could support by many witnesses of the truth,—but we will pass all this, and entreat of your Excellency to leave us at peace and without further interference upon lands which we have honestly procured from the lawful proprietors; and thus we proclaim to the world and to our Creator, who we know looks down upon us from the high heavens,—and to Him alone do we owe gratitude and homage that we have not yet been entirely annihilated."

The prejudice of blood, which is carried to so baleful an extent in the American settlements of every European nation, does not prevail in India. The principal cause is the high civilization of the Indian in comparison with the African, and the intelligence and self-respect of the higher classes, and more especially of those engaged in mercantile occupations.—Crawford on the "Black Act."

LITERARY & SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

Sir Wm. Jones, in his Poëses Asiaticæ Commentarium, ascribes to Arabian poetry "beauty, elegance, refinement, and dignity," and says of the Moallakat, "I can scarcely imagine anything more delicate, more graceful, more exquisite than these poems." Baron Silvestre de Sacy found in that poetry "noble conceptions, which elevate the soul; vivid impressions, which strongly move the imagination, and just expressions, which awaken the sensibility;" and he affirms that the poetry of the Arabs has no less claim upon scholars than that of the Greeks and Romans. Reiske pronounces an unfavourable sentence upon Arabian poetry, but he prefers it to the Greek, and even the Iliad, which, he says, contains tedious, frigid, stupid, execrable passages. The truth may lie between these estimates.

Arabic poetry is not deficient in striking and noble sentiments; but it abounds in jeux de mots, conceits, and prettinesses, which seem to be the "Dalliahs" of the bards of Arabia.

Ibn Khalikan (who wrote in the thirteenth century), in his Wafayat, or Biographical Dictionary,* has given specimens of every variety of Arabian poetry.

Abd al-Hukm composed the following verses on a man condemned to death for murder, and who was shot dead by the person authorised to take "blood-revenge," the arrow striking him in the heart:—

"From the heart (middle) of the bow you expelled its son (the arrow), and the bow sighed; for a mother will sigh when separated from her child: but the bow was not aware that the arrow you shot would merely pass from one heart to another."

One of the ideas expressed in these verses is employed by another poet, who thus illustrates the pain of separation:

"The very bow, though formed of wood, utters a sigh when forced to part with its arrow."

The following verses are also by Abd al-Hukm:—

"When my beloved perceived my eyes pour forth their tears, she pressed me to 'restore the pearls which had adorned her neck'; astonished at her mistake, she smiled, and I said to my friend, 'that which she thought she had lost is her mouth.'"

The same poet says:—

"Falsehood is rendered pleasing by gilded phraseology, and truth may sometimes assume a repulsive form: in praising honey, you may say, 'This is the dew of the lips of the bee;' in blaming, it may be called the excrement of the wasp."

Abu Tammam has the following thought, equally just and beautiful:—

"When God wishes to reveal to the world excellence which remains modestly concealed, he allows an envious tongue to attack it. Did fire not inflame whatever it approaches, the sweet odour of aloes-wood had been unknown."

Of a martial chief, it is said, by Al-Ashjai:—

"The vultures know that his warriors are lions, when they meet with a warrior's prey: pinched with hunger, they hover over his head, but the points of his lances send them to their nests glutted with food."

The poet An-Nami envied his rival al-Mutannabbi two ideas, contained in the following verses, as being, in his opinion, perfectly original:—

"Misfortune shot at me with the arrows of calamity until my heart was covered with them, so that the darts which struck it broke against those which were fixed in it already."

"He marched at the head of an army, raising a cloud of dust, which obscured the sight; and it seemed as if the soldiers saw with their ears."

The surname of al-Mutannabbi, 'the Pretended Prophet,' was given to this poet, because he had arrogated to himself the title of a prophet, and was followed in that character by a great multitude. His partisans were, however, dispersed and he was taken prisoner. After remaining a long time in confinement, he renounced his errors, reverted to the Moslem faith, and was liberated. A prince of Cordova, having recited with admiration the following verse from al-Mutannabbi:—

"Our camels, broken with fatigue, receive fresh strength when their eyes obtain a sight of thee:"

—a poet in his company improvised the following verse:—

"Proud of his poetic talent, al-Mutannabbi declared himself a prophet; had he known that you would recite his poems, he would have thought himself a god."

Al-Mutannabbi owed his death to one of his own verses. He was in an action, and the day having turned against his party, he was flying, like a certain Roman poet, "relictâ non bene parvulâ," when his slave reminded him of one of his verses, in which he had boasted of his valour. Stung with self-reproach, he returned to the fight, and was slain!

* This work has been admirably translated by Baron Mac Gukin de Slane.

Capt. Kittoe has discovered a slab, bearing a "curious and valuable" inscription, in Sanscrit, written in an early character of Mithila Nagri, near the village of Gusserawa, in Behar. It was found in a mound, from whence the people had been digging bricks, and which has been the site of a large Baudhdha temple, of the Tantra period, as the numerous idols show. The inscription, which has been translated by Dr. Ballantine, principal of the Benares College, records the erection of the temple of Vajrasana, by Viradeva, son of Indragupta, of Nagarahâra, a "twice-born man," and a friend of the king. Of this Viradeva it is said in the inscription that "he abandoned his comfortable home, in order ascetically to follow the instructions of Buddha;" that "having perused all the Vedas, and pondered the Sastras," he went to the holy convent called Kanishka, famous for the quietism of its frequenters, where he devoted himself to asceticism; that he visited the greatest of the Buddhas, Vajrasana, whence he proceeded to the city of Behar, the city of King Yasovarmâ, "to visit the holy mendicants and their disciples," where he staid long, and "received the respectful attentions of the lord of the land, Sri Devapâla." The inscription concludes: "So long as the tortoise shall support the earth, ocean-garlanded; so long as the bright-beamed sun shall shine, dispelling darkness; so long as night shall seem pleasant, with the cool moon-beam; so long may the fame of Viradeva shine lustrous on the earth." The inscription, unfortunately, has no date, which is to be regretted since it bears on several points of historical interest respecting Buddhism in India, showing that a Hindu-Buddhic syncretism was taught at public institutions. From internal evidence it is supposed to have been written in the ninth or tenth century. Viradeva, though a "twice-born" man, and who studied the Vedas and Sastras, was a Buddhist, and the inscription, whilst exalting the glories of the Buddhist temple and the creed of Buddha, recognizes the deities and the mythology of the Brahmins. "Be the date the ninth or the tenth century, we have clear proof," observes Capt. Kittoe, "that the Buddhist faith flourished in India at that period; that it did so much later, is proved by the numerous short inscriptions on the images and Chaityas abounding in the district, and even at Sarnath, near Benares." This inscription is further valuable for the additional confirmation it affords of the accuracy of the Itineraries of the Chinese travellers. "Nagarahâra," known for the first time, is the Na ko-lo-ho of Heuen-tsang, and the Nang-go-lo-ho of Kwang-yuen, another Chinese traveller quoted by Ma-twan-lin. The convent or monastery of Kanishka is described by Fâ-h'hen and Heuen-tsang as the most magnificent in all Jambudwipa. The hill, designated "Indrasaila" in the inscription, is (as noticed by Mr. Laidlay) contiguous to the village of Giriye, near Behar, in the Chinese transcription of which, Yin-to-she-lo-gu-ho, the original name, "Indrasailagaha," or Rock Cave of Indra, may be easily recognized. It was the most easterly of the range of hills in which Rajagriha was situated, and was famous amongst Buddhists as the spot where Sakya is fabled to have propounded the greater part of the Prajñâ Paramitâ.

The original inscription, and a fac-simile of the character, were presented to the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and are printed in its Journal for June last.

M. von Hammer Purgstall, in some additions to a Memoir of M. Quatremère, "Sur le goût des Livres chez les Orientaux," published in the Journal Asiatique for February, 1848, makes the following observations upon the vexed question respecting the burning of the Alexandrian Library by the khalif Omar:—

"Certain modern historians and Orientalists, walking in the steps of Gibbon, giving no credit to the burning of the remains of the Library of Alexandria, ordered by Omar, have constituted themselves his defenders. To espouse their opinion, we must believe one of two things; either that this burning, affirmed by one of the most authentic historians (Abulfaraj) has been contradicted by others; or that it was altogether repugnant to the principles of Islam and the general character of Omar. But not only is the fact uncontradicted by any known Arabian historian, but it is, on the contrary, confirmed by Ibn Khaldun, the greatest historical critic in Arabian literature, who mentions expressly the destruction of the books by fire and by water. He says that Omar, being consulted by Sad-Abuwakas, one of his captains, whether he should preserve the books of the infidels and cause them to be translated, commanded him to cast them into the fire or water. Abulkhair-Fashekuprisad, whose reputation, as an encyclopædist, is not less general in Asia than that of D'Alembert in Europe, says the same thing, and Hajj Khalifa, the greatest of bibliographers, and himself an historian, repeats the same fact upon the credit of those two high authorities. What reason could these three personages, good Muslims as well as learned authors, have for mentioning this burning as an incontestable fact if it never existed? Would they not rather have endeavoured to justify Omar from an act of barbarity wrongfully imputed to him if they had had the slightest reason to doubt it? The testimony of history is, however, confirmed by the personal character of Omar. A rigid observer of the Koran and the commands of the Prophet, the second khalif was a declared enemy of poets and authors; he prohibited in the conquered provinces the speaking of any other language than Arabic. There might still be some chance of questioning the fact if similar burnings of books had never been repeated in the history of Islam; an attempt might then be made, with some probability of success, to discredit the destruction of the Alexandrian Library as a solitary act totally opposed to the spirit of Islam; whereas the history of the first six centuries of the Hegira attests as many burnings of books by the Moslems. So many libraries burned and destroyed by fanatical or angry Musulmans, not in the first years of Islam, when its principles were yet crude, are alone sufficient to accredit the fact."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

THURSDAY, November 2, 1848.

No accusation, amongst the many degrading charges brought against the Hindus as a nation, has been more generally and more successfully urged than that of falsehood, and especially perjury. "The vice of falsehood," observes Mr. Mill, in treating of the manners of the Hindus, "they carry to a height almost unexampled amongst other races of men; judicial mendacity is more than common; it is almost universal." Others have asserted the same thing; but those who have known the Hindu people more intimately than Mr. Mill and his authorities, and even than Lord Teignmouth, have greatly softened the dark and repulsive features which the historian has attributed to their character. Sir John Malcolm bears witness to the veracity of the people of the Upper Provinces in particular, and of the Hindus generally. The Hon. Mr. Shore, who lived amongst the natives of India, clears their social intercourse from the stain which the sweeping charge, that they are universally regardless of truth, would fix upon it; whilst Mr. Wilson has neutralized the testimony of Sir Wm. Jones,—who said that affidavits might be obtained in the markets of Calcutta like any other article of traffic,—by a fact of which Sir William was ignorant, namely, that the perjury of natives in our courts of justice is in some degree our own work; that the taking of an oath is so repugnant to the feelings of respectable Hindus, that they avoid as much as possible appearing as witnesses, an office which is thus thrown into the hands of the lowest and most unprincipled. The declaration of Kasinath Tarkapanchanana (cited by Mr. Wilson), that "the dread of an oath prevents men of credit from giving testimony at all, even to the loss of a just cause," affords anything but a presumption that the Hindus are more prone than other races of men to judicial mendacity.

A strict adherence to truth, in all transactions, is a moral and religious obligation inculcated and binding upon Christians; but amongst other nations it is recognised less as a law of religion or a rule of morality, than as one of the many human contrivances for accomplishing the ends of government, for guarding life, protecting property, and maintaining public and private rights. Even in Europe, it may be doubted whether the infamy that attaches to the utterance of a wilful falsehood is not to be traced rather to the chivalric institutions of a dark and ignorant age, than to the Bible or our municipal code. The laws of the Hindus, and indeed of most Eastern nations, are reproached with relaxing their obligations in this matter in favour of some beneficial object or present advantage—a most dangerous principle; but is it peculiar to pagans? The great Eusebius, a Christian bishop, of the third century, enunciates and defends the proposition, "that it is sometimes expedient to use falsehood as a medicine for the benefit of persons who require that kind of treatment."*

No one can pretend that it would not be preposterously unfair to institute a comparison between Christians and a nation like the Hindus, whose sacred writings are somewhat latitudinarian upon this point. But will not the Hindus, nevertheless, sustain a comparison, in respect to judicial veracity, with Christians in one part of this United Kingdom? Is it possible to have read the proceedings in the late trials for high treason in Ireland without being convinced that perjury, gross and premeditated, was repeatedly committed? It is not, of course, our design to distort the guilt of individuals into a national crime, and assume that a whole people are devoid of veracity because some of them can hold the Gospels in their hands, and solemnly obtesting the contents, utter a deliberate falsehood. But the same justice to which the Irish nation is entitled ought to be meted out to the Hindus,—whose moral code has not been purified by the spirit of Christianity, and who are swayed to the practice of deceit in all its forms by stronger impulses than we are,—namely, not to be judged in gross by the acts of a few; not to have their national character blackened and depraved because some of their countrymen are guilty of vices from which some of ours are as little exempt.

To those who watch with anxious solicitude the progress, slow indeed, but sure, of Christianity, in conjunction with education and intellectual culture, amongst the natives of India, an incident which has occurred in the Hindu College at Calcutta,—namely, the removal of a native teacher in that institution who has embraced the Christian doctrine, —will not be without interest.

The Vidyalaya, or Hindu College, was established in 1816, under the auspices of the late Sir E. H. East, by respectable members of the native community of Calcutta, chiefly for the instruction of Hindu youths in the English language and European learning, partly gratuitously, and partly by the payment of a moderate charge. Under merely native aid and management, it declined; and in 1823, pecuniary assistance was granted by the Government, upon conditions which established a connection between the College and the General Committee of Public Instruction, and the institution has since flourished under the judicious arrangements and harmonious co-operation of European and native managers. The fundamental principle of this establishment is that it affords instruction in all branches of western science and literature altogether apart from religion; and to this principle may be ascribed the popularity of this College, and the great effects it has already wrought upon the native character. To say that the good accomplished by it is not unmingled with evil, is no more than may be predicated of almost all human institutions. The tendency of it is to destroy Hinduism; but without substituting any other creed in its place; consequently, the Hindu youths, who receive instruction at this College, are discharged from it with minds imbued, indeed, with sound knowledge, but without those principles which can alone exert a predominant influence upon conduct, at an age when the judgment is weak and the passions are strong. This is considered by some to be a great radical error in the institution; but the occurrence to which we are about to advert shows what would be the consequence if the Indian Government were to deviate from the strict course of neutrality in all matters of religion to which it is pledged in relation to this college. Whilst the jealousy of the Hindu community is roused at the slightest appearance of any measure savouring of proselytism, they seem to regard with indifference the extreme degree of laxity, on the part of their children, of belief in their own creed. In 1840, four Afghan youths, sent by the Government to the Hindu College, were rejected by the managers in consequence of their difference of faith, none but orthodox Hindus being admissible. On the other hand, we are told by the best authority,* that the education given to the youths at the Hindu College has "un-Hinduised half the young native aristocracy of Calcutta;" that "the students seldom pronounce the name of the gods without derision; and that the restrictions and institutions of Hinduism are so constantly violated, that it would be the duty of a religious censor, if one was appointed, to expel the great majority of the educated native youths from the ranks of the caste. But," the writer adds, "amidst this universal laxity of belief and practice, though, according to the rules of the Shastras, the alumni of the College cannot be said to have even a shred of caste left, yet they continue in the bosom of the Hindu community; not, however, without what a Christian would consider a great sacrifice of principle and consistency. Indeed, we question whether the difference between the principles of the religion they profess and their own practice be not so great as to justify a charge of hypocrisy; but hypocrisy is a less heinous crime than 'apostasy,' and so long as they do not cross the Rubicon, anything and everything is tolerated."

In this state of things, the alternative choice is between persevering in the present course of stringent non-interference, or abandoning altogether this successful expedient slowly to extinguish Hinduism.

A young Hindu teacher of the College, named Koylas Chunder Bose, avowed his conversion to Christianity, and received the rite of baptism. As soon as this fact was known, a memorial, bearing the signatures of the parents and guardians of the boys in his class, was presented to the managing committee, which expressed the fears of the memorialists, lest the teacher should endeavour to convert their children, and prayed that he might be removed from the college. This memorial placed the committee in a dilemma. There was nothing in the rules of the college which warranted them to take any cognizance of a charge against a teacher of changing his religion; whilst, if they were to impose a penalty in the form of dismissal upon one who had embraced Christianity, they would as palpably violate the pledge of neutrality given by the Government, on one side, as if they had held out temptations for embracing it on the other. The Hindu members of the committee, it appears, had not the same clear perception of the true principles of religious liberty as their European and official colleagues; they dissented from the proposition of non-interference, and, in deference to their scruples, it was resolved to submit the case, through the Council of Education, for the decision of the Government. The want of caution, rather than the zeal, of the new convert, however, brought matters to a prompt issue.

The Principal of the College reported that certain charges of interference with the religion of the boys of his class had been brought against Koylas Chunder, in violation of the rule by which the teachers are prohibited from interfering with the religion of their pupils directly or indirectly; that he had investigated them, and that the truth of them was generally admitted by Koylas himself. These charges were four in number, and the evidence in support of them consisted of the statements made by the boys, who are from ten to twelve years old, and who appear to have been prompted to interrogate their teacher. The charges were the following:—

1. That on being asked to define "Christian charity," he did so by describing it as being superior to every other kind of charity.
2. That on being asked if he intended to bathe ceremonially during the Dusserah holidays, he replied that he did not, as bathing could cleanse only the body, and not the soul.
3. That on being asked to illustrate what he meant by true and false prophets, he mentioned Jesus Christ as one of the former, and Mahomed as one of the latter.
4. That on being asked some question concerning the nature of pride, he spoke of the ostentatious worship of idols by rich Hindas at festival times, as being often an exemplification of that feeling.

These charges (if they may be so termed) were taken into consideration by the Managing Committee on the 18th of August, when Koylas, in a written statement, denied that they involved a breach of the rule. Of seven members of the committee present, four were of opinion that all the charges were proved, and that they amounted to an infraction of the rule which prohibits interference with the religion of the pupils under pain of summary dismissal; the remaining three thought that only three of the charges were proved, and that they did not amount to an infraction of the rule; all agreed, however, that it would be for the benefit of the Hindu College that Koylas Chunder should leave it. In the end, a middle course was adopted; it was resolved that the teacher should be allowed three months' leave of absence, in order to dissolve his connection with the College; and it is expected that he will be employed in the Hooghly, Dacca, or Kishnagur Colleges, which are not exclusive, like the Vidyalaya.

This is one of the instances in which a middle course is the wisest. Without any improper concession to Hindu bigotry, and without inflicting a penalty upon the convert, the Government has shown its desire to carry out, in the most impartial spirit, the fundamental principle of the College, and will thereby disarm all invidious criticism. This course of policy is not only the most prudent, but it is that which is inculcated by legislative authority. The Resolutions of the House of Commons, in 1813, which declared "that it is the duty of this country to promote the interest and happiness of the native inhabitants of the British dominions in India;" added, "and that the principles of the British Government, on which the natives of India have hitherto relied for the free exercise of their religion, be inviolably maintained."

Lieutenant-General Sir Charles James Napier is an extremely ill-used man. A brave officer, a skilful and victorious commander, an able and energetic ruler,—all these great qualities have not protected him from shameful treatment. Posterity will scarcely believe that he has been accused of having received a large amount of prize-money, whereas, although it was allotted to him, he had not actually touched the money, and, for aught we know, does not mean to touch it; and that the sum was scandalously asserted to be 70,000*l.*, whereas it does not exceed 69,000*l.* and a fraction. With the magnanimity which belongs to noble minds, Sir Charles, having traced this terrible calumny to Sir James Weir Hogg, does not, as a malicious adversary would do, take advantage of the aggravating circumstance that Sir James is a baronet, but most mercifully treats him as “a man,” although Sir James has acted towards him like the “wicked uncle” in the story, Sir Charles being one of the “babes in the wood.” Further than this, Mr. Baillie, a member of Parliament, by telling the House of Commons, upon the authority of Sir James Hogg, that Sir Charles had received the money which was only to be received, “injured him in many ways,” and yet Sir Charles is so charitable and forbearing as not to disclose one of them, enduring, out of regard for the feelings of Mr. Baillie, the complicated injury in silence. All this is abominable. Silly people may fancy that it would have been a wiser as well as a more dignified course, if the Lieutenant-General, having such very stanch friends as “the Duke of Wellington, Lords Ellenborough and Hardinge, and the Lords of the Treasury,” who would see him righted, had not suffered himself to be discomposed at even so audacious a wrong: but “the least spot is visible upon ermine,” and we advise Sir Charles Napier, whenever he feels himself aggrieved in this way, never to lose time by consulting a cool-headed, apathetic friend, but always to lay his griefs at once before the public in his own simple style, and he may depend upon justice being done to him.

THE PYRAMIDS OF GIZEH.—It was something to know, on quitting this scene of hoar antiquity, that our feet had trodden the spot, and our eyes had gazed on objects which have rivetted the attention of the mightiest and the noblest men of all ages. The humblest pilgrim, pacing the Lybian sands around him, while he is conscious that he walks in the footsteps of so many renowned men, imagines himself to be for an instant admitted into their illustrious conclave. Persian satraps, Macedonian heroes, Grecian bards, sages, and historians, Roman warriors, all,—of every age, and nation, and religion,—have participated his feelings and trodden the same ground. Every spot he beholds, every stone he rests upon, has witnessed the coming of the fathers of law, literature, and the arts,—Orpheus, Musæus, Homer, Lycurgus, Solon, Pythagoras, Plato, Plutarch.—Fish's Travels.

“The Ranees of Daoudnagur, to whom I had sent a copy of the Gospels by the pundit, returned her compliments, and desired to know what must be done to obtain benefit from the book,—whether prayer, or making a salam to it?”—Martyn's Journal.

Captain Margary, of Poona, has discovered that an excellent water-cement may be made of the red and black soils of the Deccan.

THE SIKHS are strictly Unitarians, or Monotheists. Nanuk, their founder,—deducing his religious notions from the Kabir Pantis of India, who admit of but one God, the creator of the world,—taught that devotion was due to one God alone; that forms were immaterial, and that Hindu and Mahomedan modes of worship (where not idolatrous) were the same in the sight of the Deity.—Thornton's History of the Punjab.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER has addressed a letter to the Times, with reference to the Scinde prize-money, which must be given in full, in order that the nature of the wrong he has suffered, and of which he complains, may be understood:—“Sir,—Mr. Baillie's letter of the 21st instant is so weak, that a few remarks are enough. 1. The facts in my letter are accurately stated, and have been admitted by Sir James Hogg and Mr. Baillie themselves; although, 2. Mr. Baillie says—‘I never stated to Sir Charles Napier, as he says in his letter, that Sir James Hogg had directed me to make the statement to the house.’ Begging Mr. Baillie's pardon, this is a mere evasion. In the first place, my memory I believe to be as good as Mr. Baillie's memory, and I maintain that he said to me what I stated. However, I will concede to Mr. Baillie that his memory is the best of the two. What then? Whether Sir James Hogg said to Mr. Baillie, while the latter was speaking, ‘tell them he has received 70,000*l.*’ or said to Mr. Baillie, ‘Sir C. Napier has received 70,000*l.*’ makes not an iota of difference. The words uttered were for Mr. Baillie's use, and to injure me. Mr. Baillie did use them, and did injure me in many ways. I do not mean as to rewards for services, for I have always been perfectly satisfied with the approbation of those under whom I served, and of the country—I have received both. 3. Mr. Baillie goes on to say that my letter would lead the public to infer that I was an ‘ill-used man, whom the Court of Directors (who had nothing to do with the matter) had attempted to defraud of his just rights.’ Exactly so, Mr. Baillie, except your parenthesis. Only let me set your parenthesis right, by recommending an English dictionary to you, and there you will find that ‘trustees’ for the distribution of other men's property have something ‘to do with the matter.’—Having thus, I hope, added to Mr. Baillie's stock of knowledge, I will conclude with the observation made by a very clever person, when hearing that the interested Court of Directors were made trustees for the Scinde prize-money—‘It is like making the wicked uncle the trustee for the babes in the wood.’ Just so! But I preferred an appeal to the Lords of the Treasury to eating blackberries! and so I take my leave, for the present, of Sir James Weir Hogg and Mr. Baillie. I remain, C. J. Napier, Lieutenant-General. Cheltenham, Oct. 24.”

Sir Charles has also written to the Standard, reiterating his charges against Sir James Hogg, and citing, in proof that the Court of Directors had not acted fairly towards him, the following resolution of the Court:

“At a Court of Directors, 10th February, 1847, the Court, advertent to the report of the Political and Military Committee, dated and read in court on the 3rd inst., and ordered to lie for consideration, submitting the committee's opinions on the following points connected with the Scinde booty, which the government of India, in their letter of Oct. 23, 1846, No. III., have referred for the Court's decision, namely—1st. The portion or share of the booty to be assigned to Major General, now Lieutenant General, Sir C. Napier, G.C.B.; and 2d. The amount of interest to be allowed on the said booty; and the committee's report being again read, it was resolved that Sir C. Napier, not being a commander-in-chief, will, according to the usage of the army in India, share in the Scinde booty as a major-general commanding the troops in Scinde, and that as such, according to the prevalent usage, he should receive one-sixteenth of the booty. That this decision, adopted by the Court, as trustees appointed by the Crown, be notified to the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, according to the terms of the royal warrant, which forced the Court to such notification.” If this be a correct copy of the Court's resolution, it is certainly an odd one, for it resolves that the Court was under compulsion,—forced to ratify what it resolved should be ratified.

THE WALLACHIAN WOMEN wear a great quantity of hair braided and twisted round their heads. The hair is often of different colours, for it is of several generations,—the mother's, grandmother's, great grandmother's, &c., which each woman inherits and wears mingled with her own.

COUNTRY HORSES IN INDIA.—The pugnacious propensity to which all country horses are more or less addicted is one of the great drawbacks to equestrian exercise in India; it often happens that one is aroused from a pleasant conversation with a companion by a lion-roar from his or your horse; a kick and fight follow, and if you escape a broken leg, you often get a bad fall.—Fane's Five Years in India.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

A Letter to the Right Honourable Lord John Russell, M.P., on the subject of Indian Railways. By an East-India Merchant. Smith, Elder, and Co.

THE author of this pamphlet, after some prefatory remarks upon the benefits conferred by railways generally and the great advantage which this mode of intercommunication would bestow upon India,—the interior of which "remains, with small excep-tion, a jungle almost unexplored, and comparatively uncultivated; while produce, which might yield food and employment for mil-lions who pine in misery, rots on the ground for want of the means of conveyance,"—proceeds to "trace the origin and pro-gress of the negotiations on Indian railways, with a view to point out the errors that have been committed, and to avert, if pos-sible, the apparently impending failure of the design." He then gives, in detail, the whole of the correspondence which passed between the Court of Directors of the East-India Company and the East Indian Railway Company, for the purpose of shewing that the misunderstanding respecting the guarantee by the former of £5 per cent. interest upon the capital of the rail-way company paid to the East-India Company was, in fact, no misunderstanding, but that "both parties were negotiating on a mutual understanding that a guaranteed return on the capital was a necessary means to the end," and that the Court of Di-rectors did really guarantee an assurance of profit to that extent. Having established this point to his own satisfaction, the writer next inquires the causes which led the Court of Directors to change their views, and in fact resile from their engagements,—conduct which, if one could be convinced of it, would deserve the epithets of "unnatural and extraordinary," by which the writer has designated it. He discovers these causes in "the great difference of opinion which, it is known, has existed, through-out the whole of the discussions on the railway question amongst the members of the Court of Directors, on the policy connected with it;" and the discordant views of the officers of the Com-pany; "the Court and its officers appearing, with few exceptions, to have been unanimous only on one point, that of throwing ob-stacles in the way of the companies." The motive for this dis-ingenuous proceeding on the part of the Court of Directors is not clearly indicated, but it is supposed by the writer to be a sudden determination "to take the administration of railways into thei own control."

From the source whence this publication evidently originates, it is not to be expected that the question could be discussed without a bias. We have shewn on former occasions that the course pursued by the Court of Directors has been intelligible and consistent from the beginning; this is clear from the very correspondence quoted by the writer; and we believe that the Court continues of the same opinion as when the subject was first broached, that "railroads in India should be constructed and managed as they are in this country, by means of private enter-prize and capital."

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES.

IN ONE VOLUME ROYAL OCTAVO, PRICE £2. 12s. 6d.

A DICTIONARY
HINDUSTANI-ENGLISH & ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.,

Professor of Oriental Languages in the King's College, London; Member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland; Member of the Asiatic Society of Paris; and author of several Works on the Hindustani and Persian Languages.

This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgement of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—may now be procured. It contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

ELEMENTARY WORKS RECENTLY PUBLISHED

GRAMMAR of the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE, in the Oriental and Roman Characters, with numerous copper-plate Illustrations of the Persian and Devanagari Systems of Alphabetic Writing. To which is added, a copious Selection of Easy Extracts for reading in the Persian and Devanagari Characters, forming a complete Introduction to the Bagh-o-Bahar, together with a Vocabulary and explanatory Notes. By DUNCAN FORBES. 8vo. cloth 12s.

HINDUSTANI MANUAL: A Pocket Companion for those who visit India in any capacity; intended to facilitate the essential attainments of conversing with fluency, and composing with accuracy, in the most useful of all the languages spoken in our Eastern Empire.

IN TWO PARTS.

PART I.—A compendious Grammar of the Language, with Exercises on its more prominent peculiarities; together with a Selection of useful Phrases, Dialogues, and Subjects for translation into English.

PART II.—A Vocabulary of useful Words, English and Hindustani; showing at the same time the difference of idiom between the two Languages.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

Second Edition, considerably improved. 18mo. bd. 5s. 6d.

Extracted from the "Friend of India," published at Serampore:—

"We have been favoured with a copy of the 'Hindustani Manual,' published by Dr. FORBES, the Professor of Oriental Languages and Literature in King's College, London. It is a small duodecimo volume of 186 pages, within which narrow space more instruction is condensed than is to be found in works four times its size and cost. . . . The Work can be honestly recommended to all who are desirous of acquiring the elements of the language, or of making themselves understood among the people of this country. We have seldom, if ever, seen such a small pocket companion with such a variety of useful instruction. The language of the Vocabulary and of the Dialogues appears quite unexceptionable. Any one acquainted with Hindustani will at once recognize its idiomatic accuracy, and cheerfully recommend it to the notice of all those who desire to come out to India not altogether unprepared to convey their own wishes to those who surround them."

BAGH-O-BAHAR; consisting of entertaining Tales. By MIR ANJUM, of Delhi. A new edition, carefully collated with original Manuscripts, having the essential vowel points and punctuation marked throughout. To which is added, a Vocabulary of the Words occurring in the Work. H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS, &c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavor to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the utmost despatch will be used in the shipments from London.

H. and T. PEAT feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are not of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior qualities. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12 H. saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9 lbs., as present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. P. cannot be accountable for any damage the same may receive after shipment.

BEAUTIFUL TEETH.—ROWLANDS' ODONTO,

OF PEARL DENTIFRICE,—a white powder, compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the Oriental herbal, of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and in giving sweetness and perfume to the breath. It extirpates all tartarous adhesions to the teeth, and insures a pearl-like whiteness to the enamelled surface. Its anti-septic and anti-scorbutic properties exercise a highly beneficial and salutary influence; they arrest the further progress of decay of the teeth, induce a healthy action of the gums, and cause them to assume the brightness and colour indicative of perfect soundness; while, by confirming their adhesion to the teeth, they give unlimited enjoyment and fresh zest to appetite, by perpetuating elastic and complete mastication. The Proprietors of this Dentifrice pledge themselves that its efficacy in preserving and embellishing the teeth far surpasses anything of the kind ever yet offered to the public, and has, in consequence, obtained its selection by her Majesty the Queen, the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe.—Price 2s. 9d. per box. CAUTION.—To protect the public from fraud, the Proprietors have directed the Proprietors' name and address, thus, "A. ROWLANDS and SON, 53, HATTON GARDEN," to be engraved on the Government stamp, which is affixed on each box.

ROWLANDS' ALSANA EXTRACT, for relieving the tooth-ache, gum-boils, and swelled face, and which, by constantly using, prevents those maladies. In the anguish of excruciating pain, it affords instantaneous relief. It is perfectly innocent in its nature.—3s. 6d. 6s. 6d., and 10s. 6d. per bottle. The Government Stamp, as on the "Odonto," is affixed on each bottle. Sold by the Proprietors, and by Chemists & Perfumers.—Beware of spurious imitations!

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote Emigration, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CASH-PASSENGER OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 68 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at St. GEORGE'S CASCART, LIVERPOOL.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

THE posture of affairs at Mooltan and throughout the Panjab, at the date of the latest advices brought by this mail, was somewhat more favourable than might have been expected, under the circumstances detailed in our last summary. Time was of infinite value to the British army awaiting reinforcements, and opportunity was equally precious to our enemies; if the latter have been unable to avail themselves of a fortnight's intermission of hostilities to strike a blow, they have played our game; they have not only proclaimed their own weakness, but lost a vast amount of moral force, whilst our army is daily approximating to overwhelming strength. More authentic accounts from the scene of operations, moreover, enable us to contradict a report noticed (in terms of doubt) in our last issue, that the British forces before Mooltan had been obliged to make a further retreat to a distance of 18 miles. This report originated probably in a resolution expressed by the general to send the heavy guns to Soojabad, 25 miles distant. It now appears that the British forces remained, up to the 1st October, without having experienced any serious molestation, in their camp, four or five miles south-south-west of the town, and about the same distance east of the Chenab.

We take up the narrative of occurrences before Mooltan from the date of the raising of the siege, on the 15th September. During that day, the large guns were withdrawn, under a heavy fire from the trenches; the horse artillery then followed, and towards dusk the whole of the infantry retired; the entire operation being effected without a single casualty. Early on the following morning, the troops commenced their march for the position assigned them, crossing the large canal to Soorajkhoond (through Major Edwards's camp), seven miles to the south-west of the town. As we before stated, owing to the impossibility of procuring carriage, a large quantity of stores and about twenty-five camel-loads of ammunition were left behind. Major Edwards's horse and a few of Colonel Cortlandt's guns protected the flanks of the retiring army, for the enemy appears to have made several attempts, or rather demonstrations, to attack our troops, and upon one occasion they hovered round the second (Ferozepore) division at a distance of 900 yards, and when Cortlandt's guns played upon them, they returned the fire. Our camp was, however, gained without the loss of a man. This first position was two miles south of Mooltan. The 17th and 18th were employed in clearing the front and rear of jungle; on the 19th a large body of the enemy moved down towards the camp, in the direction of the river, but retrograded when our guns opened upon them. In the course of the day, the troops of the traitor Shere Singh, and a few Mooltanis, advanced to within a short distance of our camp, apparently with the intention of giving battle; but, after a partial fire, they retired. The position of the camp being now found to be objectionable, a new and more secure encampment was marked out about a mile in the rear.

Meanwhile, a spirit of defection seemed to be prevailing amongst the auxiliaries on both sides. A considerable body of Mussulman troops, in the pay of Moolraj, offered their services to Major Edwardes, but they were declined; on the other hand, the Sikh commander, Mallee Singh, who, with 1,000 men, had been left to guard the bunds (or dykes) of the river ten miles higher up, to prevent inundations and to straiten the besieged, and another sirdar, Bhoor Singh, had joined Moolraj, with most of their followers. The bunds were destroyed by Mallee Singh, and the ditch around the city was replenished with water, to the great relief of the Mooltanis. These indications of general treachery induced General Whish to dismiss from his camp all the Durbar chiefs and all the troops whose fidelity was at all doubtful. Shere Singh is represented as having written letters to the Sikh commanders in our camp, inviting them to imitate his example, and amongst them Colonel Cortlandt, whom he reminded that he had "eaten the salt" of Maharaja Runjeet Singh, and that, for the honour of the Khalsa, he was bound to join Moolraj.

On the 23rd, General Whish sent out a strong reconnoitring party, composed of European and native troops, with eight horse-artillery guns, to make a demonstration. According to one statement, this operation was conducted in a very ostentatious manner, in sight of the fort and city; and when our troops turned towards their camp, a strong body of the enemy, under Shere Singh, with artillery, followed and attacked the rear column before they reached their lines. Another account states that Major Edwardes, with a large body of his cavalry and some guns, turned out against the enemy, who, after exchanging some long balls, retired. During this day, Moolraj himself brought some guns within range of our camp, and fired for two hours, with little effect. The following day, the camp was again moved a couple of miles further off; and this movement was the signal for a fresh attempt of the enemy, which, though commenced in a more imposing manner, proved as abortive as the preceding. Columns of dust in front and on the left of the British camp indicated the approach of the enemy, who halted at the distance of about a mile and a half, to reconnoitre. The gallant Edwardes, who, always foremost in the fray, seems to make a sure impression upon the Mooltanis, dashed out with cavalry and artillery, and, after a smart cannonade, which lasted "an hour or two," the enemy returned to the town. The new position finally taken up by our army was that before described, equidistant from Mooltan and the Chenab. The 11th regular cavalry were on the extreme left; the 22nd N. I. on the right the 51st N.I. facing to the rear; Cortlandt's and Edwardes's camp being half a mile to the right. Two batteries of large guns on mounds, on the left and right centre, commanded all sides of the camp; and cavalry pickets, in advance of those of the infantry, secured it against surprise. The communication with Bhawalpore was kept open by the Bhawalporeans.

Since the occupation of this camp, which the troops were daily employed in strengthening, the enemy had offered little molestation, and no apprehension was felt as to the ability of the British commander to maintain his position until joined by the Bengal force, about the second week in December. On the 1st October, an escort had been sent down to the river to guard a large supply of treasure and ammunition just arrived from Ferozepore.

Some slight accidental advantages on our part had, in the mean time, tended to distress the enemy. Two lakhs of rupees, on their way from Lahore, for Shere Singh, had fallen into the hands of General Whish, at a moment when he was so pressed for money for the troops that he had requested the loan of that identical sum from our ally, the Khan of Bhawalpore. Four hundred camels laden with grain, of which the camp was greatly in need, were captured by the enterprising Edwardes, and a large quantity of ammunition, on its way to Mooltan, was seized on the river by our steamers.

All the accounts agree in stating that great jealousy and discord exist between Moolraj and his new ally, Shere Singh, who, it is said, has threatened to leave the Dewan and join his father, Chuttoor Singh, in the Hazareh country. The following incident is mentioned, as having fomented their mutual suspicions. A letter was written by Major Edwardes, in the name of General Whish, and addressed to Shere Singh, thanking him for his successful scheme, and congratulating him on its approaching fruition; the writer taking care that the letter should fall into the hands of Moolraj, who, already distrustful of the sirdar, openly taxed him with treachery. None of Shere Singh's men are allowed by the Dewan to enter the fort, and it is said that some hundreds of them, disgusted at their treatment, deserted, and joined Major Edwardes's levies. On the other hand, two regiments and four guns had been sent to Mooltan by Chuttoor Singh, which made the force of Moolraj full 20,000 men. Daily reinforcements, it is likewise said, were arriving, chiefly of Manja Sikhs; and the great day of the Dusserah (October the 7th) had been fixed for a grand attack upon our camp,—an event to which our troops, who were in the highest spirits, were looking forward with impatience, lamenting only that the caution of the general restrained them from avenging the death of their brave companions. There was very little sickness in the camp; the wounded, notwithstanding the heat, were doing well: the officers were fast recovering, except Lieutenant Christopher, I.N., and Lieutenant Hollinsworth, 10th foot.

Very unfavourable criticisms upon the proceedings of General Whish are published in the Indian papers; but this is the fate of every unfortunate commander.

"All the letters which we have seen," says the Englishman, "agree that the greatest despondency prevails in the enemy's camp, and that their sufferings from the bombardment had been such that they could not have held out many days longer. A less cautious man than General Whish would have weighed the moral effect of taking Mooltan against that of a retreat, and would have held on to the last, confident that at all events he would be reinforced in a short time." On the other hand, we (at home) have the testimony of Lord Hardinge in justification of the general.

The capital of the Lahore territories continued tranquil, thanks, perhaps, to the prompt measures adopted by the British authorities. As we stated in our last Summary, the fort of Govindghur had been promptly occupied by British troops. Instead of its being in a dismantled state, as represented by the Durbar, no less than fifty guns, and plentiful stores of ammunition and provisions, were found concealed there. A letter from an officer belonging to the detachment states that the garrison had been taken quite by surprise; that, on being turned out of the fort, the Sikh soldiers were "sullen and sulky," and that the people, both there and at Umritsur, were in an excited state. Lieutenant-Colonel McSherry had assumed the command of this "sacred" fortress, garrisoned for the first time by British troops. The Dusserah, always a critical period at Lahore, was looked for with some anxiety. A letter from the city avers that "no less than 4,000 armed Sikhs, in Lahore, were only waiting their time to rise in the night, and murder every English officer;" and that "every Sikh in the Punjab is prepared to rise, at the Dusserah festival." Letters from Shere Singh had been received by some of the sirdars, and by the prime minister, Raja Tej Singh, who carried his card of invitation to treachery to the Resident.

The only fresh outbreak, since the last advices, has been amongst the Durbar's troops in the district of Bunnoo, in Eastern Afghanistan, consisting of four regiments of infantry, 500 horse, with 12 guns, who mutinied as soon as Shere Singh's defection was known, and besieged the governor, Futteh Khan, Tawana, in the fort of Dhuleepgur, lately built by the British authorities for the establishment of the Maharaja's power over the Affghans in that valley! Late accounts from Lahore state that this rebellion had been subdued.

In the Hazareh country, Chuttoor Singh was at Hareepore, watched by Captain Abbott at Nara, Lieutenant Nicolson at Futteh Jung, and Lieutenant Herbert at Attok. After the skirmish at the Margulla Pass, he had been prevented from joining the Gundia brigade for some time; but the treachery or cowardice of the men under Captain Abbott and Lieutenant Nicolson enabled him to effect a junction at Mansera. It appears that Chuttoor Singh, by a forced march, reached Hureepore from the Margulla Pass, closely followed by Lieutenant Nicolson, who threw himself between the Sirdar and the Gundia brigade, with the view of relieving the blockade maintained by Lieutenant Robinson. Captain Abbott took up a position commanding the only other road, and there waited for two days, during which Chuttoor Singh appeared to hesitate. On the third, however, he advanced, and Nicholson's Moolkeas, of whom his force chiefly consisted, either through cowardice or treachery, fled, and the junction was effected. Nicolson retreated on Futteh Jung, and Chuttoor Singh halted at Mansera, it is supposed with the intention of marching towards Lahore. The British officers were too weak to attack the rebel sirdar, who had six regular regiments of infantry, besides cavalry and irregular levies, and 14 guns; indeed, Captain Abbott expected to be attacked by him. Chuttoor Singh is said to have written to the Baraksye sirdars, promising them Peshawur if they would aid his designs. He is also reported to have levied contributions in the Salt Range across the Jelum, whilst his son, Oedah Singh, had taken possession of Rotas, frightening away Raja Deena Nath, who had been despatched upon a peaceful mission into the disturbed districts. The troops ordered from Jullundur against Chuttoor Singh had reached Tanda on the 28th September.

The rebel, Ram Singh, who had raised a disturbance at Noorpore, and whose total defeat is confirmed, narrowly escaped capture in the jungle near Hareepore, whither he had been traced by Ferris's Hill Rangers: he was wounded, but escaped, leaving his papers in the hands of his pursuers. Upwards of 200 men, connected with his affair, have been taken prisoners.

At Peshawur, up to the 26th September, everything continued quiet; but the apprehensions of Major Lawrence are sufficiently indicated by the sudden departure of Mrs. Lawrence and his family for Lahore, on the night of the 22nd, escorted by 500 Affghans. Hopes are, however, entertained that the Sikh troops will remain staunch; but the British resident's position there is a hazardous one whilst the Hazareh country remains in a state of disorder.

Golab Singh is still suspected of being deeply concerned in the Punjab plot, and there are rumours of extensive warlike preparations in Cashmere. The Maharaja is accused of being still in correspondence with Chuttoor Singh, his old instrument of political intrigue. He is represented to have written both to the British resident at Lahore and to Maharaja Dhuleep Singh, disavowing all complicity with the defections going on in his army, which he professed his inability to check.

Assuming the existence of a general conspiracy throughout the Punjab, it would be doing injustice to such a man as Golab Singh to suppose that he was alone,

— "amongst innumerable false,
Unshaken, unseduced, unterrified."

But we are told by the Bombay Times, that an opinion is becoming pretty general,—and the stationary character of the disaffection seems to strengthen it,—that "the present position of our affairs is not so much the result of any deep-rooted or wide-spread conspiracy, as of the system of hesitation and mismanagement which has brought traitors successively into the field, by showing that, for a time at least, treason might escape unpunished, and leading them to expect that it might in the end be successful."

If the authorities be open to this reproach for their past conduct, they are endeavouring to repair the error by present activity. An army of reserve, of about 20,000 men, is assembling at Ferozepore, under the immediate superintendence of the Commander-in-Chief, who was expected at that station on the 2nd November; whilst a force of 7,000 men had been ordered to assemble at Roree, in Upper Scinde, on the 1st November, under Major-General Auchmuty. Troops are said to be assembling from all quarters; regiments even from Mhow, Nussereabad, and Cawnpore having been called up. Officers on detached duty have been everywhere ordered to join their regiments, and the Bengal forces are to be reinforced from Madras and Bombay. That the Government is determined to put down the extensive disaffection in the Punjab with a strong hand, is apparent from these vast preparations, and also from an expression which the Calcutta papers ascribe to the Governor-General, who, at a festive assembly at Barrackpore, shortly before he left Calcutta for the north-west, declared that, notwithstanding all his hopes and expectations of peace, the Sikhs would have war, "and war they should have with a vengeance." The policy of annexing the whole of the Punjab is still seriously discussed, and the Bombay Telegraph infers that we shall not stop short of that measure, from the fact of an order being issued for raising the infantry regiments of the Bengal army to 1,000 men each, and completing the regiments of irregular cavalry to 500 men each, being an augmentation of 18,000 men.

These speculations are crude and hasty; the conquest of the entire country, if it were just and prudent, is not quite so practicable as some of these writers conceive. "It would be idle to conceal from ourselves or from others," observes the Friend of India—

"That our position in the Punjab, surrounded by open foes and treacherous friends, is at the present time most critical. It is said by the Meerut paper that General Ventura is in the Punjab, directing these movements; but even without the aid of his military experience and judgment, the universal feeling of insubordination which animates all the Sikhs, gentle and simple, the existence in the field of armies amounting to more than 25,000 men against us, and the doubtful fidelity of Gholab Singh, render it necessary for us to put forth all our strength to maintain our footing in that country, and to prevent the rolling down of another tide of barbarian fury on our own provinces. If we should meet with any reverses, an army of 60,000 men would immediately appear in the field against us, as fully equipped, and as formidable, as that which it cost us four victories to drive across the Sutlege."

The intelligence from Afghanistan and Central Asia is meagre, owing (according to the Delhi Gazette) to an interruption in the communication between Lahore and the Western frontier of the Punjab. An insurrection against the authority of the Ameer of Cabul had broken out in the Western Hazereh country, so that Dost Mahomed Khan, who, it is surmised, desires to dabble a little in Punjabi politics, has work provided for him at home.

Throughout British India the most perfect tranquillity prevailed. The Governor-General was on his way to the north-west. His departure was preceded by numerous festivities; the investiture of Sir John Littler and Sir Dudley Hill with the Order of the Bath, on the 29th September, at Government-House, by Lord Dalhousie, attracted all the élite of the presidency; this was followed by a grand ball by the Governor-General and the Countess on the 2nd October, and a farewell entertainment given to the Earl and Countess by the military at Barrackpore. These festivities relieved the periodical gloom which impends over the City of Palaces during the Doorga Poojah holidays. "It is supposed," the Englishman says, "that the Government will require a loan for the present warlike operations. If higher terms should be offered (and some persons expect it will be a 6 per cent. loan), our money market will be seriously affected. Our joint-stock banks have been long taking deposits on interest, and they must either outbid the Government, or submit to the withdrawal of all that are not held for long terms." With respect to the assessment scheme of the Union Bank, the Hurkaru states it has been much criticised. "During the first week of the new liquidation scheme, creditors representing forty-one of the fifty lakhs of debts gave their assent to it, and it is believed that nearly all the rest will come in." The Englishman understands "that a very large number of the creditors have assented, but the payment of the assessments, estimated at fifty-two lakhs, gets on very slowly, and it is thought that not more than half will be eventually realized."

At Madras there is little to notice. The Governor contemplated a tour through the presidency. Assistant-surgeon Daubeny had been tried before the Supreme Court on the charge of having murdered the infant of Mrs. Freer, and acquitted. The reconciliation between the Nizam and Suraj-ool-Moolk has proved only skin-deep; his Highness entertaining as strong a repugnance as ever to co-operate with his minister.

The Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Bombay had returned to the presidency; beyond this incident, the papers supply no local news of the slightest interest.

The Ceylon rebellion is entirely quelled. The principal rebels have been tried, and executed or transported en masse. The pretender to the Kandian throne, King Mootoozawmy, has also been captured; but his fate is not yet decided on.

BENGAL.

OPERATIONS BEFORE MOOLTAN.

During the 15th September the large guns were withdrawn, under a heavy but ineffectual fire, from the trenches, which was accomplished, under the directions of Major Wheeler, by one in the afternoon. The horse artillery guns followed about sunset; and when it became dusk the whole of the infantry retired, leaving a small detachment of infantry as a piquet in the Ram Teerat. So ably had the operations throughout the day been conducted, that not a single casualty occurred on our side. During the night the tents were struck and the baggage packed ready for a start. Early on the morning of the 16th the army was put in motion, and commenced its march. It crossed the large canal to Soorujkhoond, seven miles to the south-west of the city,—1,500 of Edwardes's horse and a few of Cortlandt's guns protecting our flanks. The 2nd or Ferozepore brigade of infantry, and the 11th cavalry, with the heavy ordnance and the greater portion of the baggage, under command of Brigadier Saker, started at an early hour; the 1st or Lahore brigade, with the 11th irregular cavalry, under Brigadier Hervey, remaining on the ground till everything had left. It was unfortunately found impossible to procure carriage for all the ammunition and stores; so that a large quantity of the latter, and about twenty-five camel-loads of shot and shell, had to be left behind,—notwithstanding the exertions made for their removal, the sowars of the irregular cavalry each taking away one on his saddle-bow. Brigadier Hervey's appointment to a command seems from the first to have been looked upon as matter of evil omen, and on the first occasion on which he found himself in difficulty he nearly subjected us to disaster. He, with H. M.'s 10th foot, the 8th Native Infantry, and four of McKenzie's guns, followed the 2nd brigade, leaving a guard under Major Wheeler, consisting of the 52nd N.I., two squadrons from the 7th and 11th irregular cavalry, and the remaining two of McKenzie's guns, to bring on the shot and shell for the carriage of which cattle could not at first be obtained. Through the exertions of Captain Christie, however, a number of camels were shortly afterwards procured, and they were loaded with the greater portion of the ammunition under the fire of the enemy's artillery, which had seized the village in which our headquarters had been encamped, and advanced on to the plain within point-blank range of our guard; now strengthened by some police horse, and a couple of guns under Lieut. Pollock. As above stated, each irregular horseman took a shot or a shell before him on his saddle-bow, and the remainder were abandoned. The cavalry were now extended in line in front of the infantry, and the whole searched camp in safety. Just as they were about leaving the ground, the corps which had been so injudiciously ordered away by Brigadier Hervey, returned, this retrograde having been made at the urgent request of Col. Franks of the 10th foot, so soon as the firing was heard from the guns in the rear. The only bad consequence arising from the weakening of the guards fortunately was the unnecessary march of one portion of the brigade and the detention of the whole under arms nearly ten hours, as they did not reach camp till two o'clock. The force of Moolraj was in the field; luckily for the party left behind by Brigadier Hervey, he did not bring it to bear on them, or they most likely would have been hard set. Cortlandt's guns played on the enemy hovering around the Ferozepore division at a distance of nine hundred yards, which was returned by them, but without effect. Our camp was gained without the loss of a man. During the 17th and 18th the bikaners were employed cutting down the jungle from the front and rear of our position. On the 19th a large body of the enemy were observed moving in the direction of the river, when one of our guns opened on them, which quickly made them turn on their path, two being killed and four made prisoners. News was this day received in camp that some of Sher-e-Singh's men, who were still kept without the walls of Mooltan, had gone towards Lahore to intercept £20,000 on its way to their chief as pay for his troops. A few shots were fired from the fort, with the view, apparently, of intimidating our cavalry patrols from advancing too near the walls. A royal salute was also fired from the city—cause unknown. A considerable body of Moolraj's Mussulman troops this day applied to Lieutenant Edwardes for employment, but their services were declined. The troops of Sher-e-Singh, with a few from the Dewan's army, during the day advanced to within a short distance of our camp, with the intention of giving battle. Preparations were made for their reception: a partial fire was opened, when the enemy returned to the city. Preparations were now making to retire a mile further back to a more secure encampment; and Major Napier with a couple of other engineer officers, had been despatched to the banks of the Chenab to pitch on a spot where the siege was might be intrenched and left to take care of themselves in case of the force being compelled to move out against the enemy, now daily threatening to give them battle. Several Sikh chiefs who had come into our camp from Mooltan, were directed to proceed to Lahore, and others were about to be dismissed—all those in fact connected with the Durbar,—so as to get quit of all the troops whose loyalty was doubtful. On the 20th, the Sikh chief Mallee Singh, who with one thousand men had been left to guard the bunds in the river ten miles higher up, proceeded with a portion of his men to join the Dewan. Sirdar Bhoor Singh, with a considerable body of followers, also went over to the enemy. A letter was received from the governor of Bunnoo by Lieutenant Edwardes, intimating that as the Sikhs under him were inclined to turn against us, he had engaged a number of the Mulkees (Musulman) population, who engaged to put the Sikhs out of the way of molesting us, provided the plunder which should fall into their hands should be allowed them for their trouble. He was written to in reply that the Mulkees were to be allowed to do as they wished, the only condition being that the Sikhs should be prevented from crossing the Indus and advancing on Mooltan. Four native chiefs were at the same time despatched by Edwardes to Dhera Ismael Khan to watch the passes into Bunnoo and other places, and prevent the disaffected in those districts from joining the malcontents of the former province. A further detachment was despatched to occupy Rungpoor, north of Mooltan, with a view to prevent any further bodies of rebels from joining the Moolraj from Lahore. Shere Singh would appear to have been attempting to draw off several of the chiefs in our camp from their allegiance, and, amongst the rest, sent a letter to General Cortlandt, reminding him that he had "eaten the salt" of Maharajah Runjeet Singh, and that for the honour of the Khanda he ought to join the Moolraj. "On the morning of the 23rd," says a correspondent, "all the right wings of regts. were ordered to parade, European regts. made up to 400 strong and N.I. regts. to 320, with eight horse artillery guns, and the cavalry brigade, to make a demonstration (of what)? and accordingly at 6 o'clock A.M. away we went, the 1st N.I. brigade drawn up on the right front, and the 2nd N.I. brigade and cavalry on the left front—four horse artillery guns, with each brigade—and marched away in open columns of companies, along the front of our camps, and so that we could be seen from the foot and city. After we had walked for about two hours, or nearly that, we turned about to go home; but no sooner had we done so than we heard the drums in the city beat to arms, and before long out came Moolraj's men (said to have been under command of Shere Singh himself) and a lot of guns, and they commenced peppering away at our rear columns, and away we went to our lines. As soon as we had got there, Moolraj, too, made a demonstration, but of a very different kind, for he showed us he could annoy us, whereas we could not annoy him, and consequently brought up his guns within range of our camp, and fired away like mad (though fortunately one sepoy and one horse only were killed) so that we were all ordered to remain under arms, ready to turn out at a minute's notice. After bullying us for about two hours and a half, or perhaps more, he retired—to eat his dinner I fancy, for he has left us alone from that time to the present." Another correspondent writes:—"We remained tolerably quiet in our new camp until the 23rd, when it having been previously arranged that we should change ground again, a demonstration was made by General Whish in the form of a reconnoitring party. At daybreak of the above date, the right wings of regiments moved out with some horse artillery and squadrons of cavalry, and advanced a few hundred yards in front of the picquets unmolested. They had hardly returned to camp when the enemy appeared in great force, with apparently the whole of his troops drawn out in array. Edwardes soon proceeded with a large body of cavalry, and some guns, to check their movements. Some long balls were fired by the parties, without more harm on our side than a sepoy (of the 51st) and a camp-follower killed. Some of the shots tumbled into the European picquets and cavalry videttes, without doing any mischief, however. After keeping the sepoys and other troops under arms for some hours (whereby the former lost their dinners), we slowly dispersed to enjoy the shade of our tents. All due precautions were taken in case of a nocturnal visit, but we were permitted to enjoy unbroken rest on that night." On the 24th the park and heavy guns were moved back a couple of miles into a better position, and on the morning of the 25th the force followed. The European corps moved off the ground first—the 9th and 52nd N.I., with two guns and a squadron of Skinner's horse, being left as rearguard to see everything into camp, which they reached about ten o'clock. They had been but a short while in their tents when they were again called to arms by the arrival of General Cortlandt with the intelligence that the enemy were advancing in force. Their approach was indicated by columns of dust in front and on the left. When within a mile and a half of our camp, they halted in a date-grove to reconnoitre. Edwardes, who on all occasions seem to have been foremost in the fray, sent out some artillery and cavalry, and a cannonade was kept up for an hour or two, when the enemy again sheered off and returned to the fort. They were on coming out determined to annihilate the Feringhees, but most probably distrusted one another, and so contented themselves with showing their teeth. The position now taken up by our force is described in the following manner by the Delhi Gazette; it is between four and five miles S.S.W. of the town, and the same distance east of the Chernaub,—the bushes having been cut down, wells sunk, and two batteries erected which commanded all sides of the camp.

FRONT N.N.E.

The 26th and 27th were passed in quietness, the troops being employed clearing away the brushwood around camp, and planting guns and howitzers in the batteries erected on the right and in front of the left column. A party of the enemy endeavoured on the first-named day to carry off a number of camels, but were punished for their temerity by a troop of the 7th Irregular horse. On the latter-mentioned date Lieutenant G. R. Taylor joined from Dhera Ismael Khan, from whence he had been recalled shortly before; and Colonel Drummond, quartermaster-general, left on a reconnoitring expedition: it was supposed his destination was the fort of Soojashad, twenty-five miles off, whither a party of officers had proceeded on the 24th to report on its eligibility as a depot for the siege guns, engineers' park, stores, &c. They returned to camp the same day. The 20,000, from Lahore, to intercept which a portion of Shere Singh's force had quitted Mooltan, fell into the hands of General Whish, who was at the time so much in want of cash for the troops, that he had requested a loan of like amount from our ally of Bahawalpore. Meanwhile the jealousy and mistrust betwixt the Moolraj and Rajah Shere Singh were daily becoming stronger: could they but have put faith in each other, our troops would have been harassed much more than they were in their movements. On the 27th, the men of the latter demanded a month's pay from the former, but he very coolly told them that as they had not yet fought with the Feringhees, they were not entitled to any wages from him. A letter is said to have been written, as if from General Whish, by Edwardes to Shere Singh, congratulating him on the approaching completion of the plot, and thanking him for his "successful schemes." Of course good care was taken that this should fall into the hands of Moolraj, who forthwith summoned a durbar and taxed the Sikh chief with treachery. Shere Singh was of course amazed beyond measure, and to prove his innocence of the charge brought against him, resolved to annihilate every one of our force he fell in with! The Dewan appeared satisfied with this; but the spirit of mistrust, before strong, was doubtless increased tenfold, which may in a great measure account for their backwardness in attacking us after three times coming almost within shot of us for that purpose. On the 28th, a party of officers, with a few cavalry, rode to within a few hundred yards of the walls of the city, but were neither molested nor did they see any of the enemy. This was probably a lure to entice them further on, when they would no doubt have seen rather too many of them. Four hundred camels laden with grain fell into the hands of Edwardes, which proved a god-send to us. A large quantity of ammunition on its way to the insurgents was seized on the river by the steamers. Two regiments and four guns joined the Moolraj this day from Chutter Singh's force. Our force was all the 29th and 30th engaged as on the two days previous, clearing away jungle; many of the sepoys are, however, said to have refused to do so. This is improbable, as they have all along shown themselves willing to work in any way they were directed. The 30th passed away nearly as quietly as the three preceding days. A party of the enemy's horse having got scent of a sum of about 4,000*l.* being on its way from Bahawalpore to Edwardes's camp, went out on the night of the 29th to intercept it. The convoy, however, eluded them. Determined not to return empty-handed, they pounced on a drove of about 200 of our camels, which were guarded by about seventy Lumsden's guide corps. The alarm was given in camp, when Capt. Plowden with the squadron of Skinner's horse was sent out to the rescue. The enemy had, however, gained a considerable distance before their pursuers were on their track, and escaped with their booty. A few of them were fell in with and cut down, our cavalry suffering an equal loss. On the night of the 29th the commander of the steamer Conqueror received intimation that his vessel was to be attacked. The steamer was immediately pushed into the middle of the stream, and every preparation made to receive her intended captors, who, however, did not make their appearance. The grain depot at Sirdarpoor had been pillaged by Mallee Singh's troops, and those of Bhoor Singh had maltreated the steamer's men and prevented the friendly natives from supplying her with fuel or supplies. The steamer Meanee reached Shere-Shah-ke-puttan from Ferozepore on the 30th with 50,000*l.* and a large supply of ammunition. A detachment of a wing of the 51st N.I. and a squadron of the cavalry was sent on the 1st October to escort the precious cargo into camp; and the steamer was ordered up to Sirdarpoor to the assistance of the Conqueror. The story of the two European soldiers taken prisoners on the 9th September by Moolraj having been first tortured and then hung, turns out to be false: one died of his wounds—the other, together with a rifleman of the 72nd, both wounded, were hospitably treated. Our troops fully expected a grand attack would be made on them by Moolraj on the day of the great festival of the Dusserah (7th Oct.). He was being daily reinforced from the Manjah, and would by that time probably have about 24,000 men collected, with about fifty guns. He was said to be determined at all events to see what could be done before reinforcements reached our camp. Shere Singh was still looked upon with distrust by Moolraj, and the force of the former were said to be greatly discontented at not having received their pay. Should the enemy give General Whish a fair fight in the open field, their defeat will be certain, as his force with the troops of Edwardes and the Bhawal Khan must be at least 20,000 men with about forty pieces of field artillery. Our troops continued in the highest health and spirits, longing for an opportunity to avenge the death of their comrades who had fallen during the siege. The wounded were generally doing well, notwithstanding the great heat of the weather. Preparations have been made at Bombay for their reception a fortnight since, but on the 1st Oct. they were still in camp. Lieutenant Richardson, 49th N. I., who had received ten desperate sabre-wounds, was doing well. Lieut. Herbert, 10th foot, had been pronounced out of danger. Lieut. Irwin, 49th, was still in a precarious condition. It was feared that lockjaw would supervene in Lieut. Hollingsworth, 10th foot, whose knee had been smashed. Lieut. Christopher, I. N., was delirious; his leg had been amputated below the knee, but from some cause it had been found necessary to repeat the operation higher up. All the remainder of the wounded officers were doing well.

The regiments forming the army ordered to assemble at Ferozepore are hurrying to their destination with all possible speed. The force will consist of about 25,000 men of all arms, and is, it is said, to be headed by the Commander-in-Chief in person. Lord Gough is expected at Ferozepore on the 2nd November. Col. Cureton is to command the cavalry division. Sir John Littler and Sir D. St. Leger Hill have tendered their services to Government for employment in the coming campaign. All officers on staff employ belonging to regiments ordered to the frontier have been directed to proceed to Ferozepore at the public expense. The order for the formation of the army is now daily looked for. Col. Eckford's brigade, which had been ordered to leave Ferozepore for Mooltan on the 2nd October, has been directed to stand fast till further orders.—Bombay Times, Oct. 16.

The following strange tale appears in the Mofussilite:—

At the present time, when the public are so anxious to be informed of all particulars relating to the Punjab, we may as well lay before our readers a few facts which have been placed within our reach, for the accuracy of which we are fully prepared to stand surety.

On hearing of the murder of Messrs. Agnew and Anderson, it seems that the resident at once ordered one brigade to proceed to Mooltan and capture Moolraj. Colonel Campbell, who was to have commanded the brigade, a very clear-headed man and a good soldier, asked what he was to do after driving the rebel into his fortress, which had been represented to him (Colonel Campbell) as one of stupendous strength. The absurdity of this order was so strongly pointed out, that it was "cancelled," not, however, without some reluctance.

As everybody knows, a plot was then discovered. But everybody does not know, that it appeared from evidence, both oral and documentary, that had the brigade, ordered by Sir F. Currie, proceeded to Mooltan, the very game of the conspirators would have been played with success for them, by us. It further came out that emeutes and disturbances were to be got up in different places on purpose to get our army detached, in small bodies, all over the Punjab.

This was duly known at head quarters, and it was there arranged that an army should be formed in October, sufficiently strong to send a force, with a siege-train, to Mooltan, and with the remainder to awe the country while the siege operations were going on there. This was the "proposition" of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. Sir Frederick Currie "agreed," and the Supreme Government "approved." It was "understood" distinctly that Moolraj was to be let alone, left to his own devices, and allowed to spend his money in paying his levies, who it was expected would quarrel amongst themselves before October. Arrangements were made for watching and keeping a check upon him, in order to prevent his annoying us on this side of Mooltan.

In the mean time Lieutenant Edwardes, without any order from the resident, left Bunnoo. He had been ordered expressly not to cross the Indus, or meddle with Moolraj. Orders were then despatched by him to our ally, the Bhawalpore Nawab, to lose no time in marching his troops for the purpose of co-operating with him, Lieutenant Edwardes! Moolraj moved out a few of his worst forces, distant firing was heard from both sides. Moolraj retreats to his fort, a despatch comes from Edwardes to Sir F. Currie of a splendid victory. The resident is tickled with the news, a royal salute is fired (by the Durbar!) in commemoration of the event. Struck with this partial success, on the part of Edwardes, Sir F. Currie sanctions his proceedings, patronizes his views, and "thinks with him" that "a few heavy guns and some European artillerymen will settle the business, about which such a fuss had been made."

The Commander-in-Chief, whose experience of fortified places, and guns in position, is rather more practical than either Mr. Edwardes's or Sir F. Currie's, was struck with the absurdity of the proposal, and therefore opposed any movement of the kind. Still he officially reported the matter to Government, and gave, we believe, his reasons; and the Government perfectly coinciding with Lord Gough, it was "determined that no move should be yet made." But unfortunately, before the reply could arrive from Government, the resident, in the exercise of the power expressly vested in him by Lord Hardinge, and relying more on the representations of Mr. Edwardes than the reasoning and common-sense views of the Commander-in-Chief, ordered off the siege-train, with one brigade of infantry! Here the general whom Sir F. Currie appointed to lead the force remonstrated against going without the force, which the Commander-in-Chief thought should be the very minimum,—namely, two strong brigades of infantry and cavalry, &c., with the siege-train."

The troops now with General Whish were marched in the face of Lord Gough's objections. When they arrived at Mooltan they found Mr. Edwardes more besieged than besieging; that is to say, he was shut up in his camp, and Moolraj was in unopposed possession of all the country around; 10,000 men were strongly intrenched outside the Delhi gate of the city, and the fort occupied by 2,000 picked (Khalsa) soldiers—every outpost strongly occupied; in short, Moolraj was in a position to resist double the force sent, even had Shere Sing not been suspected, as he was, of only biding his time to fraternize with the enemy.

How Lieut. Edwardes could have been so deceived, if not inflated, when he wrote such accounts as he did, has puzzled every one who is acquainted with the facts. He represented Moolraj on the point of surrendering; he stated that his army at muster was barely 5,000 men; that desertion was of daily occurrence, and so forth. The result of all this is, that General Whish has been forced to raise the siege of Mooltan, after the formal election of prize agents, and fall back and take care of himself until he is reinforced.

The more we contemplate the military operations of the Politicals, the more are we struck with the soundness of Sir Charles Napier's observation. "What absolute folly is it to intrust military power to a civilian superior to that possessed by the commander-in-chief of the army!"

How Sir Frederick Currie came to act in direct opposition to the views and opinions of the Commander-in-Chief—supported as they were by reason and common sense; and how he could have taken upon himself the direction of such extensive military operations rations, of which he cannot know anything, creates wonder and surprise in the minds of most people.

The policy of Lord Gough, from first to last, deserves our warmest admiration. It has been clear, sensible, and consistent. Knowing, as he and every one else did, how disaffected was the state of the whole country, he opposed any operations until we were in a position speedily to insure permanent success. He inveighed against any force going to Mooltan till we were in a condition to support and protect that force. He firmly resisted the wish of the resident, who was bent on sending British troops across the Jhelum in aid of Lieutenant Nicolson, who should have been called in long ago; and throughout has he urged and pressed upon the Government to assemble an army without delay. But economy, or imbecility, has caused the councils to oppose the old man's wishes; and we are, at the very moment when we ought to be best prepared, driven to all sorts of hasty expedients—hurrying to and fro—despatches flying about in all quarters—sudden movements of regiments and brigades—to the discomfort and expense of officers and men, and the serious inconvenience of those belonging to them.

A Blue Book is, of course, in the womb of time. What will be disclosed will startle sufficiently; but not one-half will be made patent to the world.

RESOURCES FOR THE SECOND CONQUEST OF THE PUNJAB.

The very extensive military operations now in progress, which will embrace the employment of between fifty and sixty thousand troops, have naturally turned the minds of men to a consideration of the sinews of war; and some have already begun to contemplate the necessity under which the Government will probably be laid of resorting to the public for assistance. It is well known to every one at the presidency that the annual expenditure of the state is in excess of its income, and that there are no surplus funds in the treasury to meet the heavy demands on it which the assemblage of so large an army in the field will necessarily entail. The five per cent. loan has now been open for two years, and though the subscriptions to it in the first twelve months were said to be equal to four or five crores of rupees, little money has found its way to the treasury during the last year. This was to be expected as the natural result of the numerous mercantile failures during this period, and the general state of commercial embarrassment, as well as the disastrous termination of the Union Bank. The five per cent. have also been depreciated to the extent, at one period, of more than two per cent., and capitalists have found it more advantageous to purchase this description of paper at a discount in the bazar, than to obtain it at par, by sending their money to the treasury. There is, therefore, little, if any, hope of obtaining the necessary supplies of money through the medium of a five per cent. loan. Better terms must be offered to allure money to the exchequer. In these circumstances, the oft-mentioned resource of a six per cent. loan has been again talked of, and it has been surmised that Government would be under the necessity of opening one, at no distant period. Assuming that the exhausted state of the treasury has not been overrated, and that Government will eventually be obliged to call upon the public for assistance to carry on the military operations of the coming winter, we venture again to press on public attention the impolicy of advertising for subscriptions to a loan, at a higher rate than five per cent., and the great inconvenience which it would inflict on all who are interested in the existing securities of Government. The immediate consequence of such a measure would be to drive the martyred four per cents. down to thirty-three per cent. discount, and to depreciate the five per cents. to the extent of twelve or fifteen per cent. Taking the sum invested in these two loans at fifty crores, the depreciation would be equal to fully one-eighth their value, or about six crores of rupees, and every one who was constrained to sell out would be subject to a ruinous loss—and that at a time when all mercantile and monetary interests are in a state of unexampled depression. But there is no necessity whatever to resort to a measure which would so deeply affect the interests of the community. The Government treasury may be replenished to any extent by other means, which would confer a great benefit on the public, and be welcomed with feelings of gratitude. We allude to the obvious measure of receiving a certain proportion of the subscriptions to the present five per cent. loan, in four per cent. paper at par. What proportion may be necessary to induce capitalists to enter into the plan, it is not easy, at first, to ascertain, but a beginning might be made with a proposal to receive one-third in such notes. At the same time, it is certain that if the proportion was established at one-half, the most complete success would attend the experiment, and Government might command any amount of funds from the public. Such a notification would relieve the four per cents. from their present depreciation, and induce the holders of that paper to make great sacrifices to get their securities at four per cent., which are now selling at sixteen per cent. discount, exchanged for five per cent. notes at par. The Bengal Bank would not, in that case, have reason much longer to complain of its overflowing vaults. The great recommendation of this plan is, that it would be equally beneficial to Government and the public.—Friend of India, Oct. 5.

BENGAL INDIGO COMPANY.

The gigantic frauds of the Union Bank have so occupied public attention here for many months past, that smaller joint-stock companies, though proportionately as ruinous to their shareholders, have passed without notice. There is one, however, which ought not to be allowed to sink into oblivion, without having its most remarkable history publicly recorded. It concerns few compared with the Union Bank, but the suffering to the shareholders and creditors will, it may be feared, be at least equally great in proportion; and it is very remarkable that the same individuals whose mismanagement has ruined the shareholders of the Union Bank, have been also the directors of the Bengal Indigo Company. The shareholders of this most unfortunate concern, being pressed by their creditors, have circulated a printed statement, to which we are indebted for most of the following facts. The capital of the Company, which was formed only three years ago, was twenty-eight lacs of rupees, divided into 560 shares of Co.'s Rs. 5,000 each, of which all, except four, were actually taken up and paid for. No less than twenty-six lacs and a half were paid for the blocks of this concern, which never at the period of highest prices could have realized more than half the money in the open market, and if forced off now would hardly fetch six lacs. The mode of valuing these concerns seems to have been precisely the same as that adopted by the Directors of the Union Bank, namely, that of adapting all the losses to the original cost, and then taking the amount in the Agent's Books as the price at which they were to be handed over to the new company. One indeed we can name as a remarkable instance. The Dumdumma Factory, which cost originally Co.'s Rs. 32,000, and after a series of losing seasons was handed over to this company at two lakhs! The managing directors here were Messrs. W. P. Grant and J. Beckwith, and in London three trustees were appointed, all connections of the house here, namely, Messrs. J. S. Brownrigg, John Cockerell, and Sir George Larpent. The capital of the Company being, as we have seen, almost entirely paid up, ordinary minds would not conceive that any more money could be required than what was necessary to carry on the operations of each season, which, if not raised in Calcutta, could easily have been obtained from London houses on the security of such a large body of shareholders. The outlay for the present year, we are told, may somewhat exceed Co.'s Rs. 6,50,000, and it may have previously been, in the management to which it was entrusted, much more costly, so that we may suppose ten lakhs were required for the preceding seasons. This, however, it might be supposed would be all that could have been drawn last year, and against it would be the produce of the former season. Instead of which we find that besides 117,000*l.* of bills accepted by Sir George Larpent for himself and his co-trustees; there are Co.'s Rs. 3,30,000 of unaccepted bills, a couple of mortgages, and 100,000*l.* of what the directors call debentures, which were deposited for safety with Messrs. Cockerell, Larpent, and Co.; 30,000*l.* of these were pledged by the above-mentioned trustees to the London and Westminster Bank as security for a loan, and 65,000*l.* were pledged to Messrs. Glynn, though it does not appear that the Bengal Indigo Company received any money or credit on account of the debentures so pledged. These transactions bring the claims on this unfortunate company to the sum of Co.'s Rs. 18,31,000, leaving, according to their own calculation, a deficiency of Co.'s Rs. 11,33,000. Taking their own valuation of the factories at Co.'s Rs. 10,00,000, the shareholders will have lost the whole of their invested capital, and more, in the short period of three years. Like the Union Bank shareholders, about two-thirds are either totally or nearly insolvent, but of the remainder there are some wealthy, such as the Hon. John Elliott, Mr. Robertson, formerly governor of the N.W. provinces, Hodgson the brewer, Colonel Caulfield, the East-India Director, and Mr. Mordaunt Ricketts. The shareholders dispute their liability on the bills accepted by Sir George Larpent, because the names of the other trustees were not added to the acceptance. The lawyers, as usual, differ on this point, for nobody, not even the judge, knows what the law of England is till he tries the case. The debentures are also repudiated by the shareholders, and we should think on better grounds. They say, however, that they ought to do their best to help the bill-holders, who ought also to consider the cruel hardship of their case, and they therefore offer fifty per cent. on the bills; leaving the debentures and bills held by those with whom the debentures are pledged for future adjustment. They would pay this amount by the 1st of next February, provided they can sell the factories at the valuation they may put on them, otherwise twenty-five per cent., giving a mortgage of the concerns to the creditors, and asking till February, 1861, for the remaining twenty-five per cent. Another proposal is, to transfer a part of the factories to a trustee for the bill-holders, which is not very likely to be accepted. It must be acknowledged that the case of these shareholders is one of very great hardship. They put too implicit a confidence in the representations of interested parties, but they could hardly anticipate such management even in Calcutta. We hear, however, that the creditors are not willing to accept the terms offered, so that the disputed points are very likely to be decided in the courts of law.—Englishman, Oct. 5.

THE HYPOTHECATION OF GOODS IN INDIA TO PROVIDE REMITTANCES TO ENGLAND.

The letter published below communicates the decision of the Court of Directors on the memorial of the merchants against the hypothecation of goods. It is expressed in the amicable, suave style often adopted in the correspondence of Leadenhall-street. The Court simply state that they adhere to the opinion which they have expressed on previous occasions, that it is not expedient to relinquish the practice of effecting a portion of their remittances by means of advances in India on the hypothecation of goods. Both on this and on every former occasion they have carefully, and perhaps discreetly, avoided the risk of assigning any reasons for the determination to which they adhere, and these, therefore, no opportunity of examining their validity or value. But the Manchester gentlemen are not to be deterred. We learn that the subject has been taken up in right earnest by some of the most eminent of the mercantile community in that town, in conjunction with several industrial members of Parliament, who have resolved to bring the subject into the House of Commons, with the view of obtaining a committee of inquiry. When the question has thus been submitted to Parliament, the Court will be put on their defence before the public, and will no longer be able to dispose of the matter in a single sentence, by a simple declaration of their will. If we could get a few other Indian questions occasionally brought into the house, and discussed, the public interests of India would soon feel the benefit of the agitation; and, when we find that the house allowed the question of the Rajah of Sattara to occupy nine months of parliamentary time, why should we despair of getting an hour or two occasionally, during the session, for some of the questions which are so important to our interests? What we want is, not a match Blue Books, as a few heated and animated discussions, in which men of character and influence shall take a part.

The Court of Directors might, it is true, in the present instance, point to the returns of the sums paid into their Treasury for bills on India, during seven months of the present year, and which did not exceed $70,000. The merchants, looking to the ease with which money was obtained in England in past years, appear to have come to the conclusion that it would be always equally available; but the experience of the present year shows how deeply the depression of commerce has affected the remittances. If the same sluggish progress of money to the exchequer in Leadenhall-street prevails throughout the present year, the whole sum received by the Court of Directors from this source, which was considered as sure and certain, will not exceed eight hundred thousand pounds, or about one-fourth of the sum they require. On the other hand, the merchants might point to the empty warehouses in Calcutta, into which scarcely a bag or bale finds its way, from month to month. They might say, that if the Court had obtained but little from the offer of bills on their Indian treasures, they have obtained still less from their effort to effect remittances on the hypothecation of goods. The general opinion is, that no goods whatever have been offered them for several months past. Indeed, there appears to be something like a commercial sympathy between the two systems, and they both seem to flourish, or wither, from the same causes.

May we venture to suggest the propriety of Government's directing a periodical statement of the value of the goods which are received on hypothecation to be published periodically in the official Gazette. The Court of Directors have set the example of allowing a return of the sums which are obtained for the bills to be published twice a month in London, and they most assuredly cannot object to a corresponding notification in this country of the result of the plan which they have resolved to adhere to in this country.

To Messrs. Potter and Co.

Sir: Dep. GENTLEMEN,—With adavance to my letter to your address, No. 577, dated the 31st March last, I am directed to inform you that the Honourable the Court of Directors, having taken into consideration the subject of the memorial therein mentioned, have determined to this Government in reply, that with every disposition to give due attention to the representations of the mercantile community, they adhere to the opinion which they have expressed on previous occasions, that it is not expedient to relinquish the practice of effecting a portion of their remittances by means of advances in India on the hypothecation of goods.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

(Signed) J. DIXON,

Secy. to the Govt. of India.

Council Chamber, Sept. 9, 1848.

THE INVESTITURE OF SIR JOHN LITTLE AND SIR DUDLEY HILL.

The investiture of Sir John Little with the Grand Cross, and Sir Dudley Hill with the Order of Knight Commander of the Bath, was performed at Government House last Thursday evening, and most faithfully were her Majesty's commands obeyed; that nothing should be omitted which could impart dignity and splendour to the ceremonial. Seldom, if ever, has so imposing a scene been exhibited in the City of Palaces; indeed, we question whether anything grander or more exciting could have been got up at St. James's. The great marble hall was decorated for the occasion in the most chaste and appropriate manner, under the directions of Capt. Ramsay, A.D.C., Capt. Fraser, of the Engineers, and Mr. Cooper, the house decorator. A very scientific and glowing description of the various emblems and devices, and of the arrangements of the hall on the occasion, has been sent to our contemporaries, and we have transferred it with much pleasure to our own columns. At nine o'clock Lord Dalhousie, attended by some of the principal officers of Government, and the members of his own staff, entered the room at the northern door, and walked up to the chair of state, or throne, which had been arranged with great taste and splendour on the elevated dais, behind which the royal initials and arms were richly emblazoned in crimson velvet. His lordship looked remarkably well in his full court dress; and if there was any venerable sexagenarian present in the room, the singular resemblance of Lord Dalhousie's expression of countenance, his figure, stature, and youthful appearance to that of Lord Wellesley, must have carried him back to the time when he saw that illustrious statesman walk up the same path, to the same station, on similar occasions, when the triumph of British valour in the East was to be commemorated. The ceremony throughout was conducted with the utmost regularity and order; every body, and every thing, and every proceeding was in place. After Lord Dalhousie had opened the commission with which he had been honoured by his sovereign, the Companions of the Bath, who were present, were requested to conduct Sir John and Sir Dudley to the assembly, which was done with all due ceremony. The Governor-General then rose and addressed the two officers, enumerating the gallant services for which this distinguished honour had been conferred upon them by their sovereign. His lordship then adverted to the proud position which England now occupied amidst the nations of the earth, at a time when thrones and dynasties and ancient institutions were crumbling around her, and made an eloquent appeal to the loyalty and patriotism of the assembly, which kindled every British sympathy in their souls, and drew forth the most enthusiastic responses. Without the slightest dread of being suspected of flattery, we will venture to affirm that nothing finer or nobler than his lordship's speech has ever been heard in Calcutta. It was the speech, not only of an experienced and accomplished Parliamentary orator, but of one whose mind was elevated by the purest feelings of patriotism, and who was resolved that nothing should be wanting on his part to sustain the dignity and honour of his native land which had been committed to his responsibility in this Eastern empire. The speech was evidently not composed in the closet, and recited from memory, like some other of the grand addresses which we have sometimes listened to in India.—Friend of India, Oct. 5.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL, (express from Bombay), with letters from London to August 24, arrived in Calcutta on the morning of October 6th. The Procurator arrived on the following day.

CIVIL SERVICE MOVEMENTS.—We borrow a paragraph from the Englishman, in which, advertising to some of the recent civil service movements, our contemporary mentions that Mr. Bushby, who is appointed resident at Gwalior, will be succeeded, as secretary to the government of India in the home department by Mr. Halliday, whose situation will be given to Mr. Colvin, who has intimated his readiness to come up here when a vacancy for him occurred, or to Mr. J. P. Grant. We understand that Mr. Colvin is not at all likely to accept the appointment, which is not better paid and is much more harassing than his own; so that Mr. J. P. Grant is likely to be the fortunate man. We hear that Mr. Crawford, of the anti-department, is to officiate as commissioner of Arrakan, vice Major Bogle, ordered to join his corps; and Mr. Wauchope, the magistrate of Hooghly, as first or second assistant commissioner. We have not heard how the other appointments that will be vacated in Arrakan are to be filled up. — Hurkaru, Oct. 6.

A LUCKNOW LETTER of Sept. 14 mentions that the cholera is still raging most fearfully in the native quarters of the town; the heat was intense, and scarcely a drop of rain had fallen during the preceding fortnight.

GOLD BARS were imported from China, in September, to the value of fifteen lakhs of rupees, at Rs. 16. 8. per sicca weight.

FURLOUGH MEMORIAL.—We take the following remarks on the subject of the furlough memorial agreed to at Saugor from the Calcutta Englishman:—

We have reason to believe that this memorial contains the sentiments of nearly all the officers of the Company's service. If so, they ought to recollect that the Home Authorities do not suppose them to be unanimous, or nearly unanimous, on the subject; and that unless they come forward, and show that they are in earnest, they can hardly expect that the Court of Directors will come to any decision, however desirous they may be of complying with any reasonable request of the whole body of their Indian officers. This memorial has been got up at the only large station in India, where officers of both the Bengal and Madras presidencies are located. It was therefore a very well chosen spot for a beginning, but unless backed by the general expression of assent from all other stations, the memorial will have comparatively little weight.

COLONEL SLEEMAN, the papers state, is to be appointed resident at the court of Lucknow.

A PEROSEPORE correspondent of the Deli Gazette intimates that Lieut. Crommelin, of the Engineers, has been instructed to hasten from Simlah to construct a bridge of country boats across the Sutlej at the Phonda Ghat.

LUCKNOW.—A letter of Sept. 27th mentions that the minister had succeeded in getting very little money into the treasury; there was a rumour current that Ameen-ood-Dowla will succeed the present minister, Ally Nucky Khan; there was also a report that the resident would leave Lucknow for England in October; the thermometer in a cool house stood at 98 degrees at 2 p.m.

A LETTER FROM CAMP states that an officer of the 49th regiment has no less than eleven wounds, all tulwar cuts. On the evening of the night attack he broke in a small doorway of a strong building in which the enemy were; he was followed only by a few sepoy of his own corps; he ran the first man through the body, but was unable to withdraw his sword and fell forward, when he was attacked by a number of the enemy, who did not leave him till they thought he was dead, but he had the presence of mind to make a shield of his late antagonist, and defended himself from mortal wounds. — Englishman.

A BALL AND SUPPER was given by the station of Barrackpore, on Thursday evening, in honour of Lord and Lady Dalhousie, prior to their departure to the north-west; her ladyship, from indisposition, was unable to attend.

AVA.—The Moulmein Free Press announces the death of the prince of Mekara Mien, father-in-law of the king of Ava. "He was the most enlightened Burman of his age," and his death will probably create a serious change in the policy of the golden-footed monarch, as his moderate counsels exercised great influence over the king's mind, and he was by habit predisposed in favour of the English. Great complaints are also made by the British inhabitants of Rangoon, of the want of some efficient authority who could check the haughtiness of the Court of Ava, and prevent the oppressions too frequently practised towards them.

TARA BAI.—Some time since we announced the arrival of two natives from Gwalior, as agents (though not duly accredited) from Tara Bai, the widow of the late Maharajah Jhunko Rao Scindiah, to represent to the Governor-General certain grievances, of which she complained, under the regency of Mama

Show Saib. We now learn that a memorial having been presented to his lordship, instructions were forwarded to the resident at Gwalior, to institute an inquiry into the subject of her complaint, and report its result to Government as soon as practicable. Letters have since been received in town, which state that in pursuance of these orders, the resident is permitted to have an interview with the actual monee, and not the creature who has hitherto been made to personate her before him; and that Majorow, one of the members of the Gwalior council of regency, has been suspended from his situation. — Hindu Intelligencer.

THE TENASSERIM PROVINCES are not paying. The deficiency in the accounts for last year was Rs. 1,95,834. The cost of the military establishment down there is Rs. 1,66,660.

A LETTER FROM CAMP, MOUKAN, mentions that our shells had done such fearful execution in the town of Moukan, that the place might have been taken had the heavy guns been brought up in time to defend the posts carried. The enemy's loss is described as dreadful.

THE GAZETTE OF OCTOBER 4 contains an order for placing the Bengal army on the war-establishment by raising the number of each infantry regiment to a thousand men, and the cavalry to five hundred suwars. A large number of officers on leave, and bidding staff appointments, are also ordered to join the army of the Sutledge at once.

COLONEL BENSON has been appointed military secretary to the Governor-General in room of Colonel Mountain, who has been permitted to join his corps on active service.

BENGALIA TERNANT, it is said, is to command the artillery with the army now assembled at Perozepore.

THE OPPIUM AGENTS have received instructions to limit the poppy cultivation of this year to the standard of the last.

A MONTHLY COMMUNICATION is to be opened by the Government of the Mauritius between that island and Ceylon.

JOINT STOCK COMPANIES.—The practice of paying secretaries of joint stock companies, for attending the meeting, is becoming common in Calcutta.

DR. MAXON has been removed from his appointment of police-surgeon for giving a false medical certificate to Rajah Madahant Deb, in order to afford the latter an excuse for not attending the court of the magistrate of Serampore.

FEVER HOSPITAL.—The corner stone of the Fever Hospital was laid on Saturday evening (Sept. 30), with masonic honours, before an unusually large assembly. Lord Dalhousie, who was present, made an eloquent and appropriate speech, and another at the masonic dinner, which took place at the Town-hall.

THE CHINA OPPIUM MARKET has experienced another sudden fall, which will tell on the next Calcutta sale to the serious detriment of the public purse.

CAPTAIN CHRISTOPHER, an officer wounded under the walls of Moukan, has had his leg amputated while in a state of coma from the use of chloroform. The operation was perfectly successful.

MAHARAJAH DULEER SINGH.—A story is told of this youth, which, if true, shows him to be infected with the insolent spirit of those about him. Sir F. Currie is said to have observed that it was a long time since the Maharajah had paid him a visit. He replied, "What! is it necessary that I should visit my own servant?" — Englishman.

AUGMENTATION OF THE BENGAL ARMY.

Fort William, 2nd Oct., 1848.—No. 370 of 1848.—The Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in council has been pleased to resolve, that the establishment of each regular regiment of Bengal N.I. and of the Kelat-i-Ghilzie regiment shall be forthwith increased by 10 havildars, 10 naicks, and 200 sepoy. Each company of those regiments will then consist of 1 subadar, 1 jemadar, 6 havildars, 6 naicks, 100 sepoy.

His lordship in council has also resolved, that the several regiments of Bengal irregular cavalry shall be immediately recruited to 100 sowars. Each ressaliah of irregular cavalry will then consist of 1 ressalidar or ressaidar, 1 naib ressidar, 1 jemadar, 1 kote duffadar, 8 duffadars, 1 nishanburdar, 1 trumpeter or negarchie, 83 sowars.

EXCHANGES.

The operations in exchange have been limited, and there has been little alteration in the rates. Our quotations are, 1-9½ to 1-9¾ for first-class document bills, 1-9½ to 1-9¾ for American credits, and Bank bills 1-9½ to 1-9¾.

FREIGHTS.

Since our last report rates have been gradually improving. Our quotations are, 4l. 12s. 6d. to 4l. 17s. 6d. for 100 lbs. of goods from London to Calcutta, and 4l. 12s. 6d. to 4l. 17s. 6d. for 100 lbs. of goods from Calcutta to London.

MADRAS. MISCELLANEOUS.

MR. MACLEAN.—On the examination of Mr. Maclean before the Insolvent Court, his petition to be discharged was refused by the presiding judge, Sir W. Burton, and the insolvent instead remanded to gaol for six months, for an attempt to defraud his creditors by omitting the name of the nabob of the Carnatic in his schedule. Sir W. Burton held that the money for which Mr. Maclean stood security to Mr. Arathoon, the opposing creditor, was borrowed purposely and solely to be lent to the nabob, and that by concealing this fact the insolvent was depriving his creditors of the means of recovering their property. It has been remarked as singular that the judge who, on the ground that the money had been borrowed for and lent to the nabob, inflicted the punishment of six months imprisonment, should have been the same before whom Mr. Maclean was acquitted by a special jury of the charge of having any pecuniary transactions whatever with the "sovereign prince" of the Carnatic. One public advantage will, it is hoped, be deduced from the proceedings in this case,—the interference of Government to compel this princeling to pay his debts, and his deprivation of the means any longer of plundering her Majesty's lieges with impunity, which he now enjoys by virtue of an Act passed some five years ago, granting him and certain members of his family exemption from civil process.—Athenaeum.

CANNAMORE, SEPT. 22.—The C. company sappers and miners, under the command of Lieut. J. Elphinstone of the 20th regiment N. I. arrived here on the afternoon of the 10th instant from Fraserpet, for the purpose of embarking for Aden. The H. C. steamer Enterprise, with troops from Madras, arrived off Tellicherry on the 12th, and after taking in a supply of coals came into this port on the 14th instant. The sappers embarked on board the same evening, and the vessel steered out immediately afterwards bound for the Arabian coast. In accordance with long established usage, the fort flag staff was hoisted up on the 15th instant, thereby denoting the safety of the harbour for vessels and other minor crafts, to ride in. Assistant-surgeon Menzies of H. M. 94th regiment having been appointed to the medical charge of H. M.'s 15th hussars, left this on the 13th instant en route to Bangalore. A medical committee assembled here to report on the state of health of Capt. Leighton of the 35th regiment N. I., and the board have recommended his immediate return to Europe for its restoration.

• MR. DAUBENY'S trial did not terminate until late last evening; having occupied the court three days. We are therefore not able to get up a report of it in time for transmission by this month's steamer; it shall however have a place in our number for next month. Mr. Daubeny was acquitted.—Athenaeum Summary.

ECCLESIASTICAL.—We have to announce that the Lord Bishop of Calcutta is expected to reach Madras, to hold the visitation of this diocese, on his return from Bombay and Ceylon, about the middle of January. The Venerable the Archdeacon of Madras has resumed his visitation of the up-country stations, and is proceeding to the western coast, intending ultimately to journey to the southern districts of this presidency. It must be a source of no small gratification to our respected resident head of the church, to find that his call for assistance has been so heartily responded to, in the success which has attended the society recently founded by himself and his colleagues. We trust that their growing prosperity will keep pace with their intrinsic merits.—Athenaeum, Oct. 14.

COLONEL LOW, C.B., 8th N. I., has been appointed agent to the Governor-General in the Rajpootana States, in succession to the late Colonel Sutherland.

THE SECOND ANNUAL MEETING of the Madras Polytechnic Society took place on the evening of Monday, October 2.

SURGEON MACBREGGON, H. M. 25th Reg., has been appointed to act temporarily, as Inspector of H. M. hospitals.

THE SCHOONER "TRIUMPH."—Accounts from Singapore announce the loss of the schooner Triumph, of London, upon a sanken coral rock, about six miles to the westward of Madagascar. The captain and crew were saved, but no hopes existed of getting the vessel off.

MILITARY FUND.—The Spectator understands that a proposition is being circulated among the subscribers of the military fund to submit an application to the Court of Directors to permit all payments tendered by subscribers at home, on account of the fund, to be received into their treasury; and in the event of this proposition being agreed to, to have a retired officer as agent on a salary of 400l. per annum.

DEPARTURE OF TROOPS TO CALCUTTA.—The Athenaeum informs us that the H. E. I. C. steam-ship Queen arrived in the roads last evening (Oct. 11) from Calcutta, bringing despatches from the Supreme Government for the instant departure of troops from this presidency to replace those who have been ordered to Mooltan. It is added, that it is not unlikely that a wing of H. M.'s 25th regt. may be sent to Calcutta.

BANGALORE.—It is rumoured that General Cubbon intends to get the equestrian company to exhibit their performance in the fort at his own expense, with a view of affording all the subordinates of the various Cutcherry establishments under his orders an opportunity of witnessing the astonishing performances of this body of artists. It is supposed that this kind indulgence on the part of the general will cost him not less than from two to three thousand rupees.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

UNAUTHORISED APPOINTMENTS AND ARTICLES OF DRESS.

Head Quarters, Choultry Plain, Sept. 28, 1848.—Several instances having occurred of officers commanding regiments writing to England for unauthorised appointments and articles of uniform, and afterwards applying to the Commander-in-Chief to grant permission for their being worn, his Excellency strictly prohibits this practice, and officers are clearly to understand that any repetition of it will subject them to the loss of whatever money may be expended contrary to this order and the regulations of the service.

His Excellency also particularly forbids native officers being thus involved in expense beyond what their incomes are intended to defray.

BOMBAY.

THE LATE MAJOR SIR WILLIAM CORNWALLIS HARRIS, OF THE BOMBAY ENGINEERS.

We regret to have to announce the demise of this officer, which took place at Serwil, on the Neera river, a short distance from Poonah, on the way to the Mahabulshwar Hills, on the evening of the 9th Oct. Sir W. C. Harris came into a cadet in 1823, and throughout his service distinguished himself as an active and zealous member of the services to which he belonged. He was a man of much enterprise and energy; a devoted sportsman, a first-rate draughtsman, an excellent linguist, and generally well-informed man. In 1833, he presented on sick certificate to the Cape, and his health having speedily become restored by a residence in a moderate climate since that time from which he had suffered, he resolved to make a journey into the interior. The greater part of the two following years accordingly were devoted to this. On his return to India the following year, he published an account of the expedition, accompanied by a valuable zoological appendix. The first edition of this was printed at Bombay, and a second edition was soon after published in London, with a splendid collection of drawings and illustrations in lithography tinted. The work was reviewed in the Quarterly for October, 1839, and pronounced one which would be read with great pleasure and profit, in which the zoologist would find many valuable accounts of the habits of animals of the greatest rarity, and the sportsman and of scenes of the most stirring description. Immediately on his return to India, he was ordered to join the Bombay mission (November, 1839) about to proceed to Sindh on its march to Afghanistan. Shortly after this, he endeavored to make his way by Soudanese through Loo to Kohn. He was disappointed as a horse-dealer, but found himself detained, and was compelled to return. An account of this was published in the Geographical Transactions of 1840. In April 1841, he was despatched as ambassador to the court of Shere in Upper Abyssinia, at the head of a mission, consisting of Capt. Douglas Graham, Dr. Kirk, Captain Houston, 14th Dragoons; Lieut. Barker, 1. N.; and Dr. Impey; the three last named were recalled before the journey had been much more than begun. Here he remained till 1843, when he returned to Bombay, accompanied by some of the natives, and in possession of a large collection of curiosities from that country. After a short sojourn in Bombay, he proceeded on sick leave to England, and whilst at home received the honour of knighthood. An account of the proceedings of the mission was shortly afterwards published in a work in three volumes, entitled "The Highlands of Ethiopia." He returned to Bombay in February, 1846, having travelled over the continent, and spent some time in Egypt on his way out. He has since the departure of Col. Grant for the Nulgherry on sick certificate,—November, 1847, acted as superintending engineer in the Deccan. In 1845 Sir W. Harris was married to Miss Sligo, of Seeliff, East Lothian. He had throughout the rainy season suffered considerably from attacks of fever, and three weeks since was on the point of proceeding to the Mahabulshwar Hills, when the malady increased, until, on the 8th, it proved fatal. Sir W. Harris was a man of great kindness of heart, uprightness of disposition, and sweetness of temper; he was possessed of a large range of varied information and of tastes elevated and refined. He was much beloved by all who knew him, and his loss is a subject of deep grief to a large circle of affectionate friends.—Bombay Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL, with letters from London to Sept. 7, reached Bombay by the Victoria, Oct. 9.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR returned to Bombay Oct. 3.

SIR ERSKINE PERRY, chief justice, has left for Khandalla, where he intends residing until the end of October. The rumour of the chief justice being about proceeding for a short time to Egypt, a short while since current, seems to have been without foundation.

COLONEL OUTRAM leaves for Egypt by the steamer of November 1, and proposes, we believe, travelling across the country from Cairo to Tunis, thence returning to Alexandria.

PHYLLIS GENERAL J. GYNN, it is reported, purposes retiring from the service in January.

DR. DOIG has been ordered to the Presidency from Belgium forthwith.

FROM THE DECCAN we learn that heavy rains fell all along the Ghats, on the 6th and 7th Oct. The climate of Poona had before this been burning hot, and most unpleasant; that of the hills, after the fall, was bracing and delightful.

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.—Dr. J. Peet, of the Jambjee Jejeebhoy Hospital, has been elected secretary of the Medical and Physical Society, in room of Dr. Carter, who has resigned, in consequence of not having sufficient time at his disposal to pay proper attention to the affairs of the society; and Dr. J. Gilbert, G. Desai, J. S. Rowington, H. Johnstone, H. Gind, and B. A. Bremner have been elected members.

MINUTE.—The wing of H. M. 22nd regiment, which marched from Poona in three divisions for garrison duty in Bombay, arrived at Panwell in the midst of the Elephanta storm. The first division embarked on Saturday night, October 7, and had, as might have been expected, a long, boisterous, and trying passage across, and we fear the troops will have suffered from sea-sickness. It is to be regretted that the officer in command did not wait until the weather cleared, as his orders could scarcely have been so promptly obeyed to have left in clear weather, which was to obtain under such circumstances. We hear that the two sailing frigates have been of the greatest service to the troops. It is to be regretted they are not somewhat larger, because as it is they have proved of the greatest use, and we should like to see the system extended on all our main lines of route. The right wing, 8th foot, reached Bombay from Poona on the 7th instant, and has since left for Kurrachee. The 7th N.I. has reached the presidency from Belgium. The H. M. steamer Victoria took her departure for Kurrachee at a late hour last Friday, October 13. The remaining detachment of H. M. 8th foot, consisting of five commissioned officers and about a hundred and twenty non-commissioned officers and men, and six, embarked on her from the Atterbury about 5 P.M. A detachment of two officers and one hundred and forty men of the 20th N. I., the volunteers from the 2nd E. I. to the 1st Fusiliers, under Captain Stiles, and four other officers; and the company of sappers and miners, under Lieutenant Kennedy, also proceeded by her. Several officers on their way to join the corps in Scinde, a list of whose names will be found elsewhere, likewise took their departure by the same vessel. The 1st and 2nd divisions of the 1st Grenadier N. I., under Captain W. F. Leeson, reached the presidency on the 13th inst. from Panwell. The detachment musters about 300 natives commissioned, non-commissioned, and rank and file. They are accompanied by Lieutenant G. Skipton and Ensign R. Wallace. The head-quarters, and 350 men of all ranks of the 20th N. I., embark for Kurrachee this day. The remainder of the corps proceed, as soon as tonnage can be procured, for their transport. The 24th N. I., now at Bombay, also proceed to Scinde. Letters of the 26th inst. from Ahmednuggur announce the departure, that-morning, of the 1st company 1st battalion (European) and 2nd company 4th battalion (Golandaise) artillery, for Panwell, en route to Scinde. The following officers accompany them:—Captain J. B. Woodman, of the former, commanding the whole; Lieutenant J. Hamilton, in charge of the Golandaise; Lieutenants Crawford, Reid, Anderson, Mathome, and Grisham; and Assistant-surgeon Clay in medical charge.

MAJORS LANGRISH.—The undermentioned officers were to appear before the examination committee, to be assembled in the Town Hall on Tuesday the 16th Oct., at eleven o'clock a.m., for examination in native languages, as follows, viz.—In Hindustani:—Lieut. J. Fuckle, 3rd Madras N.I.; Lieut. J. W. S. Barnes, 10th N.I.; Lieut. C. Law, 2nd grdr. N.I.; Lieut. J. Ashburner, 18th N.I.; Lieut. W. Gray, 1st Eur. regt. Fusiliers;

Ensign F. T. Ross, 16th N.I.; 2nd Lieut. H. F. Dabrowa, 1st Eur. regt. Fusiliers; Ens. W. C. Lester, 2nd grdr. N.I.; Ens. W. G. Palgrave, 8th N.I.; Ens. C. M. Lewis; Ens. L. C. Barton; Assist. surg. G. G. W. Mailand, in Mahratta.—Brevet capt. A. Macdonald, 18th N.I.; Lieut. E. Maude, 4th regt. N.I. (rifle corps); Lieut. A. G. Thompson, 15th regt. N.I., in Guzerat.—Assist. surg. D. Costelloe.

CONVERSION.—The Telegraph and Courier has published some documents, relative to a "conversion" case which has recently occurred at Nagpore, and in which the important question has been raised of the right of a native state to call for the surrender of a subject who has of his own free will, sought refuge in British territory, without having committed any crime. The affair took its rise out of the conversion, by the missionaries at Setabuldee, of a Hindoo youth, who had been in the habit of attending their school, and of whose person the licensed parents used violent means to retain possession. The boy fled to the missionaries, who kept him; the Nagpore rajah asked the acting resident to interfere, a requisition was made on the Rev. Mr. Hislop for the boy, who was then given up; and finally, the proceedings were handed up to the Supreme Government, who approved of the course taken by the resident.

COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

MONDAY AFTERNOON, FIVE O'CLOCK, 16TH OCTOBER, 1848.

—The extent of business transacted in Imports during the past fortnight shows a material falling off as compared with that of the last fortnight of September. This may in a great measure be attributed to the near approach of the Dowallee holidays (which commence on the 25th inst.), when it is the custom of the natives to close their accounts for the preceding twelve months, and at such a time they are naturally unwilling to come under new engagements. We have since our last Report been visited at the Presidency by a heavy and timely fall of rain, which makes the full during the monsoon now brought to a close, an average one; and should this rain have extended to the northward, especially to the Marwar districts, the fears entertained of a decrease in the trade with that fertile province will be materially dissipated. In our Money Market we have no change to notice. It continues easy.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.—40-inch Grey Shirtings of low quality are not so readily saleable as they were, and in most cases prices show a small decline. 45-inch of similar quality have likewise given way one at two annas per piece. Higher qualities of both widths maintain their former value. Grey Madapolams are in a very good inquiry, and quite realize former prices. Grey Jaconets of all qualities, especially very low, attract the notice of dealers. Grey Domestics, coarse and heavy, are in a little inquiry, but the finer descriptions are entirely neglected. Grey Longcloths, 40-inch 36 yards, continue in good demand, and former prices are firmly maintained.

BLEACHED GOODS.—Shirtings of all qualities are scarce and much wanted. On these we have to quote an advance of two at six annas per piece in value. Madapolams and Jaconets are also in good inquiry, and readily find purchasers. In Light Scotch fabrics generally we have not much change to notice: prices continue unsatisfactory. Turkey Red Cloths, plain, are in good request, but twilled are dull. Prints, of favourite styles, are much inquired after.

COTTON YARN, of good quality, has been in excellent request, and for some numbers an advance of ½ at ½ anna has been established. The market for Cotton Twist generally is firm.

DYED YARN.—Prices of Orange are well supported, although we have not heard of any sales. Turkey Red, on the contrary, is quite neglected.

SAPPHRON is in steady demand.

METALS.—British Bar Iron is firm, but without improvement in value. Swedish Bar continues scarce, and in good inquiry. Nail Rod Iron is dull, and prices have given way. In Spelter we have no change to notice. Lead, both pig and sheet, are in demand, and on the former we have to quote an advance of ½ rupee per cwt. Copper is in steady inquiry. We do not alter our quotations, except for sheeting, which is slightly lower. Stocks of all descriptions are very light.

MARINE STORES.—Under this head we have to notice a sale of 60 cwt. white, green, and black paints.

SPIRITS.—Sales of 100 dozen French brandy, and five hhds. English, are reported. Gin is in good request, but no sales have come to our knowledge.

BEER.—Prices do not show any change. Alsopp's and Bass's are firm; and we have heard of a sale of fifty hhds. Whitbread's bottled at Rs. 50 per hhd. and ten casks of same brewer's porter at Rs. 40 per hhd. A sale of 250 dozen of Alsopp's English bottled beer at Rs. 4½, is also reported.

EXPORTS.

COTTON.—Although the news brought from China by the last mail was favourable for the staple, the large supplies lately gone forward to that market deterred shippers from operating as freely as they would otherwise have done. On the other hand, holders having been unwilling to give way in price, purchases have consequently only been made to a small extent. For England we hear of nothing doing. The late heavy rain has tended in some measure to keep back supplies, but we expect, now that the weather is completely settled, that they will come forward freely ere many days are over.

OPPIUM.—Since the discouraging accounts for the drug which came to hand by last steamer, prices have given way, and purchases were made, but only to a very small extent, at Rs. 1,250 per chest for best quality. Since yesterday a still further decline has taken place, and our quotations now are Rs. 1,200 per chest for best quality Mundelivir, and Rs. 1,175 per chest for the produce of Indore. The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Pekin, appointed to sail on the 19th instant, will take above 1,300 chests, chiefly on importer's account.

CEYLON.

The following extraordinary statement appears in the Bombay Telegraph Courier, with the prefatory remark, "That the cup of bitterness which the European residents of Ceylon have had to drink, has indeed been filled to overflowing, the annexed extract from a private letter from Colombo, and the extraordinary occurrence which it describes, will, we think, sufficiently attest. We must preface the communication by saying that it was penned with a view to publicity, and that the writer is a party well known to us, and incapable of any intentional mis-statement." Then follows the letter:—

"You would no doubt observe, in the papers of last month, that much dissatisfaction has been expressed in reference to the all-important point of Lord Torrington's capacity as a governor. The admirably written letter of Dr. Elliott to Lord Grey, as well as the memorial of the members of the Chamber of Commerce and others, show clearly how much and how far the people are agreed on that point; and yet many, well qualified from long experience in this island to judge of such matters, are of opinion that, ill qualified as my Lord Torrington is, his near relationship to the prime minister of England is sure to give him peace and security."

"As if it were to supply a climax to all former displays of his temper, and to give full rein to his tongue, he selected a highly respectable gentleman, old enough to be his father—an old Waterloo officer of the Guards, who is now holding a civil appointment under Government, and unfortunately dependent on it. Capt. Barton has been long known on the turf here, and has often been in the practice of riding at the races. This year, it seems, my Lord Torrington has been very unsuccessful, but whether this has arisen from bad training, or how, I know not; only he was much disappointed, and gave vent to his spleen in ways not over creditable to Her Britannic Majesty's representative—such as refusing to present his own cup, because his own horse had not won it, and (it is said) refusing also to drink out of it at the dinner! One day last week, the gentlemen engaged in superintending the weighing of the jockeys met in a tent on the race-ground. There were present Messrs. Ritchie, Thompson, McCarthy, Airey (the A. D. C.), and others. Capt. Barton remarked that it would be unfair if Lord Torrington's horse ran with only a certain weight. Capt. Airey calls Lord Torrington. Barton repeats the opinion; on which his lordship gets enraged; and then—

"Lord T. You are a cheat, and tried to cheat me.

"Capt. B. I am incapable of any such thing.

"Lord T. You are a d—d cheat; you are. [This was repeated again and again.]

"Capt. B. I cannot bear this; I am incapable of cheating any man.

"And on the repetitions being used, accompanied by some of Lord Torrington's characteristic epithets—

"Capt. B. It is false!

"Lord T. I am Governor; you have insulted me, and must apologize, or I'll have you arrested. [Then to McCarthy, superintendent of police:] Take up that man. Do your duty. He has insulted me, and I am Governor!"

"Barton, on persuasion of friends, who were interested—who, in fact, had, I suppose, a stake in the race, which he was to ride, and were therefore anxious to get him out of the hands of McCarthy—apologized to the Governor. That, however, was not accepted, and he then apologized to Lord Torrington—which was deemed admissible, and Lord T. left the tent with the A. D. C., chuckling at the result of the affair. Whether this attack was premeditated, no one can say; only it is said, if Barton had been prevented from riding, the governor's horse might have won, which it did not. There was a great talk about the affair during the evening, and on the following day; but as his lordship afterwards made a very humble apology to Barton in writing, and requested that it might be shown to all his friends who witnessed the scene at the race-course, the papers have passed it over without notice."

PINE CLOTH.—A new and promising branch of industry is likely to spring up at Singapore. In the preparation of pine-apple fibres for the manufacture of pine cloth. The Journal of the Indian Archipelago says: "Some time ago, we observed, in the neighbourhood of Batu Blyer, a number of Chinese labourers employed in cleaning the fibres of pine-apple leaves for exportation to China. The process of extracting and bleaching the fibres is extremely simple. The first step is to remove the fleshy or succulent side of the leaf. A Chinese, astride on a narrow stool, extends on it, in front of him, a pine-apple leaf, one end of which is kept firm; with a kind of two-handled plane, he removes the succulent matter; another man, receiving the leaves as they are planed, with his thumb-nail, loosens and gathers the fibres about the middle of the leaf, which enabled him by one effort to detach the whole of them from the outer-skin. The fibres are next steeped in water for some time; after which they are washed, to free them from the matter that still adheres to them, and binds them together. They are now laid out to dry and bleach on rude frames of split bamboo. The process of steeping, washing, and exposing to the sun is repeated for some days, until the fibres are considered to be properly bleached, when, without further preparation they are exported to China. Nearly all the islets near Singapore are planted with pine apples (covering an extent of about 2,000 acres), and the enormous quantity of leaves that are annually suffered to rot on the ground would supply fibre for a large manufactory of valuable pine cloth."

GUTTA PERCHA.—The same work reports the extraordinary impulse given to industry throughout the Malayan countries by the demand for gutta percha, or, as there (properly) called, gutta taban. To the north, the gutta collectors have reached as far as Perak, on the Peninsular side of the Straits of Malacca (embracing Johore, Malacca, Selatgor, and Perak) and Siam, on the Sumatran side, as far as Pane and Bila. To the south, the whole of the Johore archipelago and the adjoining countries on the east coast of Sumatra, as far as Piembang (including the forests on the Kampar, Indraghiri, Tunkal, Rite, Jambi, and Piembang rivers) now furnish taban. On the east coast of the Peninsula, the knowledge of it has not yet advanced beyond Pahang. To the eastward it has reached some of the rivers of Borneo, such as Bruné and Sarawak on the north, Pontanah on the west, and Koti and Passir on the east coast. It thus appears probable that the range of the taban embraces the whole of Borneo. The tree exists in the jungles of Penang and in Province Wellesley, on the main land. During the 31 years of the trade, the exports of taban from Singapore have been 21,599 piculs (or 2,872,534 lbs.), nearly all to Great Britain. The price at Singapore rose gradually from 8 to 24 dollars per picul, but in July last it began to fall, and was in August 13 dollars. For the supply of the above quantity of the article, it is calculated that 270,000 trees have been destroyed. Not a tree is now left in Singapore, and all Southern Johore cannot at present furnish 10 piculs a month of taban.

CHINA.

THE Achilles, with the London mail of July 24, reached Hong-Kong Sept. 14.

HONG-KONG.—By embarking H.M.'s 95th regiment, the disease which committed such havoc during the past four months, has been checked. In August three large vessels were chartered (one for the convalescents), and with the exception of the men in hospital, the regiment has been kept afloat.—Friend of China, Sept. 28.

—The captain and crew of the brig Spec, charged with piracy, will be tried before a Court of Admiralty, to be held on the 3rd of October. Several of the prisoners were not identified by leaked out during the examination, that Mr. Consul Alcock did not have the evidence translated to those prisoners who do not understand English, an unpardonable omission, though in perfect conformity with other proceedings in the consular court.—Ibid.

— On the evening of the 31st of August, and morning of the 1st inst. this island and its vicinity was visited with a storm of unusual violence, by which there was a considerable loss of life and property. The glass began to fall on the morning of the 31st, giving some intimation of an approaching gale; at nine A.M. it stood at 29° 56', at noon 29° 46', five P.M. 29° 36', and at a quarter past eleven it had fallen to 29° 11'. The thermometer was steady at 81½.

At Cum-Sing-Moon, after midnight, the receiving-ship Isabella Robertson was driven under the bows of the Eagle, carrying away her bowsprit and foremast. Immediately after the chains of the Eagle parted, and she drifted out through the passage to the eastward, and ran upon the beach; but on the way the Norfolk and the Sylph both got foul of her, carrying away her mainmast and bulwarks. The Sylph drifted the same course as the Eagle, and also ran ashore. Both the Eagle and Sylph were totally dismantled, but were got off next morning, and towed into Cum-Sing Moon, where their cargoes were discharged in a very damaged state. At daylight all that could be seen of the Isabella Robertson was the top of her mainmast, the vessel having sunk near the reef at the entrance of Cum-Sing-Moon. The cargo consisted of 700 chests of opium; it is expected the whole will be recovered.

The Norfolk and Sydney were entirely dismantled; and the British brig Arrow, recently arrived with 560 chests of Patna, went on shore, cargo uninjured. The vessels that held on were the Falcon, Ruparrell, Lady Hayes, Sea Horse, Linnæ and Sir Edward Ryan.

The obituary will show that many lives were lost.

CANTON.—The Hon. J. H. Davis, envoy from the United States, was to have had an interview with Seu, the Imperial Commissioner, on the 21st, at a point on the Canton river previously fixed upon. From the baffling winds it became doubtful whether the United States ship Plymouth, in which Mr. Davis embarked, could get to the place of meeting at the time appointed. The secretary to the American legation intimated this to Seu the day previous to the meeting, requesting that it be postponed. Seu did not attend to the reasonable request; and not finding Mr. Davis at the place agreed upon he returned to Canton and penned him an insolent letter. It is said that Mr. Davis has demanded that the letter be withdrawn and an ample apology made; failing which, he will either blockade the river or proceed north and lay his complaint before the Emperor. We give this as a report; but it appears probable enough. Seu is known to dislike all foreigners; and he would not hesitate to insult the accredited representative of a foreign power. At his interview with Mr. Bonham, on board Her Majesty's steamer Medea, he was not particularly cordial; and though a banquet had been prepared, he refused to partake of it. America has two vessels of war in the Canton river, with a line of battle ship and a steamer expected shortly. We cannot anticipate acts of hostility from slight differences imperfectly known, but should action be called for, the United States will have a strong squadron, which no doubt was sent to the eastern seas with a view to protect an extending commerce.—Ibid.

EXPORTS.

TEAS.—Sixty chops of Congous are reported as settled at rather above the current rates of last month. This may be owing to the continued improvement in the English market, combined with the number of vessels in this port now waiting despatch. The quantity of chops estimated as left is about 100.

The only transactions in green have been in Canton Tea, chiefly gunpowder—say 2,000 packages.

RAW SILK.—The present stocks are—of Tealies, about 200 bales; Taysam, 60 bales. The prices of Canton have advanced in consequence of a partial failure in the crop.

LA REUNION (LATE BOURBON).

The latest news from this island is alarming. There was a general movement on the part of the colonists to resist the emancipation decree of the provisional government of France. A general assembly had been formed, independent of government, chosen by election throughout the island, for the purpose of receiving the commissary general charged to carry out the measure of emancipation, and for maintaining and defending the rights of the inhabitants. The black population were very quiet and orderly. If the emancipation of the slaves of Bourbon is to be, as anticipated, immediate, and without any indemnity to the planter, the position of this colony will be fearful. The population are determined not to concede to the government what will decide their ruin. Bourbon, unlike Mauritius, in 1838, is not provided with any labourers to replace the blacks, who will never be induced to continue the field labour. Nothing but an abundant introduction of Africans from the Mozambique coast can save this colony: it is in that direction the inhabitants must look for safety. Time should have been allowed for this change, for the sake of the tranquillity of the island.—Mauritius Mail, Aug. 8.

LITERARY & SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

The Report of the Council of the Asiatic Society of Paris, for the year 1847-48, delivered by M. Mohl, at the general meeting of the Society in August last, furnishes a comprehensive view of the state and progress of Oriental literature in Europe.

After noticing the recent political events in France, which had paralyzed, for a time, the action of the Society, the Report notices the various publications in which are recorded the transactions of the Asiatic Societies of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Delhi, Batavia, London, and Germany, and the new and powerful auxiliary which Oriental literature was likely to find in the Imperial Academy of Vienna, under the presidency of M. de Hammer Purgstall. In Holland, a body of Dutch scholars published a work entitled Orientalia, containing papers by M. M. Hamaker, Weijers, and others, relating for the most part to the literary history of the Arabs.

M. Mohl then details the progress made by Oriental literature in Europe, beginning with that of Arabia. The work of the celebrated Reiske, on the ancient history of the Arabs, long supposed to be lost, has been discovered by M. Wustenfeld in the library at Göttingen, and in spite of the light which has been thrown upon the subject by numerous writers since the time of Reiske, it still contains new and valuable matter. A work, however, was required that should combine a mass of mutilated facts, weigh their authenticity, and complete them by the scattered testimonies supplied by the annals of nations that were in contact with the Arabs prior to Mahomet, and this great undertaking has been attempted by M. Caussin de Perceval, in his "Essay on the History of the Arabs before Islamism," now in course of publication. Amongst the productions relating to the posterior periods of the history of this people and their religion, is enumerated the Geschichte der Khalifen (History of the Khalifs), of Dr. Weil, extracted from MSS. in the libraries of Paris, Leyden, and Gotha, which were entrusted to him in the most liberal manner, strongly contrasted with the jealousy which in former times concealed such articles, as if they were relics, rather than materials for public use. "In the libraries of St. Petersburg, Berlin, Gotha, the East-India Company, the Asiatic Society of London, &c., there is now sufficient respect for science and trust in scholars to induce the lending of MSS., even in a foreign country, to persons whose name and character inspire confidence." The second volume of Dr. Weil's work carries the history on from the fall of the Ommyades to the death of the twenty-second khalif of the Abassides, which forms the most splendid epoch of the empire of the Arabs, in which their power and intellectual culture attained their culminating point; but in which the seeds of decay were rapidly germinating. Histories of particular dynasties have been published by various writers; M. Defrémery has written a history of the Sajides and of the Seljukides, and a memoir of the Amirs al-Omra, an introduction to a promised history of the Bowide dynasty. M. Dozy, of Leyden, has edited al-Marrekoshi's "History of the Almohades" of Spain, which has been printed at the expense of the Oriental Text Committee. He has also published a collection of Arabian works, including the poem of Ibn Abdoon, composed in the beginning of the thirteenth century, on the occasion of the fall of the Apsaside princes of Badajoz, which owes its interest in the eyes of European scholars to the accompanying commentary of Ibn Badroon, and embodies a vast variety of valuable facts and historical anecdotes. A translation of the history of the conquest of Mesopotamia, by Wakedi, cadi of Bagdad, in the latter portion of the second century of the Hegira, which had been commenced by Niebuhr (the historian of Rome), has been completed by Dr. Mordtmann, and published at Hamburg. Wakedi has enjoyed a great reputation in Europe, but his history, which consists of a series of anecdotes, and has been adulterated by the popular story-tellers, who drew their supplies from that source, has the air of an historical romance.

Arabian geography has received attention. M. Reinaud is publishing his translation of the Geography of Abulveda, with notes and a valuable introduction, in which the history of geography amongst the Arabs is, for the first time, investigated. M. Reinaud traces the origin of geographical science in Arabia; examines the works of the principal geographers, their astronomical and mathematical methods, their system of charts, the discovery of the compass, &c. M. Wustenfeld has completed his edition of the text of the Moshtarik of Yakuti, an author who belongs to the important epoch in Arabian literature which immediately preceded the conquests of Genghis Khan, when the knowledge of the Arabs had attained its greatest development, and their libraries abounded with literary works. Yakuti himself is an enlightened and trustworthy author. He was a Greek by birth, and became slave to a Musulman merchant, who gave him some education, and when Yakuti obtained his freedom, he devoted himself to learning. He speaks with delight of the years he spent in the libraries of Merv, whence he derived most of the materials for his works before he was forced to fly by the Mongols. The Moshtarik is an extract of the Great Dictionary of Yakuti, and treats only of the names that are common to several localities. M. Wustenfeld has commenced an edition of the Cosmography of Kaswini, combining two of that writer's works, his celebrated "Treatise on the Wonders of the Creation," and the "Book of the Monuments of Countries." Kaswini is a compiler after the manner of Pliny and the encyclopaedists of the Middle Ages; he collected and methodised the observations and opinions of many writers, which are valuable, as showing the theories and notions of the Arabs in the natural sciences.

M. Mohl then states what has been done to enlarge our knowledge of Arabian poetry, which, he observes, is now studied less for its sentiment and æsthetic qualities, than as a means of tracing the manners of the Arabs and their historical recollections. "The nature of the ancient Arabian poetry was adapted to this end; for many ages, the intellectual products of the Arab mind clothed themselves in verse; every incident gave rise to a scrap of poetry; every man of note chanted his own great feats as well as those of his tribe, and every tribe had its dissan, which recorded its claims to martial and literary renown." The best of these pieces were collected into anthologies, one of the most celebrated of which is the Hamasa, composed in the early part of the third century of the Hegira, by Abu Temmam, and which contains pieces by 515 poets, either anterior to Mahomet or of the generation immediately succeeding him. Of this precious classic, two translations have recently appeared, one in Latin, by M. Freytag, and another in German, by M. Rückert, who has accomplished the almost impracticable task of rendering the pieces into verse, often in the original metre. Another difficult undertaking, the translation of a part of an anthology called "The Pearl," composed by Abu Mansur Tsalibi, a curious book, throwing much light upon the mode of life of literary men and courtiers in the fourth century of the Hegira,—has been performed by M. Dieterici, of Leipsic.

M. M. Wolf and Soerensen have published two translations from the Arabic on subjects connected with the scholastic theology of the Musulmans: one is a manual by El-Senusi; the other, the Stations of Adhadeddin al-Eji. "Musulman theology," observes M. Mohl, "is enriched with certain productions falling within a department of science called by the Arabs kalam, which grew out of their contact with the philosophical schools of Greece. These schools having furnished the Musulman schismatic sects with arms against the orthodox theology, the latter was obliged to avail itself in turn of philosophy, in order to vindicate its interpretation of the Korân; and from this conflict has originated a philosophy of religion exactly resembling that of the scholastics of the Middle Age. This compound of theology and dialectics is studied with intense ardour, and discussions are carried on, at the present day, in Damascus and Delhi, respecting being and non-being, quiddity and causality, with the same gravity as was done at Paris five centuries ago."

After an enumeration of a great variety of elementary works and dictionaries for facilitating the acquisition of Arabic, the Report passes to the literature of the other Semitic tongues. Two works on the Samaritans have been published by M. Juynebol, at Leyden; one a history of the nation, by himself; the other, the Chronicle of Joshua. The study of the Phœnician language has made some progress. M. Judas has published at Paris a collection of Phœnician monuments more complete than that of Gesenius, with explanations, including the inscription discovered in 1846 at Ham-seilles.

The Report notices the enterprising French traveller, M. Abbadié, who has resided for several years in Abyssinia, whence he has brought 200 works, out of 330 which compose the literature of the Abyssinians. Few historical results are expected from this "secondary literature."

M. Mohl mentions with exultation the unexpected discovery of some Syriac MSS. by M. Pacho, who states that the monks of a convent in the Thebaid, having bargained to sell to Mr. Tattam all their MSS., after receiving payment for all, kept back half, which were bought by M. Pacho, and have been added to the rest in the British Museum. M. Mohl hopes that Oriental history will partake with patristic theology the results obtainable from this mass of Syriac works (366 in number), wrested from ignorant Egyptian monks. The Syriac language, he observes, may be expected to aid the interpretation of the cuneiform inscriptions.

The antiquities procured from Nemroud, in Mesopotamia, by Mr. Layard and M. Botta, and the success of Capt. Rawlinson in decyphering the arrow-head characters, are next referred to, and a résumé is given of the progress made in interpreting the various kinds of these characters.

The Report then passes to the modern Persian literature, noticing the publication in England of Mr. Bland's article on Persian biography; the translation of the Gulistan by M. Graf, at Leipzig, and that of the Bakharistan of Jami, by M. Schlechte, at Vienna. This is the first time the Bakharistan has been put into a European dress. M. Schlechte has imitated (in German) the rhythm and the alliteration so frequent in the Persian prose. A translation of Hafiz into German has been made by M. Baumer.

M. Rosen (brother of the late Dr. Rosen) has translated from the Turkish the Narrative of the Journey of Sheikh Zeyn al-Abidin in the interior of Africa. This holy personage pretends to have discovered, in Waday, the ruins of a large city, with columns, stone sarcophagi, medals of gold, and plates of copper, covered with inscriptions.

The account of the progress made in the literature of India must be reserved for a future notice.

On the top of the Argepuro, the pinnacle of the Jyang mountains, in Java, Messrs. Bosc and Zollinger have lately discovered, at a height of upwards of 9000 feet, on the site of an extinct crater, the remains of what appears to have been once a religious establishment, consisting of a number of rude terraces, set round with stones, and some enclosures also formed of upheven stones. There is a rocky well, walled up with stones, about six feet deep. The most extraordinary discovery in such an elevated place was that of a number of pots or jars, about two feet high, having a mouth of about a foot wide, and bellying out below. Externally they are covered with a bluish glazing, and have some ornamental work round the rim. No images were discovered. — Tijdschrift v. Nederlandsch Indië.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

MONDAY, November 30, 1846.

THE total change of circumstances which recent events have produced in the Punjab; the unexpected disclosure of the important fact, that our relations with the state of Lahore stand upon the most slippery basis; that the ruling authorities in that country, the influential chiefs and the Sikh troops, are worse than enemies, being hollow and deceitful friends,—these considerations, if further experience shall prove the premises to be well founded, must tend to modify our policy towards the Lahore state, and to compel a revision of the treaties of 1846. If the sovereign of that state and his ministers are unable to control the chiefs and soldiers, so as to prevent them from forming or aiding projects at direct variance with the spirit of these treaties; à fortiori, if they are art and part with the projectors, betraying an animus repugnant to the "perpetual peace and friendship" stipulated by the treaties; there arises that paramount necessity which, analogous to the law of self-preservation in individuals, justifies the extremest measures, of offence as well as defence, if these be not, in such emergencies, convertible terms.

This necessity, however, has its limits, and they are plain and obvious, where no sinister views or arrière pensées cloud the mental perception of statesmen. A man who, in pure self-defence, kills a highwayman or an assassin, has no right to rifle his pockets; and a state, justly provoked into war by a neighbour, must not avail itself of success to exact more than will satisfy the exigencies of the case. We mention this condition because, although it is an obvious one, yet, in the excitement of that mixed sentiment, compounded of resentment and of hope, which springs up in patriotic minds upon such an occasion, it is often overlooked, and we see enough in the extravagant speculations of "politicians" in India,—who are already reviving the doctrine that the safety of our Indian empire requires that its western boundary should be pushed to the Indus,—to believe that it may be salutary to keep in memory a truth which is concentrated in the popular apophthegm that "might does not constitute right."

That, if it were practicable, it would be politic, to annex to our territories the other four doabs of the Punjab, is a question by no means satisfactorily settled. Experience has shown that extension of dominion has always caused a heavy drain upon our Indian exchequer, and no complaint is more common than of the evils attendant upon the constant augmentation of our colossal empire in Hindostan, to which all our shortcomings are attributed. It absorbs the funds that might be applied to roads, buildings, and local improvements; it diverts the attention of the Government from the multifarious and distracting cares essential to the well-governing of thirty millions of people in the peculiar and abnormal condition of the Hindus; it forces the best-intentioned rulers upon hasty and partial attempts at patchwork amelioration, and prevents them from building up the social fabric in a firm and compact manner, which requires that the cavities should be filled up, not with perishable rubbish, but with fragments of brick and stone.* But the policy is questionable,—at all events has been questioned,—upon grounds more directly connected with our own interest. On political and military considerations alone, very grave doubts are entertained whether our empire would be stronger with the Indus for our immediate frontier than with the Sutlej for our real boundary, and the Beas for a military outwork. Competent foreigners are, upon this point, better judges, or at least surer authorities, than our own countrymen, whose opinions are unavoidably tinged with prejudice or prepossession; but the testimony of foreigners is conflicting. Captain Von Orlich asserts that, unless possessed of the Punjab, there is no security for the British power in India; that "the Indus above Attock, with the mountain chain beyond Peshawar and the Himalaya mountains, form the true and natural frontier of the immense dominions of the British empire in India: when once this has been attained, all her powers can be concentrated in the interior, and civilization take root and flourish."† On the other hand, Baron von Hügel, who discusses the question minutely, and enters into very clear details, comes to an opposite conclusion. He shows that, from its mouth to the junction with the rivers of the Punjab, "the Indus cannot be a line of defence, nor a military frontier;"‡ that, supposing the Indus to be the frontier of India, invaders would have a strong country to retreat upon; whilst a reverse on our part would expose our troops to a succession of disasters in a most difficult and barren country. But the strongest objection to this advance of our frontier consists in the impossibility of stopping there. This fact has not escaped the Baron: "Should events," he adds, "extend the English frontier to the Indus, they must necessarily advance their line of defence further to the west, into the mountains between Kabul and Herat, perhaps as far as Herat itself!"

In discussing the practicability of conquering the Punjab, we must undoubtedly take into consideration the important fact, that "the Sikhs" are not the "people;" that they are merely a dominant caste, comparatively few in proportion to the Hindoos and Musulmans, the Jats and the Catts, who inhabit the country of the Five Rivers, and there may be very slender ties of attachment between them.

* Dryden.

† Travels in India, vol. I. p. 179.

The result of our occupation of the Punjab, under the most favourable circumstances, may be estimated from the fruits which Scinde has yielded to its conquerors. Upon this head, we have the testimony of an able, honest, and impartial witness—the Indian Correspondent of the Times—whose prejudices, if any, may be expected to counteract the opinions he has formed from unusual opportunities of general investigation of the financial history and actual condition of the province.

The number of troops maintained in Scinde from 1843 to 1847 has varied from 10,643 in 1844, to 18,003 in 1846; and the military expenditure, including commissariat and contingent charges, has averaged Rs. 82,50,000 per annum; to which must be added the civil disbursements, averaging Rs. 14,80,000 per annum; making an aggregate of charge amounting to very little short of a million sterling a year. The set-off, in the shape of net receipts of revenue, is 130,000*l*.

That the financial results of the annexation of the Punjab to our dominions, taking into account the mass of discontent and the perturbed spirits which such a measure must call into action, would be more favourable, cannot be anticipated by the most sanguine advocates of the annexation theory. Should disasters befall us—and the memory of the Caudine Forks of Cabul is not yet obsolete—how fearfully would they act upon the people of Hindustan!

In one respect the analogy between the case of the Punjab under British management and that of Scinde, as respects the welfare of the people, would, no doubt, be perfect. The authority we have just referred to says,—

"As regards the present state of Scinde, it is a subject on which I can appropriately offer some remarks from personal observations of the province. Some months back I rode inland along the Indus from Kurrahee to Hyderabad, and descended the stream from that capital to the sea. Everywhere there were traces of the most marked progress—a progress in institutions of government, safety of person, and means of internal communication; the ordinary work of centuries accomplished in a few years. The military arrangements made by the late Governor are on all hands admitted to be of the most complete and effective description. Sir Charles Napier is still the constant theme of warm praise and admiration to almost every soldier who served under him in Scinde. It is understood, however, that Sir George Clerk, who recently investigated in Scinde the operations of its government, discovered many traces of corruption and peculation in the lower departments, but which is not matter of surprise in a lately-subdued territory, formerly pre-eminant for its degree of maladministration, and when our system of rule is yet incomplete."

This state of things undoubtedly furnishes consolatory reflections; and as our Indian coffers overflowed with a perennial stream of funds applicable to the more luxury of doing good to other nations, we might indulge in that enjoyment; but as this is not the fact, we may doubt whether, upon financial grounds alone, we should not act upon the maxim of regulated selfishness, that "charity begins at home."

Mahomedanism supplies a striking illustration of the superior power of Christianity in advancing human civilization; because, with advantages which no pagan nation ever enjoyed, with a power that at one time had nearly exterminated heathenism throughout the East, and which still keeps it in subjection, with resources and energies also which, at a later period, threatened to vanquish Christian Europe itself, Mahomedanism has sunk into subjection to the Christian nations in every part of the world.—British Quarterly Review.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE INDIAN NAVY.—At a Court of Directors held at the East-India House on the 15th November, Capt. Stephen Lushington, R.N., was appointed Superintendent of the Indian Navy, vice Sir Robert Oliver, deceased. It is probable that Capt. Lushington (who was in command of the Vengeance, 84, in the Mediterranean Sea, and whose services have long merited the honour) will be knighted before leaving for India.

LORD HARDINGE AND THE INDIAN ARMY.—At the Civic Festival, at Guildhall, on the 9th November, Lord Hardinge, in returning thanks for the toast of "the British Army," said:—"You, my Lord Mayor, have done me the honour to allude to my services in India. I beg leave to say, the country owes much to the bravery of that portion of Her Majesty's army which is in India. They fought well; worthy of the high reputation they obtained in the Peninsula under the Duke of Wellington (loud cheers). The sepoy army, equally with their European brethren, deserve thanks for their services. I have received letters from India, describing on a recent occasion the pleasure and delight of the British soldiers at the manner in which the sepoys conducted themselves. Under that able and heroic young officer, Edwardes (cheers), the native troops equally distinguished themselves. Upon every occasion they conducted themselves with the greatest gallantry. It was undoubtedly true that the major-general in command had been obliged to suspend operations; and you will allow me to make the observation, that, while military men are engaged on important service at a distance, and derive great encouragement from the feeling that their fellow-countrymen here justly appreciate their exertions, it is not always easy at home to estimate the precise difficulties of their position, or the motives that may have actuated them. I have the pleasure, however, to state that, on the occasion to which I allude, the major-general commanding received the full and unanimous approbation of the British officers who were on the spot; and my opinion is, that he acted a judicious part. (Cheers.) I hope to see the successful issue of the expedition. In point of numbers and equipment, the army is superior to what it was under Lord Gough in 1845, and I have no doubt of the result." (Loud cheers.)

THE LE BAS PRIZE.—Cambridge, Nov. 11.—The Vice-Chancellor has laid before the Senate the following statement respecting a new prize offered to the University:—"A large number of members of the Civil Service of India, who were students at the East-India College, at Haileybury, at various intervals, during the thirty years that the Rev. G. W. Le Bas, M.A., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, was connected with that institution, desirous of testifying their regard for Mr. Le Bas, and of perpetuating the memory of his services, have raised a fund, amounting to about £1,200, three per cent. Consols, which they offer to the University of Cambridge for founding an annual prize, to be called, in honour of Mr. Le Bas, the Le Bas Prize, for the best English essay on a subject of general literature, such subject to be occasionally chosen with reference to the history, institutions, and probable destinies and prospects of the Anglo-Indian empire. It is proposed, 1. That the Le Bas Prize shall consist of the annual interest of the above-mentioned fund, the essay being published at the expense of the successful candidate. 2. That the candidates for the prize shall be, at the time when the subject is given out, Bachelors of Arts under the standing of M.A., or Students in Civil Law or Medicine, of not less than four, or more than seven, years' standing, not being graduates in either faculty, but having kept the exercises necessary for the degree of Bachelor of Law or Medicine. 3. That the subject for the essay shall be selected and the prize adjudicated by the Vice-Chancellor and two other members of the Senate, to be nominated by the Vice-Chancellor and approved by the Senate at the first congregation after the 10th day of October in each year. 4. That the subject shall be given out in the week preceding the division of the Michaelmas Term in each year, and the essays sent in before the end of the next ensuing Easter Term. 5. That, for the present year, the two examiners to be selected by the Senate shall be appointed, and the subject for the essay given out, before the end of the present term. A grace to accept the above proposal will be offered to the Senate at the congregation on Wednesday, the 22nd inst."

RAILWAYS IN INDIA.—The following circular, in favour of the introduction of the railway system into Bombay, has been issued by some of the leading firms of Manchester. It bears the signature of E. Armitage, mayor; T. Bazley, president of the Chamber of Commerce; M. Fielden, president of the Chamber of Commerce of Blackburn; James Kershaw, Robert Gardner, Thomas Ashton Hyde, H. and E. Ashworth, John Whittaker, George Wilson, and John Bright and Brothers:—"Feeling an earnest desire that the general resources of British India should be quickly and wisely developed, and observing with satisfaction the proposal to construct a railway from Bombay to Callian, as the first portion of a line immediately communicating with important cotton-growing districts, we venture to ask for the support of the trade of Lancashire for the Great India Peninsula Railway Company, whose object will, we believe, if attained, greatly contribute to the benefit of this country, as well as to that of India. We do not presume to recommend this railway for the purpose of merely investing capital; but trade and commerce having paramount interests in an extended intercourse with India, it is deemed desirable upon public grounds only to evince corresponding solicitude for its establishment, and by moderate subscriptions to identify the good wishes and favourable hopes of the cotton trade with a work calculated to promote even national prosperity."—The East-Indian Railway Company have advertised a notice that application is intended to be made to Parliament for a Bill to incorporate that Company, and to enable the Company to obtain all powers and privileges from the Government of India necessary for the objects of the undertaking; and also to confer on the East-India Company, or the Government of India, all powers necessary for authorising, constructing, maintaining, protecting, and regulating railways and railway works in India, and purchasing and holding lands; and to enable the East-Indian Railway Company to enter into contracts with the East-India Company and the Government of India, or any other body corporate or person in Great Britain or India; and also to limit the responsibility of the proprietors in the undertaking to the amount of their shares respectively, &c. The Great India Peninsula Railway Company have also given notice, that application is intended to be made to Parliament for a Bill to incorporate the Company for making, maintaining, and working a railway from Bombay to, or near to, Callian, with branches or extensions to other places, and to provide for the raising by the Company of a capital adequate to the same purposes, and to limit the responsibility of the shareholders to the extent of their shares respectively in the capital not for the time being paid up, and to give to the Company all powers and privileges which, in relation to the circumstances and undertaking of the Company, and to the East-India Company and Government of India, shall be necessary or expedient for the purposes of the Railway Company, &c.

THE TRAVELLER'S ROUTE.—The following is copy of a letter from an officer of the Madras establishment, dated "Trieste, 21st October, 1848;—" "We met with no impediment whatever en route from London via the Rhine, Switzerland, the St. Gothard, Lago Maggiore, Milan, Cremona, Mantua, Padua, notwithstanding the disturbed state of the whole route, and other travellers have got safely by this road. So long as Englishmen have their passports properly used, every facility is afforded, though many of the places we passed through were in a state of siege."

THE SHIP John Line has been engaged for the conveyance of stores to Madras.

CHANGES AND PROMOTIONS

IN H.M.'S REGIMENTS SERVING IN INDIA.

WAR OFFICE, 10TH NOV. 1848.

Bengal, 24th Foot.—Lieut. Henry Macdonald Burns, from 62nd Foot, to be lieut., v. Daubeny, who exchanges. Dated 10th Nov. 1848.

Bombay, 60th Foot.—Henry Cockburn, gent., to be 2nd lieut. without purch., v. Herbert Henry Vaughan, cashiered by the sentence of a general court-martial. Dated 10th Nov. 1848.

Ceylon Rifle Regt.—Second-lieut. Charles Stanhope Smelt to be 1st lieut. without purch., v. Kingsmill, dec. Dated 4th Aug. 1848.

John Alexander Campbell, gent., to be 2nd lieut., v. Smelt. Dated 10th Nov. 1848.

Mr. Macaulay, in a minute recorded in 1838, says:—"It is my firm conviction that we may, without laying any additional burthen on the state, provide Calcutta with a most efficient tribunal, competent to dispose of all the less important and intricate civil cases. This, however, is only a small part of the benefit which I anticipate from a revision of the system of the Court of Requests. We may, with great advantage, make trial in this Court of several important reforms before we introduce them in the Mofussil. An apprehension is often expressed by persons whose opinion is entitled to great weight, that principles of jurisprudence, which theoretically are unobjectionable, may, in practice, be found to produce pernicious results. We can never bring this important question to the test with so much ease and little risk as by trying the experiment in a court for the recovery of small debts at the seat of Government. A bad system may go on long in a remoteillah without attracting much attention, but evils which are daily felt by every shop-keeper in Calcutta must very soon be brought to our knowledge."

THE BUGIS, as a race, are much superior to the Malays; their features are regular and open, their face more inclined to an oval, their eyes are large and dark, their nose more elevated. The women have generally oval faces, noses of a Grecian mould; their eyes are large, dark, and lustrous; their expression soft and gentle, and their figures are in many instances even perfect to a critical eye.—Journ. of Archipelago.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

I. A Practical Treatise on Chemical Analysis. By H. ROSE. Translated from the French and from the fourth German edition, with Notes and Additions. By A. NORMANDY. London. Tegg.

II. Practical Introduction to H. Rose's Treatise on Chemical Analysis. By A. NORMANDY. London. Tegg.

THE student of a science which, like chemistry, has made, within our own days, a rapid progress from infancy towards maturity, cannot but be interested in the appearance of Manuals professing to collect and systematize for his use the results of eager and laborious philosophical research. The translator of a work such as the present, bearing the name of a foreigner of no mean celebrity, must, therefore, expect a strict scrutiny of the manner in which he has performed his task: and the more so in the present instance, as the branch of science which Professor Rose has treated of is one which demands the utmost attention to clearness and system. The theory of equivalents—though dimly shadowed in the works of ancient philosophers,—is due to Professor Richter, of Berlin, who, in 1792, propounded the law of general reciprocity of saturating proportions. This hint was developed by Mr. Dalton, whose indefatigable zeal in following up the laborious investigations of Richter, together with the scientific enunciation of a new law, that of prime equivalents and definite proportions, entitles him to be called the founder of Quantitative Analysis. The path so ably shown was followed by many illustrious chemists; and the researches of Davy, Wollaston, and Gay-Lussac on this interesting subject made way for the final improvement of analytical chemistry by Berzelius, whose careful experiments and calculations have rendered its study at once easy and devoid of tediousness.

Professor Rose's excellent work is a Manual for the analyst, exhibiting, in a systematic and practical form, the course most expedient for him to pursue in his labours, and supplying valuable tables to expedite his calculations. Nor is the value of his book diminished by several able notes by M. Peligot, taken, we presume, from the French edition. The notation adopted throughout is that of Berzelius, whose system of symbols is infinitely less cumbrous than that adopted by some other chemists, although the radix of his numerical scale (oxygen = 100) has been by some considered inferior to that used by the English chemists (hydrogen = 1).

We come now to the manner in which Mr. Normandy has performed his task. And here we cannot say but with regret, that no one can attempt to read through the Preface to his Introduction without being painfully sensible of a want of clearness and system, without which such a work is almost worse than useless. Nor is this feeling diminished on proceeding farther. The whole Introduction shows a carelessness of diction, and want of arrangement, while (as Mr. Normandy will, we are sure, confess on repetition) deteriorate the whole work; one that, from its design, and its author's evident acquaintance with his subject, would otherwise prove of great utility.

As a specimen of the annotations, the following may be given, p. 3, of the Treatise:—

"During ignition, the cover should be kept on for fear of loss from decrepitation, since even the crystals of sulphate of potash which have been kept for a long time at a drying heat are liable to decrepitate when a stronger heat is applied; wherefore the heat should be very gradually increased, and the cover carefully kept on, as we have said."

Mr. Normandy's knowledge of chemical science has enabled him to perform the work of translation in a manner which no one can find fault with. However, should he indulge the world with any more works on chemistry, we should like to see the affected spelling of oxyde corrected for oxide, the orthography used by (we believe) most of the English chemists.

In India, agates and other valuable stones are roasted in small earthen pots nearly to redness, and are allowed leisurely to cool again, when colours and streaks make their appearance, which the unpractised observer never would have looked for. In most cases, this must arise from the oxidization of the metallic matter contained in the stone, showing that, compact as they are, agates, and jaspers, are permeable to air.

GUANO, when associated in nitric acid, so as to destroy all animal matter, leaves a residue, which, examined under a powerful microscope, presents the most beautiful forms, being the remains of the siliceous skeletons of marine animalcules which adhere to marine plants, and are so swallowed with their food by the larger animals which are the food of the sea-birds that produce the guano.

THE PROPRIETOR OF THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

The LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, 247, 249, and 251, Regent Street.—W. C. JAY, Proprietor.

TO INDIAN SPORTSMEN.

HENRY TATHAM, GUN MAKER, 37, Charing Cross, London, begs respectfully to thank his patrons in India for the great encouragement he is receiving in the sale of his Short Musket-bored Double-barrelled Rifle, with a pair of extra shot barrels to fit the same stock, if required, fitted up in a leather case, with the necessary apparatus complete, which are considered by all gentlemen who have tried them to be the most perfect.—HENRY TATHAM has always on hand a variety of new and second-hand Guns, with all the modern improvements.—Also, Air Guns for shot and ball.

Orders should be accompanied by a remittance, or reference for payment in London.

PORTABLE SODA WATER APPARATUS.—BASSETT'S.—This apparatus will enable persons to make Soda Water themselves at any time, and at a trifling expense (about 1d. per bottle). It is also applicable for rendering most beverages effervescent and sparkling, such as Gooseberry Wine, Cider, Ale, and Lemonade. Flat soft water can also be very greatly improved by its aid. Part of the apparatus can be made available as a cork-screw, or a siphon, for drawing off ANY PORTION of a bottle of champagne. It is portable, being only 6 in. by 2, and so simple in operation that a native servant may use it without risk of putting it out of order.—Price 10s. 6d. Manufacture.—16, CASTLE STREET, HOLBORN.

CLEAR and SOFT SKIN.—ROWLANDS' KALYDOR.—an Oriental Balsamic Preparation, perfectly free from all mineral or metallic admixture. It is distinguished for its extremely bland, purifying, and soothing effects on the skin; while by its action on the pores and minute secretory vessels, it expels all impurities from the surface, allays every tendency to inflammation, and thus effectually dissipates all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolours, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. To ladies during the period of nursing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it allay all irritation and tenderness of the skin, and render it soft, smooth, and pleasant. During the heat and dust of summer, or frost and bleak winds of winter, and, in cases of sun-burn, stings of insects, chills, or chapped skin, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by Her Majesty the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and the several courts of Europe, together with the élite of the aristocracy, from the sunny climes of India to the frozen realms of the Czar.—Beware of spurious "KALYDORS" for sale, containing mineral ingredients utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repellant action endangering health. The words—"ROWLANDS' KALYDOR" are on the wrapper of the genuine article; and the words "A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hanson Garden," are also engraved (by desire of the Hon. Commissioners) on the Government stamp affixed on each bottle. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. Sold by the proprietors and by all respectable Chemists and perfumers.

A LIFE GUARDSMAN, ONE OF THE HEROES OF WATERLOO, CURED OF RHEUMATISM BY HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Mr. Thomas Branton, landlord of the Waterloo Tavern, Coutham, Yorkshire, was afflicted for many months with rheumatism and rheumatic gout; his legs were dreadfully painful, and disfigured with colours of every hue, frightful to behold. For ten weeks he was wholly unable to walk; the treatment he received from medical men not only failing to do him any good, but leaving him, in fact, in a considerably worse condition. At this juncture, Holloway's Ointment and Pills were resorted to, and by their sole means he has been restored to health and strength.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 344, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c.—They furnish equal pressure in every part, are perfectly porous, and draw on without lacing. Many have attempted to imitate them, by introduction of an article so full of serious defects, as to render this caution to the public necessary. H. and Co.'s Surgical Stockings, &c. are patronised by all the first surgeons in the kingdom.

HUXLEY and Co., 5, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

JEREMIE'S SEDATIVE SOLUTION OF OPIUM, first prepared at Patna, in Bengal.—The nobility, gentry, and gentlemen of the Family, are respectfully informed that this valuable preparation of Opium, so highly recommended in India as a safe and effectual remedy in all cases requiring the use of Opium, and in Epidemic Cholera, especially, is now prepared exclusively (by desire of the representative of the late Capt. Jerome, late Assistant to Sir Charles D'Oyly, Bart., opium agent in Bengal), by SAVORY and MOORE, Chemists to the Queen, 163, New Bond Street, and 220, Regent Street, London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

ADVANTAGES OF THIS INSTITUTION.

ECONOMICAL RATES OF PREMIUM computed expressly for the use of the Company, and presenting the means of effecting policies in a great variety of ways, to suit the objects and circumstances of the assured. Among others the two following tables are particularly deserving of attention:—

1. A table of rates (No. II.) whereby little more than half the amount of premium ultimately payable upon the policy is required during the first seven years, without any deduction from the sum assured when the policy becomes a claim.

2. An extensive table of rates (No. V.) for reversionary annuities, presenting to husbands, fathers of families, and others, one of the cheapest and best possible modes of securing, in the event of premature death, a provision for the special objects of their solicitude.

Complete security afforded to the assured by means of an ample subscribed capital—by the registration of assignments of policies—by the admission of age and interest, during life, where the same have been satisfactorily proved, and by other regulations for facilitating the objects and protecting the interests of all bond fide policy holders.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will shew the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 10th of May, 1846, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Notice is further given, that the Board of Directors in India, by a late despatch, were about to convene a Special General Meeting in Calcutta, for the purpose of submitting a few proposed alterations in the Deed of Settlement, viz.:

Clause 6.—It is proposed that the quorum of the nine Directors be reduced for the business of the Company from five to three.

Clause 18.—It is proposed, in the election of Auditors for the Company, that the words "from among the Shareholders of the said Company" shall be omitted.

Clause 26.—It is proposed to empower the Board of the London Committee to transfer Shares paid up, by inserting in the fourth line of this Clause, after the word "Directors," the words, "or the London Board, if the Shareholders be in Europe."

Clause 30.—Until such time as the Company shall be incorporated (the Directors intending to apply to the Governor-General for an Act of Incorporation), it is proposed that all Contracts made by the Board shall be made and entered in the name of the "Secretary," instead of the "Managing Director." (Vide printed Report of the 17th of July, 1845.)

At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

THE intelligence from the Punjab,—the only part of India which is at present an object of anxiety or a topic for comment,—continues favourable. The British troops before Mooltan had remained unmolested by the enemy up to the date of the latest advices (the 21st October), whilst the reinforcements were hastening their march, like angry masses of clouds gathering round to discharge their meteoric wrath upon some fated spot. It is difficult to understand the policy of Moolraj, who has not only suffered time and opportunity to escape, but has parted with the corps of Shere Singh, whose separate action cannot operate so much to his advantage as in a combined attack upon the British forces, weakened by the desertion of an ally, and waiting for assistance. The accounts we receive of the views and motives of the insurgent chiefs, transmitted through native channels, are, however, so little to be relied upon, that speculation upon such grounds is unprofitable.

Our last narrative of the operations of the Mooltan force was brought down to the 1st October, when General Whish had withdrawn into an intrenched camp, about four miles south of the city, and equidistant from the Chenab river. The Dusserah (the 7th) was looked for with some impatience, as the day fixed by the Mooltanis for a general attack; and Moolraj is said to have vowed that he would bathe in the holy tank Soorujkoond, situated close to our camp. This vow, if ever uttered, proved to be like certain other vows, at which Jove is supposed to laugh. Nothing occurred worth noticing until the 9th, when Shere Singh, having during the preceding two days sent off detachments of his troops from these parts of the city farthest removed from the observation of our camp (occupied, probably, with preparations against the menaced attack), left Mooltan, and assembled his troops at Sirdarpore, about 30 miles distant, upon the Chenab, prepared to pass the river at the first intelligence that our troops were moving in pursuit of him. It appears that, upon the report of this unexpected evasion, Major-General Whish determined to send a force after the traitor, and arrangements were made with that view; but he was induced (it is said by the urgent advice of Major Edwardes) to abandon the design. This was, probably, the most prudent resolution; with only 900 cavalry, and the certainty that Moolraj would be ready to attack the camp or the rear of the troops sent in pursuit (for the movement of Shere Singh must have been concerted with him), the risk of a night march after an enemy who had got so much the start would have been eminently hazardous.

On the morning of the 14th, a strong detachment of infantry, accompanied by cavalry and artillery, marched out of camp, headed by the general, on a reconnoissance, and to enable the chief engineer to take the bearings of a bastion. The detachment proceeded along the outskirts of the city, in a north-westerly direction, and then to the north of the fort, and within 400 yards of the city walls. Not a shot was fired, nor was the detachment molested in any way. On their way back, the enemy's cavalry were seen on their flanks, but, upon the horse-artillery and cavalry preparing to charge, the Mooltanis hurried off.

The next incident was an attempt to assassinate General Whish. This is mentioned in a letter from the camp, dated 21st October, published in the Delhi Gazette Extra, of October 26th:—

"An attempt was made this morning to shoot Gen. W. as he was taking his morning ride, in front of our picquets, with some of his staff, and the usual small escort of irregular cavalry. Fortunately for him, and our fame, the bullet whizzed harmlessly over, without touching any one. The marauders were five in number, two of whom were captured by the gallantry of the duffadar, who received a severe sword-cut in the thigh; one of the prisoners will probably die of his wounds, which are plentiful. He was carried into our camp on a charpoy, amongst the excretions of the Europeans; his comrade is untouched, and the worst treatment he will probably receive will amount to 2 annas per diem, and a speedy release! Grain is dearer in Mooltan by one seer—a fact that would seem to be proved by the daring attempts at marauding, resulting, no doubt, from the scarcity of subsistence. The head of a camp-follower even would furnish the means of obtaining food for a time, for certain it is that decapitation is very prevalent. I heard this morning that some camels were carried off from our left front."

The troops are in high health and spirits; the weather had undergone an agreeable change, and all apprehensions of a scarcity having subsided, the camp had been restored to full rations. There had been many desertions to Major Edwardes's force, including 80 Rohillas and 500 Sikhs, from Bunnoo, who had remained faithful.

The movement of Shere Singh is the subject of many conjectures in the letters from Mooltan. By some it is still connected with a supposed quarrel with Moolraj; others, with more probability, conclude that it is part of some combined plan, in which Shere Singh's father, Chuttoor Singh, is a prime actor, the design of which is to attack Lahore. The intelligence from that capital lends a very strong confirmation to the latter interpretation, inasmuch as, if correct, it shows that Chuttoor Singh is advancing upon Lahore. According to the Delhi Gazette (on the authority of a native correspondent), the advance-guard of Chuttoor Singh's force had arrived close to Wuzzeerabad, about seventy miles from Lahore, and Sir F. Currie had not only recalled Brigadier Eckford, who had marched with a column of troops from Ferozepore on the 19th October, but had despatched an extraordinary express for reinforcements to Ferozepore, which had reached that place on the 21st. There is, however, good reason to distrust this intelligence. Letters from Lahore, dated the 20th, and from Brigadier Eckford's force, dated the 21st, make no mention of the advance of Chuttoor Singh, and Shere Singh, at Sirdarpore, on the Chenab, 200 miles from Wuzzeerabad, moving on the right bank of the river, could do little in the way of co-operation with his father.

Everything appeared perfectly quiet at Lahore. On the 7th October a detachment, consisting of part of Skinner's horse, a party of irregular cavalry, the 46th N.I., and two guns, crossed the Ravee in pursuit of Urjun Singh, a notorious freebooter, whose fort of Goojranwalla they blew up. Brigadier Wheeler had also crossed the Beas, and been employed in taking various small forts garrisoned by rebels or marauders. On the 14th he attacked Rungrungul, belonging to Urjun Singh, a fort of some strength, and which was not taken without difficulty. It was occupied by our troops in the name of the Maharajah. He next moved against the fort of Moraree, belonging to Lall Singh, who had "fraternized" with Chuttoor Singh, and occupied by a chief named Metab Singh. This fort, which was strong, and garrisoned by 3,000 men, had not fallen at the date of the last accounts.

Beyond the doubtful report recorded in the Delhi Gazette, to which we have before adverted, there are no certain accounts of the movements of Chuttoor Singh, or of the operations in the Hazareh country, where affairs were, by the last mail, left in a rather critical condition. This sirdar was said, in the last direct reports from thence, to continue in the field with about 10,000 men, but crippled in his movements by the measures of his antagonists.

From Peshawur, the intelligence is to the 5th October, when Major Lawrence still confided in his troops. Mrs. Lawrence, who was at Lahore, was expected to return to Peshawur.

The insurgents at Bannoo, it appears, killed the governor, Futteh Khan, Tawana, and likewise an English colonel in the Sikh service, named Holmes, and, with the exception of the 500 before mentioned, marched to join Chuttoor Singh.

No additional evidence is yet afforded of the complicity of Golab Singh in the Punjab plot, if there be one; on the contrary, he had sent 5,000 of his troops, under Colonel Steinbach, to co-operate with the British forces against Chuttoor Singh, and proclaimed his determination to do all in his power to put down rebellion. From various parts of the Punjab there is proof, or at least reason to believe, that no extensive conspiracy had been organized; the people appear contented; the Mahomedan troops generally are well disposed; the discontent seems to be confined to certain sirdars and the remains of Runjeet's old army, scattered about the country. At the same time, the leaven of treachery has been diffused so widely amongst the entire population, that Sikh, Hindu, and Mahomedan are almost equally unworthy of trust. A writer from the camp, who treats the reports respecting the differences between Moolraj and Shere Singh as a ruse employed by these confederates, states, as a fact, that "a written proclamation had gone the round of all the Punjab chiefs, kardars, and villagers, proclaiming Dhuleep Singh Padshah, Rajah (not Maharajah) Golab Singh wuzeer, Chuttoor Singh Jung Bahadur (commander-in-chief), and Moolraj head dewan."

Meanwhile, the military preparations of the Indian Government are upon a scale which will enable them to grapple with a mightier foe than has yet appeared. An army, to be designated "The army of the Punjab," under the Commander-in-Chief, is to be assembled on the Sutlej, consisting of seven brigades of infantry, and four of cavalry, besides artillery, sappers and miners, &c. The army assembling at Roree, under General Auchmuty, is to number 8,000 men, and would be ready to march by the 15th November. At Ferozepore, some 20,000 troops will assemble, whilst the utmost amount of the forces actually in arms against us does not exceed 33,000 men.

The Calcutta Englishman, referring to the "new political arrangements" which may be expected in the Punjab, observes:—

"It seems premature to speculate on them while the whole question has first to be settled by an appeal to arms; but it must be remembered that the enemy is without fortresses, or revenue, or even concert; and that, although a large number of men may be easily collected by the chiefs in so populous a country, there are very few who can be considered as disciplined soldiers capable of manœuvring in the open field. It is, therefore, not by any means presumptuous to consider the approaching campaign rather as a declaration of the will of the paramount power, than as a dispute to be decided by great battles; nor is it even likely to cause a protracted, though a desultory, resistance."

The local and domestic intelligence from the different Presidencies is barren of incidents. The Governor-General, who left Calcutta on the 11th October, was expected at Allahabad on the 2nd November. It is supposed that he will remain at Umballa. The passage in Lord Dalhousie's speech, at the Barrackpore entertainment, which has been the peg for annexation speculations, is thus reported in the Hurkara :—

"I came to this country a friend to peace,—I wished for peace,—I hoped for peace,—I strove for peace,—and the whole of my mind and the efforts of my Government were for peace and its happy results. I have been disappointed,—war has come upon us, and that people and that country, unwarned by precedent and uninfluenced by example, have called for war, and on my word, Sirs, war they shall have, and with a vengeance."

Sir Dudley Hill, in proposing his lordship's health, employed language which, on such an occasion and in such company, is worthy of notice for its pugnacious spirit :—

"I will only add a very few words, which, coming from a soldier and addressed to you, my lord, the son of a soldier, may not be considered illtimed. The great preponderance of power we possess in British India has been gained by the sword, has been maintained by the sword, and must, as long as we possess a foot of ground in the country, be still preserved by the sword."

The Commander-in-Chief was expected at Ferozepore in the beginning of November.

The Legislative Council has passed "an Act to confirm an agreement between certain shareholders and creditors of the Union Bank of Calcutta," which sanctions the arrangement between the parties, and renders it wholly null and void "as to all other persons;" that is, the release granted to the shareholders who have paid up their contributions shall not discharge others.

The trial of Dr. Mouat, of the 15th Hussars, which has excited so much interest at Madras, has terminated. The court-martial found him guilty, and sentenced him to be dismissed the service. The Commander-in-Chief, however, has disapproved of, and refused to confirm, the finding; but has directed Dr. Mouat to be removed from the regiment, and to proceed to England, when the matter will be reviewed at the Horse Guards.

In the Goomsur districts the people are said to continue in a state of uneasiness from Chokra Bissye's proceedings. Some of his followers made an attack upon the village of Jugganath Persaud, the most considerable sirdar of Paiks in Goomsur, and a faithful servant of Government: they killed two of his inmates, and he himself escaped with difficulty. The Khonds of Chokapaud are as disaffected as ever. A great portion of the Boad Khonds remain wholly in the interest and under the orders of Chokra Bissye, who has also gained several other tribes.

The Governor of Bombay and Commander-in-Chief had returned to that presidency, so that there was a full council.

The death of Ibrahim Pasha, the Viceroy of Egypt, after a reign of two months, is an event not likely to have any political consequences.

SOME OF THE CHIEF PERSONAGES IN THE PUNJAB.

THE RANI CHUNDA.

This lady, the mother of the young Maharaja of Lahore, and now a prisoner at Benares, is really the daughter of a poor Jat of Gujerawalla, named Munnoo Singh, who entered the service of the late Runjeet Singh in the menial capacity of a dog-keeper. His fidelity to his master raised him in the course of time to the more respectable post of doorkeeper; but he was always treated by Runjeet and his courtiers as a kind of low buffoon, and subjected to their coarse wit. This man was in the habit of vaunting the charms of one of his daughters, and the Maharaja sent for the girl (Chunda), who was then (1828) about ten years of age, and being pleased with her appearance, retained her in his zenana; but he never married her. From an early age Chunda was of very loose morals, and before she was fourteen, had more than one paramour, a fact which was notorious even to Runjeet himself. The present Maharaja of Lahore is her son by a Mahomedan named Gulloo, one of Runjeet's favourites, formerly a bheestee (or water-carrier) of the palace. The intimacy of Gulloo with the girl Chunda was known to Runjeet, who nevertheless allowed himself to be reputed the father of the child Dhuleep. Since her son was raised to the throne, in 1843, the Rani Chunda (as she was then called) has been equally notorious for her restless intrigues and her shameless profligacy, carrying on her amours with all the effrontery of a Messalina. She was Regent of the State in 1845, when the Sikh armies, urged by her and her paramour Lall Singh, rushed into desperate collision with the British Government of India. She was also the secret but prime mover of the recent conspiracy, which, but for its timely discovery, might have convulsed the Punjab. The Rani is shrewd, clever, artful, intriguing; insinuating in manners, and plausible in address; but of violent passions, cruel, unprincipled; addicted to ardent liquors, and steeped in the grossest debauchery. She has had several children since the death of Runjeet.

MAHARAJA DHULEEP SINGH.

That the present Maharaja of Lahore (now nearly twelve years of age) is not the son of Runjeet, detracts nothing from his title, adoption being an easy cure for defects of birth, and Dhuleep was recognized by Runjeet towards the close of his life. His predecessor, Sher Singh, was in the same predicament, as well as Peshora Singh, who, but for the treachery of Jowahir, the Rani's brother, might have attained the throne. Dhuleep was born in February, 1837, and is (as before said) really the son of Gulloo Moskee, one of the infamous favourites of Runjeet Singh, and had thereby free access to his zenana. When the Dogur family were plotting the overthrow of Maharaja Sher Singh and the erection of their paramount authority, Dehan Singh, the minister, brought Dhuleep to Lahore, in August, 1843, and in the revolution of the ensuing month, which involved the sovereign, his ambitious minister, and their assassin, Ajeet Singh, in one common ruin, Dhuleep Singh, by the tide of events and circumstances, was raised to the throne. He was recognized by the British Government, by the treaty of 1846, as sovereign of Lahore.

MAHARAJA GOLAB SINGH.

Political characters are always seen through media which distort their real features, and different portraits are drawn of Raja (now Maharaja) Golab Singh, of Jummo. He is the eldest and survivor of three brothers, all of whom acted conspicuous parts at the Court of Runjeet Singh. Dehan Singh, the next brother, was the prime minister of that sovereign, as well as of his successors, Khuruk Singh and Sher Singh, and was killed by Ajeet Singh, immediately after the assassination of Sher Singh. The youngest brother, Suchet Singh, shared the favour of Runjeet; became wealthy and powerful, but did not attain the eminence of his brothers; he fell in a contest with his nephew, the late Heera Singh, the minister of Dhuleep Singh, in March, 1844. The three brothers descended from Suroop Singh, the youngest son of Drupee Dehu, rajah of Jummo, in the hills, who died A.D. 1742. The succession went in the line of the eldest branch, who reigned there until 1809, when, on the death of Jy Singh, the Sikhs expelled the family, and took possession of the territory.

Golab (or Golaaboo) was born in 1788. He was brought up by his uncle, Meean Mota, at Jummo, his father, Kusoor Singh, residing at Ismailpore, a village about ten miles from Jummo, in the plains, on the road to Lahore, where he cultivated a few acres of land. In 1807, when the Sikhs attacked Jummo, Golab distinguished himself by his courage, and Misr Dewan Chund, Runjeet's celebrated general, gave so flattering an account of the young Rajpoot, that Golab was encouraged to come, with his brother Delan, to Lahore, in hopes of finding high employment. In this he was disappointed, and he took military service amongst some of the hill chiefs, but soon returned, in a destitute condition, to his humble home at Ismailpore, where he remained until 1811. In that year, Golab and his brothers again proceeded to Lahore, and being introduced to the notice of Runjeet by Dewan Chund, their handsome persons and supple manners in the course of a few years established them as favourites at that corrupt and depraved Court. In process of time, by his military services in reducing refractory chiefs in the hills, Golab so much ingratiated himself with Runjeet, that he kept pace in the favour of that chief with his brothers, who had won it by less worthy means, and in 1818, they were all created rajas, namely, Golab of Jummo, Dehan of Bheembur, and Suchet of Sumba, with territories producing large revenues.

Whilst his two brothers remained at Lahore, strengthening their power and influence at the Court, Golab repaired to Jummo, where he exercised all the powers of a sovereign prince, extending his territories on every side, ruling his subjects and dependents with a rod of iron. Capt. Smyth says: "ambitious, avaricious, and cruel by nature, he reduced his cruelty to a system for the promotion of his objects, exercising the most ruthless barbarities, and deliberately committing the most horrible atrocities. With all this, he was courteous and polite, exhibiting a suavity of manner and language that contrasted with his real disposition." M. Jacquemont, who visited Golab in his hill principality, in 1831, described him as "a lion in courage, but with the plainest and simplest habits, and the mildest and most elegant manners." Capt. Smyth terms him "a monster," and declares that, in his experience of twenty-six years in the East, he "never heard of so infamous a miscreant as the Raja of Jummo."

In the distractions which followed the death of Runjeet, Golab acted prominent, but often irreconcilable parts. At the struggle for superiority between Sher Singh and Chund Kowr, the Rani of No Nehal Singh, he sided with the Rani, whilst his brothers embraced the party of Sher Singh; yet on the accession of the latter Golab was made commander-in-chief of the army. He was, however, a participator in the project of his brother Delan to dethrone that prince, which was defeated by the counter-conspiracy of Ajeet Singh. He at first supported his nephew Heera Singh, in the wuzerat, but afterwards acted as if he had hostile designs towards him, enriching himself, meanwhile, from the Lahore treasury. During the feverish reign of the Rani Chunda and her brother, he kept aloof, and was no party to the desperate projects against the British power; and the reward of his prudent or crafty policy was the acquisition of increased territory and the title of Maharaja, under the treaty of 1846, by which the British Government transferred, in independent possession, to him and his heirs, all the hill country to the eastward of the Indus and westward of the Ravi, including Chumba and excluding Lahoul.

Since that period Golab has pursued the same cautious but suspicious policy as before. He has added to his territories, and although there is no direct proof of his complicity, he is believed to have been deeply concerned in the late conspiracy.

One who has known him well describes him as an excellent soldier; an active, bold, and energetic, yet cool, wise, and prudent commander. Though unlettered, his shrewd and vigorous understanding supplies the want of education. He is cheerful, humorous, and affable to the lowest and poorest of his subjects, often assisting them in their manual labours. He eats opium, tells long stories, and sleeps little. He has two sons.

CHUTTOOR SINGH, ATTAREEWALLA.

This sirdar, the father of Sher Singh, the commander whose treachery at Mooltan has retarded the capture of that fortress, is descended in the third degree from Nehal Singh, the head of the Attareewalla family, and appears to have been a partisan of Golab Singh, though one of the generals of Runjeet. When Peahora Singh, in 1845, was causing uneasiness to the Rani's faction at Lahore, Chuttoor Singh was employed by Jowahir Singh and Golab Singh to get rid of the prince. Finding the use of force imprudent, considering the popularity of Peahora amongst the troops, Chuttoor, in concert with Futteh Khan, Tawana (who has been recently killed by the Sikh mutineers), resorted to stratagem. Entering into negotiations with the prince, the latter was prevailed upon to quit the fort of Attock and accompany the two generals to Lahore, upon a solemn pledge of safety; notwithstanding which, he was basely seized, conveyed to a dungeon at Attock, and strangled. This atrocity provoked the resentment of the troops, who killed Jowahir Singh. Chuttoor took refuge in the hill country, under the protection of his friend and patron Golab Singh. He reappeared at Lahore when the British troops entered the Jullinder Doab, and was one of the sirdars who signed the treaty of 1846. He is described as crafty, perfidious, and intriguing, and he has vindicated his title to these qualities by his recent treacherous conduct in the Hazareh country.

SHAIKH EMAM-OD-DEEN.

The family of the Shaikh were Patan adventurers, who settled in the Jullinder Doab, the revenues of which they latterly farmed. About fifty years ago, all the adult members of the family, save one, were killed in a feud at Kirtapore, a small town in the doab, and the children of the survivor were reduced to poverty, subsisting by the sale of shoes, or by other humble occupations. In troubled times they reared their heads again, and after the death of Runjeet Singh, they obtained the farm of the doab, the revenues of which they withheld, though their exactions were oppressive. The cession of the Jullinder Doab to the British Government terminated the greatness of the family, who sunk to the level of private life, though wealthy individuals.

Emam-ood-Deen succeeded his father, the late Shaikh Golan Mohee-ood-Deen, a bold and crafty man, who governed Cashmere for the Sikhs in the reign of Sher Singh; and Emam, in September, 1846, made an effort, in conjunction with a party at Lahore, to possess himself of Cashmere, the inhabitants of which are chiefly Mahomedans, and to hold it against Golab Singh, to whom it had been transferred. The latter, however, being supported by the British Government, was too strong for his antagonist, though countenanced by some of the petty hill chiefs, and Emam surrendered to a British officer,—that officer being his late coadjutor and ally, Major Edwardes. An investigation took place into the cause of the insurrection, and the Shaikh, in the presence of the British authorities at Lahore, charged Lall Singh, the minister, to his face, with prompting the insurrection, and produced letters in proof of his guilt. The result was that Lall Singh was deposed from the wuzerat, and Emam-ood-Deen secured his pardon.

BENGAL.

OPERATIONS BEFORE MOOLTAN.

Our former narrative extended to the 1st of October, at which date Gen. Whish lay encamped four miles from Mooltan, entrenched and well defended by artillery, and in expectation that some attack would be made on them, or threatened at the period of the Dusserah—a week afterwards. Taking up the story of the siege where it broke off, we find that provisions and money were getting scarce at Mooltan, and that the jealousies and mistrust, which had from the beginning existed between Shere Singh and Moolraj, were on the increase. About this time the insurgents contrived to obtain possession of a boat-load of stores to the value of 500*l.* to 700*l.* on its way down the Ravee and Chenab from Lahore, the property of an European merchant, and intended for the various messes in camp. Four companies of sappers and pioneers, under Capt. Siddons, proceeded to Soojabad—one of the posts long held by Lieut. Edwardes—to prepare fascines and gabions for the coming siege, about twenty miles from camp, and at one time intended as a dépôt for heavy ordnance stores. The town was at this time reported to be nearly deserted by its inhabitants—shopkeepers, provision-dealers, and money-changers, almost alone remaining. The great festival of the Dusserah—the season of the former Sikh outrages—at length arrived, and Moolraj was said to have vowed he would bathe in the holy tank of Soorujkoond, as had been his wont from his youth. The watering-place was close to our camp, and under the influence of religious feeling, it was hoped the troops would show themselves in the plain, and give us an opportunity of attacking them. Instead of this, the insurgents went out in the opposite direction, and burned no end of powder for the honour of the occasion, scarcely within hearing of our camp. Oomra Singh, one of the Sikhs recognised as having attempted to corrupt our sepoys at Lahore, in April, was at this time caught bathing,—captured, sent into camp, and despatched to Lahore, to be dealt with by the darbar according to his deserts. He had originally belonged to the 42nd N. I., and, having taken his discharge, was selected for the service he undertook, at the date just named, from his familiarity with the habits of our sepoys. On the evening of the 8th, Lieut. Christopher, I. N., died of wounds received by him on the 9th of September. Col. Pattoun, who fell on the occasion, desired more men immediately; and Lieut. Christopher, serving as a volunteer, undertook to guide two companies of H. M.'s 10th to the scene of action,—the localities being unknown to them. This duty performed, while he lingered near the scene, a matchlock ball shattered his ankle-bone; amputation was twice performed. He died much regretted by all who knew him. One of our soldiers who had fallen into the hands of the enemy, and was believed to have been cruelly treated, is said on the contrary to have been provided with a house and servant, and to receive every attention from his captors. He is employed as interpreter, and translates the contents of the letters and newspapers intercepted by the insurgents; he is an Irishman, and is said to enjoy the joke immensely. Treasure to the amount of 18,000*l.* sent from Lahore for the pay of the troops of Shere Singh, before his treachery became known, about this time fell into the hands of the insurgents. On the 9th, Rajah Shere Singh slipped away from the city, the two preceding days having been occupied in sending off detachments of his troops from the north and north-east sides of the town—that being the quarter furthest removed from the position of our army. His purpose appears to have been to proceed by forced marches to join his father, then hampered and shut in by Abbott and Nicolson. Gen. Whish was anxious to have overtaken him had he lingered on the way, but his movements were too quick for us; and with no more than 900 cavalry at our disposal, and Moolraj ready to pounce on the rear of the pursuing party, had pursuit been given, it was resolved to leave him alone. His retirement, just as the time approached when his services were most needed, is a poor proof of the confidence of the friends of the Dewan in the strength of his cause, and the best evidence we can have of how greatly we exaggerated the extent and dangerousness of the conspiracy organized against us. His withdrawal seems to have been occasioned entirely by the jealousy and ill-feeling existing betwixt himself and Moolraj. His first march took him twelve miles from the city; at the end of the second he halted at Sirdapore, on the river. In addition to the quarrel with the Dewan, it is probable that this cunning chief might consider his chances of success better in the strong mountain country with his father, where a guerilla warfare might for some time be maintained, and from which there was hope of escape in case of a reverse, than in a walled city, around which an overwhelming army was preparing to assemble. The Sikh troops at Bunnoo having at this time murdered their officers, and taken their departure for the Hazareh country, the occasion was seized upon by the desponding as a proof of the perfect organization of the Sikh conspiracy, and the skill at once and boldness of their measures. Moolraj, it was said, would continue to maintain Mooltan with a force of from 10,000 to 12,000, as long as it was possible, with a view of occupying about an equal number of troops in the siege; while Shere Singh, moving on Lahore with 5,000 or 6,000 more, would there be joined by all the Sikhs in the city, and Chuttur Singh; with the Jamoo and Bunnoo deserters—in all about 16,000—pressing on the capital as speedily as possible, while the British garrison was at its weakest. So far are these dismal anticipations from being borne out by facts, that there seems every reason to believe the Sikhs are satisfied of the desperateness of their condition. Golab Singh has proclaimed his determination to do all in his power to put down rebellion; and there has been no disturbance or rising in their favour in any quarter of the country. The people everywhere and the Mahomedan troops are well affected; and all we have to deal with, at the highest computation, is some 30,000 of the old army of Runjeet Singh, scattered about, without concert or purpose, without any common object or common feeling, save hatred of the order of things by which their power has become extinguished. On the 14th, a strong detachment of troops—consisting of Anderson's horse artillery, two guns from M'Kenzie's troop, a wing each of H. M.'s 10th and 32nd Foot, the 8th and 49th N. I., a squadron of the 7th, and the whole of the 11th Irregular Horse, with 40 pioneers, proceeded as escort, to enable the chief engineer to take the bearings of a bastion on the north-west side of the fort, which he had not the means of examining. They left camp at 3 o'clock in the morning, and reached their destination without interruption, having made a détour of nearly nine miles. They returned to camp in safety two hours before noon. On their way back, Moolraj's cavalry were seen hovering on their flanks; our horse artillery and cavalry were ordered to charge, but the enemy were too nimble for them, and escaped. On the 18th, the camp was surprised by the restoration of some prisoners formerly taken from us. They stated that the two Europeans in the fort had got leave to quit; but both were wounded, and one was unable, the other unwilling, to move. The troops were now directed to be restored to full rations—these having before been reduced in apprehension of scarcity. The weather had of late undergone a most agreeable change—the nights having become so cool that cloth clothes were in demand. Desertions to Edwardes' camp had become not unfrequent—80 Rohillas one day joined him, and shortly afterwards 500 Sikhs from Bunnoo, who had remained faithful when the rest had gone over to the enemy. While in this state of comparative inactivity, the besiegers became aware of the vast preparations making for their succour. The Supreme Government had asked for 5,000 troops from Bombay, to rendezvous at Roree as speedily as possible, for service beyond the frontier. It was expected they would be able to move from the mustering place early in December. Instead of 5,000, 8,000 are now assembling. The army will be considered complete on the 1st of November, and will be ready to march on the 15th. The pontoon train accompanies them; the heavy guns are to be left behind, as a supply of these can be sent down more readily from Ferozepore. They will move on Bahawalpore, their stores and baggage being conveyed up the river in boats. If required, they will be able to reach Mooltan by the first week of December; but it is likely that long before this the fortress will have fallen. Meanwhile, the Supreme Government ordered a force to be assembled on the frontier immediately under the commander-in-chief. The troops enumerated constitute in all a force of nearly 30,000 men, exclusive of the Bombay column now assembling at Roree. This army includes the troops at Ferozepore and Mooltan, but excludes those at Lahore, amounting to betwixt 8,000 and 10,000 men. The divisional commands have been arranged as follow:—Brigadier-Gen. Tennant commands the artillery; Brigadier Cheape, the engineers, and the greater part of the officers composing this department of the force appear at present be at Mooltan; Brigadier-Gen. Cureton commands the cavalry division; and Major-Gens. Whish, Thackwell, and Gilbert, the three infantry divisions. No direction is given in the general order as to the movements of troops on Mooltan from Ferozepore, and, so far as at present appears, the Bombay column may yet prove the first reinforcement Gen. Whish will receive. A strong reserve will probably occupy the line of the Sutlej, while detachments are employed putting down insurrection in Mooltan and the Hazareh country, and punishing the rebels. Our difficulty after the reduction of Mooltan will be to find a body of insurgents to operate against. At present there are the Mooltanese, 12,000 or so under arms; the troops under Chuttur Singh and Shere Singh both together probably about 15,000; and the Bunnoo mutineers, 5,000 or 6,000—say 53,000 in all.—Bombay Times, Nov. 2.

We have been favoured with letters from the camp at Mooltan to the 10th ult., from which we learn that the suspicions entertained of the difficulties of Moolraj's position are correct. Subsequent to the departure of Shere Singh from Mooltan, Moolraj sent many messengers begging of him to return, but Shere Singh being determined to join his father, turned a deaf ear to these entreaties, and pursued his march. The anticipations of an attack from Moolraj have diminished, for the British troops have been able since the departure of Shere Singh to send troops out to scour the country near Mooltan, and to prevent all supplies from entering that fort. An expectation prevailed of another movement being made on Mooltan within a few days, for the inhabitants are said to be much straitened and anxious for peace. It will not surprise us to hear of Moolraj's having eloped some fine morning, and of his leaving the Mooltanees to make terms with the British authorities. The road which Shere Singh has taken is still open, and Moolraj will, it may be presumed, try his fate in a fight from the fort, across the Chenaub and into the unexplored districts of the Jhelun.—Bombay Gent. Gaz., Nov. 2.

Definite orders to march reached Brigadier Eckford on the 18th, and the brigade, or at least the greater part, proceeded towards Mooltan on the 19th inst., after an unaccountable delay of nearly three weeks. H. M.'s 29th Foot did not march, it being considered that four European regiments, two now there, and two coming from Bombay, ought to be sufficient for the siege. The brigade, therefore, consists only at present of the 31st and 56th N. I., accompanied by detachments of H. M.'s 10th and 32nd Foot, amounting to about 130 men. It is understood that the 29th Foot will be attached to another brigade, and that the native corps to be withdrawn from that will be sent after the brigadier, in charge of the additional ordnance and stores, under Lieut. C. A. Wheelwright, as officiating deputy commissary of ordnance, accompanied, in all probability, by the 79th N. I., now belonging to the 4th brigade of the 2nd division of the army of the Punjab. Capt. Kinleside's battery, instead of being sent with Brigadier Eckford, has been posted, with the remainder of the 69th, on the island in the Sutlej, between the two sections of the brigade: while Captain Dawes's (No. 17) light field battery has marched for Mooltan with three reserve companies already mentioned, viz., the 1st, 2nd, and 4th co.'s of the 4th battalion, with the head-quarters. The following artillery officers are present with this battery and the companies:—Major Horsford, Capt. Dawes, Lieuts. Holland, Dickson, Goodridge; Surgeon Tritton; Lieuts. Ross, Simson, W. F. Cox, Mayne, and Bosworth. Brigadier Eckford also takes with him two companies of Pioneers out of four that reached Ferozepore on the 19th. Brigadier-Gen. Cureton had at first taken up a position at Khoonda Ghat, but subsequently crossed the Sutlej, and encamped in the neighbourhood of H. M.'s 3rd Drag. All our correspondents dwell on the extreme confusion that prevails at Ferozepore in consequence of the previous want of preparation. Carriage, bearers, grass, and food are all become equally scarce. H. M.'s 3rd Light Drags. left their encampment at Khoonda Ghat on the 20th instant, crossing the Sutlej to a new camp about three miles from the right bank of the river, making the force on the other side, one Dragoon regiment, two of Light Cavalry (5th and 8th), two troops of Horse Artillery (Lane's and Warner's), and the 12th Irregular Cavalry, and an advance movement was to be made towards Kussore as soon as the whole force at Ferozepore may be in sufficient strength to keep up the communication. Some fatality would certainly seem to hang over Colonel Eckford's brigade. At a late hour last night we received intimation that, in consequence of the near approach of Chuttur Singh, whose advance guard had, according to authentic information, arrived close to Wuzzeerabad. Sir F. Currie had deemed it expedient to call for reinforcements from Ferozepore. It was believed there that the whole of the cavalry and horse artillery across the river would push on at once, and was known that Colonel Godby's brigade, consisting of the 2nd European, and the 56th and 70th regiments N. I., were immediately under orders to cross while a messenger was sent off to Mumdot to recal Brigadier Eckford. Fortunately, H. M.'s 9th Lancers, and the whole of the Meerhut Horse Artillery, with a light field battery, reached the station on the 21st, so that the place of the troops supposed to have been moved forward could be immediately supplied.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 25.

The accounts of the movements and counter movements detailed in our issue of yesterday have been confirmed, but the emergency is not so great as it may have appeared, as the troops have received directions to make six marches to Lahore.—Ibid., Oct. 26.

A Madras regiment will also, we believe, go eventually to Dacca, where for the present the 62nd N.I. is to be relieved by a wing of the 14th N.I. from Berham-pore. A wing of the 27th from Barrackpore will relieve the Khelat-i-Ghilzie at Midnapore, which regiment proceeds to the North-west.—Burkara, Oct. 11.

MR. NEWMARCH AND THE RANER.—We are given to understand that a professional gentleman from Calcutta arrived here some days since to act as attorney for the Maharajah of Lahore with whom he has held several interviews in presence of the Governor-general's agent. We are told that her highness has told a well-connected and clever tale exculpatory of herself in the Punjab intrigues, worthy of the tact and talent she is reputed to possess. We fear, however, that with all her ingenuity she will not gain much by the step she is taking.

SIR THOMAS HERBERT MADDOCK, Kt., has been appointed Deputy Governor of Bengal, during the absence of the Governor-General.

CAPTAIN ROSS, of the steamer Nemesis, has been appointed naval store-keeper.

DR. O. WOODFORD has received the appointment of police surgeon.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL held a levee on the morning of Oct. 9, on the occasion of his departure for the North-west. "Young Bengal" was not admitted, and is very indignant about it.

LIEUT.-COL. KENT.—A letter from Lahore, dated the 5th Oct., mentions the death of Lieut.-colonel Kent, commanding the 18th regt. N.I.; he was struck with paralysis while on horseback two days previously, and was buried on the afternoon of the 4th.

CAPTAIN D. L. RICHARDSON, Principal of the Hooghly College, has exchanged appointments with Mr. James Kerr, the Principal of the Hindu College.

Sleeman had had the names of eight officers of the Saugor and Nerbudda commission transmitted to him by the Supreme Government, with a request that he would direct those he could best spare to proceed and join their regiments in the field at the public expense. The first-class commissioners were all to be retained if possible. In the Hoshungabad district, second-class commissioner Lieut. Tiernan was to quit Baitool when relieved by Mr. Best, C. S., from Nursingpore; and Lieut. Elliot, of the 8th N.I., was to leave as soon as a dawk could be laid for him. Capt. Spence, the first-class commissioner, was to stand fast.

PUBLIC WORKS.—The Governor-General has directed the suspension, till further orders, of all public works, "not urgently required, and of which the completion admits of being deferred without loss or serious inconvenience."

OFFICERS REQUIRED TO OFFICIATE.—A general order directs that, in all practical instances, officers required to officiate in lieu of those ordered to join the army on the frontier are to be named from the troops on the spot; and in consequence of the emergency of the case, without regard to the number of absentees. Every officer selected under this arrangement, to officiate in a local appointment, is to be held available to join his regiment on any emergency, and in every case he is to march with it, should his corps move from the station at, or near to, which he officiates.

A VIOLENT HURRICANE, in which one ship was lost, and five or six more damaged, swept the upper portion of the Bay of Bengal, and the lower country on the Ganges, betwixt the 14th and 16th Oct.

Report says a wing of the Bheel corps from Bhopawur will go to Mhow. Captain Chespe, brigade major, from Neemuch, ordered to join his corps. Some of the staff officers in Malwa expect to be ordered to join their corps on the frontier. The Dusseerah is to commence at Indore on the 6th. Sky Races on the 11th. The weather never has been so hot in Malwa at this season of the year."

MONGHYR.—There was a great storm in this neighbourhood, which lasted from Friday the 13th to Monday, 16th Oct. It caused much damage to property. The following is from the Bengal Hurkaru:—"Two officers of the 62nd regt. N.I. (viz. Major McGrath and Captain Alderson), who were proceeding in a pinnace to the Upper Provinces, have met with an unfortunate accident, which nearly proved fatal to both; their pinnace, unable to withstand the tempest, sunk to the bottom at night, a few miles below this, at a place called 'Muneechuck Deera,' near the well-known Peer-pahar house; but they were miraculously saved, the former having taken shelter in a hut hard by was found the following morning, by a gentleman of this station, entirely destitute of clothes and in an almost inanimate state,—while the latter, even more unfortunate than his brother officer, was discovered buried in earth up to his bosom, and having been unable to extricate himself from this truly deplorable and perilous situation, in consequence of his having received an injury prior to this catastrophe, was exposed to the inclemencies of the weather all Saturday night and up to the time he was found on the morrow. Of course every possible assistance was rendered to them, and I am glad to say they are now doing well; but they have lost all their property, including their hard-won medals, &c. &c. and there is no probability of their being able to recover any portion from the wreck. Great credit is due to the magistrate of this station (Mr. Cunliffe) for the prompt assistance he has rendered to these gallant but unfortunate sons of Mars."

A FURTHER LETTER, of the 12th Oct., mentions the arrival at that station of the Seetapore local Oudh regiment on the 28th ult., and the departure of the 22nd Bengal N.I. for Ferozepore on the following morning. The 20th N.I. marched from Allahabad on the 3rd inst., and expected to reach Cawnpore by the 15th; and a wing of the 1st European Fusiliers left the latter station on the 3rd inst.

THE FURLOUGH MEMORIAL embodies the following propositions:—"1. That all officers proceeding on furloughs or sick certificate to Europe shall in future receive, during such absence, the following rates of pay per annum, according to their regimental rank, viz. lieut. cols., £450; majors, £365; captains, £292; lieutenants, £191; ensigns, £150. Those of the cavalry, artillery, and engineers, receiving an increase in proportion to their present furlough pay. 2. That, after twenty years' actual service in India, an additional furlough of three years shall be granted to all officers on the above rates of pay, a period of at least five years intervening between the two furloughs. 3. That all officers in the service, who have been and may hereafter proceed to Europe on medical certificate, shall, once during their course of service, be permitted to count two years of such sick leave as actual service in India. 4. That staff officers be allowed to proceed once for a period of twelve months on furlough or medical certificate to Europe without forfeiture of their appointments, but losing during such absence the whole of their staff emoluments. 5. That all furloughs, and the above rates of pay, commence from the date of an officer's embarkation from India."

THE INTELLIGENCER (a native paper) mentions that the music class at the Hindu College is to be revived under the auspices of Mr. Harradan; but adds: "We apprehend the time is not yet arrived when the natives of this country will seriously consent to an exchange of their own sweet airs for the monotonous music of Europe." The tom-tom is undoubtedly superior in melody to the peal of an organ.

THE DELHI GAZETTE affirms that Mr. George Thompson's allegations with respect to the King of Delhi are scarcely correct, as he received Rs. 17,000 rupees and a house to live in on his visit to the court; and also asserts that the shroffs in Calcutta can prove the fact. As the Delhi editor, from his position, is likely to possess the means of discovering the truth, this assertion goes far to weaken the effect of Mr. Thompson's defence.

THE CALCUTTA STAR affirms that a jagheer (Dohabara) in Gazeepore, producing a revenue of Rs. 10,000 a year, has reverted to the Government. It was held rent free, under terms of a grant from Warren Hastings.

GENERAL VENTURA, about six or seven months ago, shortly previous to this Mooltan affair, travelled up the country to Loodiana,—not exactly "incognito," but in a remarkably quiet manner. The general lost his orders,—his military decorations,—at Bassem, early in April or May, and they were advertised in the newspapers,—reference to be made to a British officer, Captain Larkins! When General Ventura gave out that the cause of his return was the settlement of a jagheer on some portion of his family, those who knew General Ventura well laughed at the idea. Several very pertinent remarks were made on the occasion. The expense of his journey, to and from France, was one; and the value of the jagheer was another; the fact of his personal attendance being unnecessary was a third; and there were other remarks made which we would not be justified in mentioning, though we doubt not they will suggest themselves to the general reader. We may observe, that General Ventura did not come alone. He was attended by his former adjutant (a Frenchman), whose ostensible object in returning to the country was to deal in shawls, champagne, and horses. We do not intend to accuse General Ventura of participating in the present plots, insurrections, and rebellion, which are observable in every direction of the Punjab; but, at this juncture, we deem it our duty, at all hazards, to bring him most prominently before the public, and to dwell on the impropriety of our Government having allowed Frenchmen to walk about Lahore and other parts of the country. According to recent reports, they are doing so still. If the French had been in our position, they would have lost no time in telling a wealthy Englishman, who came from Albion to look after a paltry jagheer, that his presence was de trop,—the more especially had those parties who were conspiring against them been the architects of that Englishman's fortune.—Mofussile, Oct. 2.

ENGLISH BARRISTERS IN COMPANY'S COURTS.—Mr. Gregor Grant, who is a Judge of the Sudder Court at Bombay, gave the following evidence on the trial of Mr. McKenna, the editor of the Bombay Gentleman's Gazette, for libel: "I am not aware that the Court of Directors took any objection to the trial beyond this,—that an English barrister had been permitted to defend the prisoner, and there was a desire expressed that the practice should be discontinued." On hearing this, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Sir Erskine Perry, said to Mr. Grant, "What power has a Court of Justice in the Mofussil to keep out an English barrister?" To this Mr. Grant replied, "None that I am aware of; at least, not in the Criminal Court." At this presidency, English barristers enjoy the privilege, or the right, of appearing in defence of prisoners in our Criminal Courts; and, from what we have incidentally heard, it would appear to be a privilege of considerable value to the gentlemen of the bar.—Friend of India.

SURGEON R. H. ELLIOTT, lately posted to the 1st Lancers, will not (it is expected), take up the appointment, and Surgeon W. P. Hoskin, who had, as the nearest available surgeon, been detached from the 23rd L. I., will be confirmed in the medical charge of the corps.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

POWERS OF COLLECTORS AND DEPUTY COLLECTORS.

Agra, Revenue Department.—Notification.—The hon. the Lieut.-Governor is pleased to invest all collectors and deputy collectors in the ceded and conquered provinces and in the Delhi division with special powers under section 21, Regulation VII., 1822, and in the province of Benares, with the same powers under section 3, Regulation IX., 1825.

2nd. At the same time the attention of all officers in the revenue department is desired to the following remarks on the nature of the powers thus entrusted to them, and the mode in which they are to be exercised.

3rd. The object of the measure is to enable the collectors to complete the record of rights in land, which should have been made at the time of settlement, and to correct the existing record, wherever it is found to be at variance with fact.

4th. The power is to be restricted to the declaration of rights in possession. The extent and nature of these rights may be defined, but the claim of a person who has been out of possession for a year cannot be heard, nor can a right, which has been clearly enjoyed by one of two parties in possession, be transferred to another. Rights in common property may be declared and defined, and partition ordered. The terms of section 14, Regulation VII., 1822, sufficiently define the limits of the powers which are to be exercised. The provisions of section 16 are not put in force.

5th. The revenue officer is not bound to take up every complaint that is made to him, nor is he restricted in his investigation to the consideration of the precise point which is stated by the petitioner. He is competent to refuse an investigation, where he does not consider it necessary, and he is competent of his own proper motion to enter upon an investigation, or to extend, in such manner as he may think fit, an investigation that has been commenced on the petition of a party. Herein consists the main distinction between the jurisdiction of the dewanny courts and of the revenue authorities. The former cannot refuse to consider any question that is placed before them by a person who considers himself aggrieved, and must confine their inquiry to that question. The revenue authorities can decline an inquiry which they think unnecessary, and they can originate an inquiry which they think necessary.

6th. An appeal will always lie to the commissioner on both points, viz., on the refusal to inquire, when inquiry is desired, and on the determination to inquire, when inquiry is not desired. The commissioner can revise the proceedings of a collector or deputy collector, without an appeal being preferred to him, and he can summarily reject an appeal, if he considers his interference unnecessary.

7th. In order to insure regularity of procedure, every collector should open a file of cases under section 14., Regulation VII., 1822.

8th. Cases investigated under the regulation will regard whole mouzahs, or parts of mouzahs, or the entire property, or one or more particular rights of an individual. They must be numbered and entered on the file according to the date of institution. Cases may be brought on the file either by the petition of a person considering himself aggrieved, or by special order of the officer, when a petition for inquiry is rejected from whatever cause the case must still be entered on the file. It may be considered sufficient reason for rejection of the petition that the collector has no leisure, as it is evidently impossible that he should at once enter upon the investigation of all such questions. The petitioner always has his remedy in the civil court. It will, however, rest with the commissioner to determine on appeal, whether the case is of so much importance as to require that it be immediately decided to the preference of other work. The commissioner or the sudder board of revenue is also competent to interdict the hearing of such cases in any particular district, or before any particular collector or deputy collector when they consider it expedient to do so.

9th. When a collector by his own order places a case on the file, he must record a proceeding setting forth the grounds of his determination to make the inquiry. The commissioner, on the appeal of any dissatisfied party, can decide whether the grounds assigned are sufficient, or whether the proposed course of procedure is otherwise expedient. The commissioner should be careful that the collector's file be not overloaded, so as unnecessarily to cause the agitation of many questions, which cannot be brought to an immediate issue.

COURT MARTIAL.

SURGEON JAMES MOUNT, M.D., H.M.'s 15th HUSSARS.

Head Quarters, Simla, Oct. 14, 1848.—At a General Court Martial holden at Bangalore, on Monday, August 7, 1848, Surgeon J. Mount, of H.M.'s 15th regt. of Light Dragoons (the King's Hussars), was arraigned on the following charge, by the officer commanding H.M.'s 15th Hussars:—

For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in the following instances:—

First instance.—In having, at Bangalore, on May 12, 1843, clandestinely and deceitfully made an erasure of the words "so confined," and substituted in pencil the words "for such duty," in the copy of an official letter addressed by him, Surg. J. Mouat, to the officer commanding H.M.'s 15th Hussars, and dated Bangalore, March 2, 1847, entered in the regimental hospital letter book of H.M.'s 15th regt. of Light Dragoons, or the King's Hussars; such erasure and substitution of words as aforesaid having been made by him, Surg. J. Mouat, for the purpose of concealing from me, Lieut.-col. George William Key, his commanding officer, and from superior authority, the precise period second dresser Narrainsawmy, attached to the said regiment, who was the subject of the aforesaid official letter, had remained confined to hospital, after having been confined thereto by his, Surg. J. Mouat's order, on January 29, 1847, and in order to get rid of the admission made by him, Surg. J. Mouat, in the said official letter, that the said second dresser Narrainsawmy had been confined to hospital from January 29, to February 6, 1847.

Second instance.—In having, at Bangalore, on May 12, 1848, when required by me, Lieut.-Col. G. W. Key, his commanding officer, to account for the erasure and substitution of words in the copy of the official letter, dated March 2, 1847, entered in the regimental hospital letter book, referred to in the first instance of charge, admitted to me, Lieut.-Col. G. W. Key, his commanding officer, that he had himself made the erasure and alteration, and stated that he had done so knowing the original entry in the book to be wrong; such statement being a wilful and deliberate falsehood, intended for the purpose of deceiving me into the erroneous belief that the original official letter, of which the letter entered in the hospital letter book was a copy, did not contain the words "so confined," and did not purport that the aforesaid second dresser Narrainsawmy had been confined to hospital between January 29 and February 6, 1847, whereas he, Surgeon J. Mouat, well knew that the said official letter did contain the words "so confined," and that the copy of such letter, as originally entered in the said regimental hospital letter book, was a correct transcript of it, and that, by the erasure and substitution of the words referred to in the first instance of charge, he had falsified the said regimental hospital letter book.

Third instance.—In having, at Bangalore, on May 12, 1848, voluntarily and deceitfully produced before me, Lieut.-Col. G. W. Key, his commanding officer, the original official letter addressed by him, Surg. J. Mouat, to the officer commanding H.M.'s 15th Hussars, dated Bangalore, March 2, 1847, in support of his statement that the said original official letter had been in the first instance wrongly entered in the regimental hospital letter-book of H.M.'s 15th regiment of Light Dragoons, the King's Hussars; he, Surg. J. Mouat, well knowing that he had falsified the said original official letter so produced before me, after it had been returned to him on or about March 7, 1847, by erasing the words "so confined" in the said original official letter, and substituting in lieu thereof the words "for such duty," such erasure and substitution of words, as aforesaid, having been made by him, Surg. J. Mouat, for the purposes set forth in the first instance of the charge.

Fourth instance.—In having, at Bangalore, on May 12, 1848, deceitfully and falsely asserted to me, Lieut.-Col. G. W. Key, his commanding officer, that the erasure of the words "so confined," and the substitution of the words "for such duty," in the original official letter addressed and sent by him, Surg. J. Mouat, to the officer commanding H.M.'s 15th Hussars, dated March 2, 1847, referred to in the third instance of the charge, and which was forwarded to this address on or about its date, had been made by him before such letter was so forwarded.

The above being in breach of the Articles of War.

Finding.—Guilty of the first instance of the charge.

Guilty of the second instance of the charge.

Guilty of the third instance of the charge.

Guilty of the fourth instance of the charge.

Guilty of conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline.

Sentence.—To be dismissed her Majesty's service.

Not confirmed.

(Signed) Gough, General, Com.-in-Chief, East Indies.

Head Quarters, Simla, October 7, 1848.

Recommendation by the Court.—The Court having performed its duty, now begs most earnestly to recommend the prisoner to the merciful consideration of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, on account of his very long and meritorious professional services, as shown by the high and numerous testimonials as to character, which he has laid before the Court.

Remarks by the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief in India.—The exigencies of the public service rendering it most inconvenient to re-assemble this court-martial for revision, when the finding of the Court might have been explained or amended, and the case, without such explanation, being left in obscurity, the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief in India feels that he would not be justified in confirming the sentence. But the continuance of Surgeon Mouat with the 15th Hussars being likely to be detrimental to discipline, the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to direct, that Surgeon Mouat shall cease to do duty with that regiment from the date of receipt of this order at Bangalore; and the proceedings of the court-martial will be transmitted to England for the consideration and orders of her Majesty.

With reference to the foregoing remarks, Surgeon Mouat has leave of absence to proceed to England, where he will report himself on arrival to the Adjutant-General, and Military Secretary, Horse Guards.

By order of the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL, with letters from London to Sept. 7, reached Madras, Oct. 15.

We are informed by the Athenæum that "evil days are in store for the Nabob and his court, the hard necessity of paying their debts being about to be sternly inflicted on them. Permission has been given to the creditors of a certain member of the hitherto happy band of lawless dignitaries, to commence proceedings against him in the Supreme Court."

THE 34TH REGIMENT C. L. I. arrived at the Presidency on the evening of Oct. 20, and encamped on the esplanade, north of the fort, where it will remain, until required to embark for Dacca. The ship Monarch has been taken up by the Government, and will be towed to her destination by the steamer Tenasserim.

THE 28TH REGIMENT N. I. embarked this morning (Oct. 17) for Khyouk Phyo on board the steamers Inflexible and the Fire Queen. The ship Claudine has been engaged by the Government to convey the baggage and stores belonging to the troops.

1ST AND 5TH BATTALIONS OF ARTILLERY.—Two companies of the 1st and 5th battalions of artillery, under the command of Capt. Patrickson, arrived from Aden on board the steamer Tenasserim, and marched to the Mount.

NIZAM'S DOMINIONS.—A force, consisting of one company of foot artillery, two companies of H. M.'s 84th foot, and the 17th N.I., the whole under the command of Lt.-Col. Blundell, C.B., left Secunderabad this morning, en route to Kulburgah, about 125 miles, in the direction of Sholapoor, where a mob of Rohillahs are said to have occupied a strong fort. Our force is to be augmented by some of the Nizam's troops. They have with them two splendid 18-pounders, besides other ordnance, which I calculate ought soon to reduce the place. How long are we to be without a commission? Surely the number of outbreaks we have had within the last few years would fully justify the Court of Directors in taking the reins out of the hands of the present impotent government. The Nizam has been for some days out in the country with a numerous retinue, and, to the surprise of many, is accompanied by his minister. From this, people imagine that his highness has at last resolved to give his minister his confidence and support, without which it is evident that the affairs of the state must deteriorate more and more.—Madras U. S. Gaz., Oct. 24.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

THE OUTRAGE AT SECUNDERABAD.

Extracts from Minutes of Consultation.—Ecclesiastical Department, Sept. 5, 1848.—The Governor in Council has read with great care the proceedings of the Court of Enquiry, with the correspondence laid before Government by his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, connected with the gross and unparalleled outrage committed at Secunderabad, in the destruction, by the men of H.M.'s 84th regt., of a small Catholic chapel, in the lines of the 8th regt. N.I. He considers it only necessary to observe briefly, that even should the evidence recorded not afford full and direct proof of the fact, there can be no moral doubt but that the Irish priests did incite the men of the 84th regt. to this act, whilst it is acknowledged that they afterwards countenanced it, by allowing the property carried away to be deposited in the Temperance Room of the Mission; and the Rev. Mr. McSweeney has confessed that he endeavoured to conceal the stolen articles by throwing them into a well in the Mission premises. It is apparent also, that they have, throughout, exercised a pernicious influence, of which there are, unhappily, lamentable and painful proofs in various parts of the Court's proceedings.

The Governor in Council has remarked, with deep concern, throughout these transactions, that not only has the European soldiery been incited to acts subversive of all discipline and respect for constituted authority, but that the express orders of the officer commanding the cantonment have been openly and deliberately set at naught by the Right Rev. Dr. Murphy. The Rev. Mr. McSweeney has distinctly stated in his letter to the Brigadier commanding the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force, dated 10th July last, that, "Whatever may be my own wishes on the subject of our interview this day, I have the honour to inform you that I am prohibited by the Right Rev. Dr. Murphy from surrendering the Catholic Chapel near the lines of the 8th regt. N.I., for the purposes required in the letter of the Quarter-Master General, dated 8th inst.;" and there is no doubt in the mind of the Governor in Council, that it was under the orders, and with the concurrence of the same authority, that the Rev. Mr. McSweeney and his brother proceeded forcibly to place a padlock on the door of the Chapel, avowedly in opposition to, and in defiance of, the orders of the Brigadier, thus setting an example to the soldiers of their own persuasion of the worst possible tendency.

The Governor in Council has borne in mind that the Rev. Mr. McSweeney was, at the time, receiving a salary from Government, as the Roman Catholic minister of the troops, and it is scarcely necessary to remark that, if an individual so circumstanced can be constrained to resist the local authorities, the Government can have no guarantee that their orders will be, at any time, respected, nor any assurance that the same influence which led to the outrage at Secunderabad will not be called into action, at any moment, to subvert alike the authority of the local officer and of the law. With these considerations before him, and looking to the facts elicited by the Court of Enquiry, and to the communications from the officer commanding H.M.'s 84th regt., after much and anxious deliberation, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council sees no alternative but to direct the removal of the Right Rev. Dr. Murphy from the cantonment of Secunderabad, and, that the orders of the Government may not be rendered nugatory, to request the Resident to move H. H. the Nizam to require Dr. Murphy to quit H. H.'s territories immediately, and that he shall not be permitted to return, except at the instance of the British Government. The Governor in Council deems it necessary, also, that the same course be pursued in the instance of the other parties (the Rev. Mr. McSweeney, the Rev. Dr. Quin, and Mr. John McSweeney) whose conduct has been brought under the notice of Government, and he will now, accordingly, request the Right Rev. Dr. Fenelly to nominate, for the approval of Government, another priest in Mr. McSweeney's place, as proposed in Dr. Fenelly's letter of the 22nd July last.

THE MAIL with letters from London to September 7 arrived at Bombay October 9. That of September 25 reached Bombay by the steam frigate Semiramis on the 29th October.

THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF BOMBAY left Kolapore on the 22nd Sept. for Dapoolie, from whence we hear his lordship proceeds to Poona on his way to the presidency, where he may shortly be expected.

BREAGIERE J. TENNANT, who had a short while since been appointed to the command of the Maywar field force, has been directed to proceed forthwith to Ferozepore at the public expense, to assume command of the artillery division of the army assembling at that station.

THE 58th N.I. have been ordered to Ferozepore.

A JUNCTION is, we understand, in contemplation betwixt the Oriental and the East India United Service Clubs, and the latter is, at all events, to have the benefit of all the accommodation the former can supply till matters are arranged.—Bombay Times.

MILITARY.—The line promotions consequent on the contemplated retirement of Lieut.-Col. H. Sandwith, of the 21st N.I., fall in the 22nd N.I., by which Major J. Hale, Captain R. L. Shawe, Lieut. M. M. Macdonald, and Ensign G. C. Eveyard, attain the next superior grades. Lieut. Macdonald, 22nd N.I., succeeds to the temporary charge of the Poona horse during Captain Erskine's absence on field service. Captain J. D. Leckie, of the same corps, will take command of the Ghaut L.I. during Captain Mylne's stay in the military board secretaryship. Lieut.-Cols. G. P. LeMessurier, N. Campbell, and J. Scott, have been transferred—the first from the 11th to the 24th N.I., the second from the 24th to the 27th N.I., and the third from the 27th to the 11th N.I. The cavalry brigade-majority of the Roree field force has been conferred on Lieut. G. C. Kemball, of the 1st lancers. The 27th N.I. reached Bombay on Saturday afternoon, October 14, from Vingoria, by the Ajdaha. The head-quarters and right wing of the 22nd N.I. were to leave Baroda, en route for the presidency, on the 17th instant. The 1st company 1st battalion, and 2nd company 4th battalion, foot artillery, under Captain J. B. Woosnam and Lieut. J. Hamilton, may be immediately expected from Ahmednuggur. The left wing, 1st lancers, under Captain J. Penney, marched from Deesa for Roree on the 10th instant. The head-quarters wing, under Major S. Poole, was to leave on the 12th. The following officers accompanied the former:—Captain W. F. Curtis, Lieut. W. W. Anderson, Cornet H. E. Forbes, and Assist.-surg. F. J. M. Moogrove: those to proceed with the latter were—Captain C. J. Owen, Lieuts. H. Spottswode, G. C. Kemball, and L. M. Valiant, Cornets F. Valiant, J. H. B. Dennis, and F. A. E. Loch, and Surgeon W. P. Hockin. The corps was to proceed to its destination via Whanga Bazaar and Hyderabad.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT W. CHRISTOPHER, I.N.—We mentioned in our issue of Saturday the death of Lieutenant Christopher, which occurred at Mooltan on the night of the 8th instant. He had in the course of the siege (9th September) had his leg smashed by a cannon shot a little above the ankle. Amputation was found indispensable, and the operation was performed while the patient was under the influence of chloroform. The wound, however, did not promise to heal, and mortification having made its appearance, a second amputation was thought advisable. This, however, like the first, proved of no avail; Mr. Christopher continued to suffer terribly—delirium ensued, and, on the 8th instant, he was relieved by death from his sufferings. Mr. Christopher was an officer of extensive general information and much enterprise. In 1842, while on survey duty on the coast of Africa, he made a journey some way into the interior, and came upon a magnificent stream, which he called by the name of Haines' River, the debouchure of which has never been discovered—nor indeed do we possess any more information about it than what is conveyed by the short intimation referred to, unless it be the same as that described by Sir W. Harris in his work on Ethiopia. On his return to Bombay in 1843, Lieutenant Christopher was placed in charge of the steamers on the Indus under Captain Powell; and in 1847-48 was employed in ascertaining how high up the Sutlej, Indus, Chenaub, and Ravee, might be navigated by steam. The results of his investigations have just been published by the Bombay Geographical Society. In no previous year do we ever remember anything like so large an amount of casualties occurring amongst the officers of the Indian Navy. Mr. Christopher was near the head of the list of Lieutenants, having obtained his commission in that grade in July, 1839.—Bombay Times.

THE ANNEXATION OF SCINDE TO THE PRESIDENCY (the Bombay Gentleman's Gazette says) has been completed up to the appointment of the judges and collectors.

CELERITY.—The Bombay Telegraph and Courier quotes an instance of the celerity with which the O. and P. Company performs its operations, as contrasted with the slow movements of the other public bodies in India. The Pekin, being in need of repairs, was lightened of 180 tons of cargo and docked in one night.

CAPTAIN BAYNES, superintendent, with Mr. Danvers, second magistrate, of police, have, we hear, been compelled by indisposition to apply for a temporary release from their very arduous duties. Mr. Dunlop, of the water police, we learn, will take the place of Captain Baynes for the time being.

ARCHIBALD SMART, Esq., of the firm of Ritchie, Stuart, and Co., agents for the Austrian Lloyd's Steam Navigation Company, has been appointed Austrian consul at Bombay.

THE FRENCH WAR STEAMER Cossini, M. de Chabameaux commanding, anchored in the roads on the 24th Oct., having left Aden on the 13th.

THE COURTS' RAILWAY GUARANTEE.—The Court of Directors have, we observe, stated that their guarantee, as we supposed, amounts to no more than the interest at five per cent. on the million sterling to be expended on a railway at Calcutta, and half a million at Bombay, and that they have no concern whatever with the possible losses that may accrue from the working of the railways. This is exactly as we expected: the Court have given all that was asked of them, and how they should now be censured for not doing more than this, we cannot imagine. Had the applicants ever expected that the guarantee was to have extended to the working, they surely would have specified the circumstances so as to have left no room whatever for dubiety. With what face they could have asked for more than what they have got, we cannot conceive at all. The engineers pledged themselves to a return on the railway of six, eight, or ten per cent.; the idea of its not meeting its own charges was never for a moment entertained. Had the Court been asked to take the risk on their shoulders, they might very naturally have suspected the whole to be a delusion. Our only wonder is, that there should ever have been any misconception or any mystery at all on the subject.—Bombay Times.

SLAVERY IN PERSIA.—The Shah of Persia has determined to suppress slavery throughout his dominions.

SHORTLY after the state of the Union Bank affairs, and the conduct of its directors, became known to the world, a gentleman, some weeks before arrived from England, who was anxious to be presented to one of the ex-Ameers of Scinde, in conversing with his Highness, alluded to the great calamity from which the public were then generally suffering; and, as the Ameers seemed quite familiar with this, as with most of the current topics of conversation of the time, a hope was expressed that he was not a sufferer by what had just occurred. His Highness took a little time to answer, and drawing himself up, with a half-droll expression of countenance, said, "No, no,—I have not at present suffered; Sir Charles Napier was my Union Bank." The anecdote has just been mentioned to us by a party present on the occasion, and so may be relied on.—Bombay Times.

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. PETER WRIGHT HEWITT, 1st GREN. N.I.

Head-Quarters, Poona, September 29, 1848.—At an European general court-martial, assembled at Poona, September 19, 1848, and of which Lieut.-Col. Parlbay, H.M.'s 10th Hussars, is president, Lieut. W. Hewitt, acting paymaster and quarter-master 1st Grenadier regt. N.I., was tried on the following charges, viz.:—

First charge.—For having, between May 27, 1847, and June 14, 1848, embezzled and fraudulently misapplied the sum of rupees 477, annas 6, of the public money, being the balance of pay due to certain recruits enlisted in the year 1846, and which money was drawn by him from the divisional pay-office at Poona, on or about May 27, 1847, and not paid by him to the recruits until on or about June 14, 1848.

Second charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, on or about March 11, 1848, borrowed from Subedar Major Kooshall Sing Bahadur, of the same regiment, the sum of rupees 1,100, or thereabouts, for which he passed a receipt to the aforesaid subedar major, under date March 10, 1848, promising to pay to him monthly instalments of rupees 200, commencing from the issue of pay for March of the same year, but of which only rupees 200 have been paid to the subedar major.

Third charge.—For most disgraceful conduct, derogatory to the character of an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances, viz.:—

First instance.—In having, on or about the 3rd and 4th of February, 1848, received in two sums from Havildar Tymiah, No. 7 company of the same regiment, the aggregate amount of rupees 2,000 or thereabouts, for the purpose and under the promise of the said sum being remitted to Mangalore, in the province of Canara, through the Regimental Remittance List for February, 1848, under the express declaration that the same would be received by the said havildar on March 25, 1848, but which sum was not remitted by Lieut. Hewitt agreeably to his promise, but was embezzled by him, and the said Havildar Tymiah defrauded of the same.

Second instance.—In having given to the aforesaid Havildar Tymiah a fraudulently defective certificate, dated February 4, 1848, purporting that the sum specified in the preceding instance had been remitted by him (the havildar) through the Remittance List for February, 1848, whereas the aforesaid sum, although inserted in the Regimental Remittance List for January, 1848, by Lieut. Hewitt, was afterwards fraudulently erased therefrom by him, without the knowledge and consent of the said havildar, and was not inserted in the lists for either of the two months specified, signed, and forwarded by him (Lieut. Hewitt), to the divisional pay office Poona.

Finding.—Not guilty of the first charge.

Guilty of the second charge.

Guilty of the third charge in the first instance.

Guilty of the third charge in the second instance, with the exception of having made a fraudulent erasure in the regimental remittance list for January 1848.

Sentence.—To be dismissed the service of the Hon. Company.

Approved and confirmed,

WILLOUGHBY COTTON, Lieut.-genl.

Commander-in-Chief, Bombay Army.

Head Quarters, Poona, Sept. 29, 1848.

The name of Lieut. P. W. Hewitt is to be struck off the strength of the army from this date.

COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

Wednesday afternoon, 5 o'clock, Nov. 1, 1848.—The interval that has elapsed since the date of our last report having been chiefly occupied by the natives in closing their accounts for the past year, and the consequent holidays, little business was transacted during the greater portion of the time. The holidays were brought to a conclusion two days ago, and the business has been resumed with an activity that bids fair to continue.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.—Forty-inch Grey Shirtings of all qualities are ready of sale at previous rates, while 45-in. widths, with the exception of low qualities, on the contrary, are in slack inquiry. Bleached Shirtings continue scarce, and in good demand. Grey Madapollams are in steady demand, as are also bleached. Grey and Bleached Jaconets continue in very good inquiry. Grey Domestic, twenty-four yards, of light makes, and T. cloths, are in good demand, but the heavy kinds are still in limited inquiry.

SPRITS.—In Brandy nothing has been done since our last. In Wine, we have the following sales:—

55 cases Hunt's Port.
26 „ Cockburn's Sherry.
7 bbls Crown's „

BEER.—Both Allsopp's and Bass' continue to move off in small quantities; the sales of the former amount to 43 hhd., and of the latter 43 hhd. with 350 dozen Allsopp's English Bottled Beer.

EXPORTS.

COTTON.—The market has been dull since the date of our last report, and prices have declined in consequence of supplies coming forward from the interior, added to the unfavourable accounts from England.

OPPIUM.—This drug is very dull: nothing whatever is doing, as holders continue firm. The quotation is nominally Rs. 1,200 per chest for best quality.

CEYLON.

The soi-disant King of Kandy was captured on the 21st September, at Matelle, near which place he appears to have been secreted in a small building, attended only by a female, who remained faithful to him. Having imprudently emerged from his hiding-place, he was seen by a native man, who at once proceeded to the head-quarters of Capt. Watson, and gave information. A party of Malays (rifemen) in plain clothes were immediately despatched to the place, who succeeded in capturing the impostor, who appears to have knocked one of them down in attempting to escape. He was at once conveyed to Capt. Watson's quarters at Matelle. A confession has been made by him, which implicates the greater number of the Kandian headmen. He is now said to have been formerly gardener to Alwis Modliar.

The pretender, in commencing his career at Dembool, swore that he was the grandson of a monarch who makes no small figure in the history of Ceylon, his reign having extended over a generation. Kirti Sree Raja Singha succeeded Sree Wijaya Raja Singha, of Hanguranketty. He ascended the throne in 1747, and reigned 33 years.

The Ceylon Times thus sums up on the occasion of the late rebellion:—"Altogether, it appears (if the report be true, that almost the whole of the Kandian chiefs are implicated) that the late rebellion was the most widely ramified and the most determined attempt at the extermination of the English that has occurred in the annals of colonial history; and, notwithstanding the weakness and personal insignificance of the projectors, there is not the least doubt that a temporary success over even one of our weakest detachments would have caused a universal outbreak all over the island. We hear that attempts to bribe the Malay soldiers had been extensively resorted to, as much as Rs. 1,500 in one sum had been offered; but, to their honour, the bribe was rejected."

The sentences of death pronounced on the rebel prisoners by the Supreme Court, to the number of seventeen, have been commuted to transportation. On the 28th September, thirty-six of the persons convicted of having been engaged in the rebellion in the Central Province were shipped off to Malacca by H.M.'s steam-ship Fury. They evinced the most perfect apathy; no sign of regret at leaving their native land, perhaps for ever, was apparent on their stolid countenances; a cool indifference to everything appeared to be the prevailing sentiment amongst them. One or two were smiling and talking, whilst others were drinking and eating the contents of cooroombas, or unripe coconuts, with considerable relish.

The Ceylon Times says:—"One of the wretches hanged on Monday last, whilst waiting the summons to his justly-merited fate, actually, the while listening to a Buddhist priest, declared that he intended to return to the world in twenty-four hours in the shape of a man with wealth and of a noble mien, and that he would not only 'eat out the bowels' of all those connected with his trial, but he would cruelly revenge himself upon all females connected with them. After this, he would assume the form of a fine peacock, and enjoy himself after the manner of all peacocks for an indefinite period."

SINGAPORE.

The Singapore papers contain a long account of the investiture of Sir James Brooke with the insignia of the Bath. The Free Press observes:—"Sir James Brooke has now attained an eminent position in the peculiar career he has chosen, and he has received the distinct and emphatic recognition of his services from his Sovereign and his country; but the whole of his mission is not yet accomplished,—much yet remains to be wrought out to bring it to a successful termination. But if life and strength be spared him, we have little doubt that he will proceed on in it as perseveringly as ever, and, now that he is so powerfully aided and supported, with far greater rapidity and more assured success. The next few years may be expected to produce a rapid development of those countries which are now to be the objects of his care and thoughts, and give to Borneo that place amongst the countries of the East which she is so well entitled to fill, but which the almost utter neglect of her magnificent resources, induced by peculiar circumstances, has hitherto denied to her.

An attempt has been made by the merchants of this place to induce the admiral, Sir F. Collier, to interfere in the quarrel between themselves and the Siamese government. The right of preventing the entrance of opium appears to have been stretched by the latter power till they have arrived at the length of seizing vessels sailing miles away from the coast. Sir F. Collier, however, has declined all intervention till reference can be made to the home authorities.

There was launched from the building-yard of Messrs. Wilkinson and Co., in the presence of Sir F. E. Collier, naval commander-in-chief on this station, and the Hon. T. Church, Esq., resident councillor, a small steamer of elegant proportions. Miss Church, the daughter of the hon. the resident councillor, christened the vessel the Ranee. She is intended for immediate active service, for the suppression of piracy in Borneo and the Sulu Seas.

SCINDE.

A letter of the 13th October, from Hyderabad, reached us on Wednesday by the Atalanta. Blood's troop (3rd) of horse artillery passed through the station en route for Sukkur on the morning of that day. The 60th Rifles were hourly expected to pass, and to reach Roree on the 26th instant. The Fusiliers were looked for about the 19th, and would likely be at their destination by the 4th November. The 19th N.I. was to leave Hyderabad on the 14th, and the 11th N.I. when relieved by a wing of the 29th N.I. from Bombay—looked for towards the end of the present month. The 4th Rifles were to leave Karachi on the arrival of the remaining wing of the 29th. The 3rd N. I. and 1st company 4th battalion artillery (Golundause) had crossed the river to Roree, the place of the former at Shikarpore having been taken by a wing of the 9th N.I. from Sukkur. Our correspondent states that the Roree army would be on the move by the 15th November, and that as Mooltan could be reached in eighteen marches, their arrival there might be expected to take place, on the 6th December, allowing three halting days on the way.

CHINA.

The China Mail contains some further particulars (in addition to those in our last issue) respecting the typhoon of the night of August 31, which seems to have occasioned a frightful loss of life and property on the coast of China.

In Hong Kong, early in the forenoon, the fall in the barometer attracted attention, and the assistant harbour-master went round the shipping, and warned them of what might be expected. But little fear seems to have been entertained till the approach of evening. From this time the wind gradually increased till half-past two, when the hurricane was at its height—the barometer being so low as 28.92. Fortunately, the China boats took the alarm early, and made for the sheltered creeks on the Cowloon side; but even there they seemed to have suffered severely, as a number of salt and cargo boats were driven on shore, and many of their crews drowned.

In the morning the colony exhibited a most melancholy appearance. In the harbour—several vessels dismasted, others on shore, and the whole beach strewn with the wrecks of Chinese junks, in the midst of which dead bodies were occasionally seen floating, while on shore every house exposed to the storm suffered more or less—tiles torn from the roofs, walls levelled, verandas blown to pieces, and wherever a garden-plot formerly existed the plants and bushes were either broken short off or torn up by the roots.

At Macao the weather throughout the day was disagreeable, but the near approach of a severe typhoon was not apprehended. The barometer commenced falling at about 3 p.m.; at 8 p.m. it was 29.20, and at midnight it fell in the course of half an hour to 28.48, soon after which the gale moderated and the quicksilver rose rapidly. But the calm was of brief duration, for about 1 a.m. the storm recommenced, blowing furiously from N.W. and W.N.W. About a quarter to 3 there was another calm of about an hour, after which the storm increased, and then much destruction was caused in the harbour. The thermometer stood at 80 to 82 during the night. Fall of the barometer, an inch and one-tenth.

The loss of junks is very great; upwards of 100 Chinese were drowned in and about the harbour; and a Chinese boat, in which five young men had embarked on a pleasure trip, was capsized near the Typa, and two perished, one of whom was Mr. James M'Murray, long known in this colony as a baker and storekeeper; and the other was Mr. Edward Rees, formerly second mate of the Island Queen. The number of houses destroyed is stated to be 25 Chinese brick houses, 30 Chinese mat and wooden houses, and 12 Chinese dwellings on the river. The gardens have suffered greatly. During Thursday and Friday no little alarm was felt for the Governor of Macao, who had set out in the morning, accompanied by a party of ladies and gentlemen, on a pleasure trip to the Nine Islands. In the course of the evening the party was despatched at the Typa Fort, and before nightfall they landed safely from a Chinese boat.

At Cumsingmoon the typhoon commenced at 10 p.m., the wind blowing from the north. The storm seems to have been at its height about daylight, when the barometer had fallen to 28.48. During the interval the wind shifted, but we have not obtained very precise information on the point. The extent of damage sustained was very great; eight or nine Chinese junks sunk, and most of their crews perished, as did also that of a smuggling boat, consisting of upwards of 100 men. As soon as daylight appeared, Capt. Gedney, of the Plymouth, ordered his boats out to render assistance, and save the lives of those who were clinging to the wrecks, or were otherwise in danger of perishing. The officer on deck at first told Capt. Gedney that the boats could not live, upon which he was ordered to call for volunteers, when 200 of the sailors offered themselves, and manned six boats—four cutters, the launch, and the gig. Assistance was offered wherever it seemed necessary, and upwards of 30 lives (Chinese and foreigners) were saved; but some of the ships declined the proffered aid from dread of salvage, which had then never been dreamt of by Capt. Gedney, who seems to have been actuated by the single desire of aiding men in distress.

A correspondent of the Friend of China, speaking of the exertions made by the captains of the receiving ships, says: "Their conduct was beyond all praise, for, notwithstanding the violence of the tempest, they and their crews were indefatigable, and the writer can bear testimony to the coolness and intrepidity of Capt. Endicott, of the Ruparell, and to the active humanity which he exercised in rescuing several Chinamen from the wrecks, who otherwise would have met with watery graves."

At Canton the gale commenced about 10 p.m., and increased in violence till 6 next morning, when it was at its height. Judging by the barometer, which did not fall below 29.10, the storm does not seem to have been so violent as at Hong Kong, Macao, and Cumsingmoon; though, of course, in the crowded river there was a fearful loss of life and property, some accounts stating the numbers who perished at hundreds, and others at thousands. A letter written on the morning of the 1st describes the scene as dreadful, the whole river being covered with the wrecks of the fragile flower-boats and small craft, great numbers of which were dashed to pieces by the large junks, which, after being forced from their moorings, were driven furiously along by the wind and the tide, destroying everything that came in their way. Several Chinese houses and walls in exposed situations were blown down, and the ravages in the gardens were considerable. A gunboat, with a number of convalescent police on board, under charge of Mr. Smithers, the inspector, which had been despatched for a cruise round the island of Hong Kong, on the colonial surgeon's recommendation that the sick men should have the benefit of a change of air, was sunk. The following is a list of the persons missing: Mr. Smithers and his son; Acting Sergeants Hill and Seymour; Police Constables Taylor, Stafford, Chase, Harrison, and Baldarini; five Mailla men, belonging to the water police; four Chinese ditto; three Chinese cooks; and a Portuguese boy. In Mr. Smithers the public have lost a most efficient officer, whose zeal and activity were unerring. His experience had been acquired during twenty years' service in the London police, from which body he was selected as the most likely man to assist Mr. May in performing the duties here in a satisfactory manner; and to his exertions may be attributed, in no small degree, the safety of life and property enjoyed by the residents since his arrival in the colony, three years ago. Mr. Smithers merited and possessed the confidence of his superiors, as well as the esteem and respect of those under him.

In the northern part of the Shanghai province, many thousands of people have been driven from their homes by the overflowing of lakes between the Yang-tze-kiang and the Yellow River. Along the valley of the Yang-tze-kiang and its tributaries, in the lower part of its course, the rains were unusually heavy during the summer, and the distress consequent upon extensive tracts being covered with water is very great. The mandarins have issued proclamations calling for contributions in aid of the poor families in a state of destitution.—Friend of China.

The piratical depredations in the vicinity of the port of Hong Kong have at last roused the apathetic authorities. On the 15th of August, an edict was issued for levying an extra duty on goods exported coastwise, for the purpose of defraying the expense of a fleet of cruisers to be engaged in protecting the native trading vessels. Foreign manufactures are not exempt from this duty. It is probable that foreign shipping would have been hired, but the seizure of the Spec, when employed in a similar duty, deprives the Chinese of the services of European-built vessels.—Ibid.

A proclamation announces that Chinese subjects shipping goods in foreign vessels shall pay duty according to the foreign tariff. This applies to both imports and exports—to Chinese goods as well as foreign goods. On the principle of reciprocity, there ought to be no distinction; but this was a point overlooked when the treaty was arranged. The cargo of a Chinese vessel in England, or in any English possession, would be admitted on the same duty as that of an English vessel, whether on Chinese or on English account; and Chinese have perfect freedom to export from British ports, either in their own or foreign vessels free of duty.—Ibid.

The revenues of Hong Kong still continue to fall short of the expenses. The whole receipts for last year were 31,078*l.*, and the civil expenses alone, exclusive of public works, 35,779*l.*

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Sir H. Smith, in a proclamation dated at Winburg, 7th Sept., announces that the rebellion had been put down, and that two of the rebels, Thos. Dreyer, burgher, and Michael Quigling, a deserter from her Majesty's service, had been executed; and he re-proclaims the sovereignty of her Majesty over the territory from the Orange River north to the Vaal River. A commissioner is appointed to levy fines upon those who took part in the rebellion; the other rebels (with a few exceptions) are banished, and their property is confiscated, and all public meetings are prohibited. Large rewards are offered for the apprehension of Jacobs, Bezuidenhout, and Standers.

The Zuid Afrikaan condemns severely some of the proceedings of the High Commissioner, particularly the employing the Griquas against the Boers; the shooting of the farmer Dreyer, by sentence of a Court Martial, whereas he should have had a fair trial before a civil jury; and the levying fines and confiscating property.

EGYPT.

DEATH OF IBRAHIM PASHA.

Ibrahim Pasha, viceroy of Egypt, died on the 10th November, aged 59, and is succeeded in the pashalic by his nephew, Abbas Pasha, agreeably to the Sultan's firman of June, 1841, by which the succession is limited to descend in a direct line in Mehemet Ali's male issue, from the elder to the elder, amongst his sons and grandsons. The late pasha, the son of Mehemet Ali, was born at Cavalla, in Roumelia, in 1780, and was nominated by the Sultan's viceroy to govern Egypt, on his father's incapacity, on the 1st September last. For many years Ibrahim has suffered from a complication of disorders the consequences of excesses in his youth. The cause of his death was bronchitis, combined with an abscess in his lungs. He joined his father's army at the age of seventeen. In 1816 he commanded the army sent into Arabia against the Wahabees, from whom he wrested the holy cities of Mecca and Medina, on which account he received from the Sultan the title of Pasha of the Holy Cities. An account of this expedition is given by Giovanni Finati. In 1824 he commanded the expedition to the Morea against the Greeks, where he committed great cruelties. The Turkish and Egyptian fleets were destroyed at the battle of Navarino. In 1831, he was sent by his father into Syria, to subdue that country, and assisted by Col. Selves (a French officer), he made rapid progress, and at Koniah, with 30,000 men, he destroyed a Turkish army of 60,000 troops, making the commander, Reshid Pasha, prisoner. Upon this success, Ibrahim commenced his march for Constantinople, and had proceeded as far as Kutayah, 150 miles from the capital, but, upon the intervention of Russia, he was obliged to retrograde. He, however, kept possession of Syria, where he established his father's rule, and administered the government with much skill. He defeated a strong army of the sultan, sent to recover the country, in June, 1839, at Nezib, and meditated a second time a march against Constantinople, but European interference again prevented him. The four powers, England, Austria, Russia, and Prussia, having required the restoration of Syria to the Porte, a fleet was sent thither to enforce their decree, and the bombardment and capture of Acre, in November, 1839, compelled Ibrahim to evacuate Syria. Since then he led a retired life, devoting his attention to agricultural improvements. In 1846, he visited England (for medical advice), and was treated with great respect. Ibrahim had not the pleasing manners of his father; he was naturally serious, his voice was strong, and he was remarkable for his forced laugh; he never liked display, and was of a penurious and selfish disposition. He spoke Turkish, Arabic, and Persian, which he also wrote with facility, and he employed several hours of the day in reading history, of which he was very fond; he knew no European language, but he regularly had the newspapers translated to him. Ibrahim has left three sons living—Ahmed Bey, born in 1825, who is in England; Ishmael Bey, born in 1830, pursuing his studies in Paris; and Mustapha Bey, born in 1832, at present in Cairo. Abbas Pasha, who succeeds Ibrahim, was born in 1813. He is the son of Toussoun Pasha, Mehemet Ali's second son, who died of the plague in the year 1816. He has hitherto led a very quiet life, and has been for many years Governor of Cairo. He has had little intercourse with Europeans; he is a strict Mahomedan; on this account the natives are glad of his accession. Abbas is well versed in Oriental literature; he has a thorough knowledge of the Turkish, Persian, and Arabic languages, and he occupies much of his time in reading and writing. He accompanied Ibrahim in his military expedition to the Morea in 1824, and was also for some time in Syria during the war, but on both occasions Ibrahim kept his nephew entirely in the background, so that he has seen very little of military service. Last month, Abbas Pasha, anxious to get out of the way of Ibrahim, who had been interfering in his private affairs, went to Mecca; on the death of the latter a messenger was despatched after his highness, and Capt. Frushard, of the E. I. Co.'s steamer Feroze, volunteered to convey the messenger to Jedda, and bring back the new viceroy.

PITCAIRN'S ISLAND.

The following is an extract of a letter from Capt. Worth, of her Majesty's ship Calypso, at Pitcairn's Island, the spot to which the mutineers of the Bounty, under Fletcher Christian, the mate, steered that ship in the year 1789:—"We arrived here on the 9th of March, 1848, from Callao. I made the officers divide the day between them, one half on shore, the other on board; so they were gratified by visiting these interesting people. I never was so gratified by such a visit, and would rather have gone there than to any part of the world. They are the most interesting, contented, moral, and happy people that can be conceived. Their delight at our arrival was beyond anything; the comfort, peace, strict morality, industry, and excessive cleanliness and neatness that was apparent about everything around them, was really such as I was not prepared to witness. Their learning and attainments in general education and information were really astonishing. All dressed in English style; the men a fine race, and the women and children very pretty, and their manner really of a superior order, ever smiling and joyous; but one mind and one wish seems to actuate them all. Crime appears to be unknown; and if there is really true happiness on earth, it surely is theirs. The island is romantic and beautiful; the soil of the richest description, yielding almost every tropical fruit and vegetable; in short, it is a little paradise. I examined their laws, added a few to them, assembled them all in the church, and addressed them, saying how gratified I was to find them in the happy state they were, advising them to follow in the steps of virtue and rectitude they had hitherto done, and they would never want the sympathies of their countrymen (i.e. the English), who were most interested about them. I added such advice as I thought useful, and such suggestions as would, of course, be to their advantage. It was really affecting to see these primitive and excellent people, both old and young, 140 in the whole, looking up to me, and almost devouring all I said, with eager attention, and with scarcely a dry eye amongst them; and, 'albeit unused to the melting mood,' I found a moisture collecting in my own which I could scarcely restrain, they were so grateful, so truly thankful, for all the kindnesses that had from time to time been shewn them, and the interest in their welfare shewn by us and our countrymen. I had all the men and most of the women on board, but there was such a sea on that the poor girls were dreadfully sea-sick. I fired some guns and sent off rockets on the night of our departure, and they returned the compliment by firing an old honey-combed gun belonging to the Bounty. I set them completely up,—gave them 100 lbs. of powder, ensign and union jack, casks of salt beef and pork, implements of agriculture of all kinds, clothes, books, &c., and sailed on the evening of the 11th for Tahiti."

LACCADIVE ISLANDS.

Coir, the fibre of the coco-nut, is prepared in great quantities in these islands, and is one of their chief commodities of barter. The manufacture of the coir is entirely carried on by the women. The nuts are cut before the fruit is quite ripe, when the husk gets hard and woody, and the fibre is coarse. When cut, the husk is severed from the nut and thrown into soaking pits, to loosen the woody parts, where they lie for a year. When thoroughly soaked, the fibrous parts are easily separated from the wood by beating with a heavy mallet; when quite clean, the coir is arranged into a loose roving, preparatory to being twisted, which is done between the palms of the hands, in a very ingenious way, so as to produce a yarn of two strands at once. No mechanical aid, even of the rudest kind, is employed in these islands. A Mangalore candy (of 560 lbs.) of yarn will be obtained from 5,600 nuts, which would be yielded by from 80 to 100 trees, and the price of a candy to the islanders is about 18 rupees, or about a halfpenny a pound. The finest coir is from the island of Kiltan. The average annual amount of coir received from all the islands, by the East-India Company, under the monopoly, is about 370,000 lbs.

Mr. Scott, of the Company's dispensary, at Calcutta, has discovered that chloroform is a good solvent for gutta percha. "It is deposited from its solution without any of its properties being altered, and, by the very rapid evaporation of the solvent, hardens immediately, as an impermeable varnish."

The India Register of Medical Science for September contains a paper by Dr. T. W. Wilson, "On Varioloid Eruptions consequent to Vaccination in Bengal." It seems that a great many cases of small pox, or of a disease equally loathsome and fatal, have arisen from the application of the vaccine virus in general use in Bengal. For some years past, unusual results have been frequently known to follow vaccination; but the subject does not seem hitherto to have been sufficiently attended to. In this paper, which has been sent up to the medical board in the shape of a report, a large number of these cases is brought together.

The most remarkable circumstance in the population of the Punjab is the paucity of the Sikhs in a country ruled by them; the entire number of the Sikhs throughout the Punjab is not supposed to exceed 500,000.—Thornton's History of the Punjab.

LITERARY & SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

A considerable portion of the Report of the Council of the Asiatic Society of Paris is dedicated to Hindu literature. It refers, at the outset, to the completion of the first volume of M. Lassen's Indische Alterthumskunde, or Indian Archaeology, as the most comprehensive and learned exposition of the progress which has been made in studies relating to the history of ancient India. "We may there find a picture of all that is at present known concerning the origin and formation of civilized society in India; we may perceive the points to which science has definitively attained, as well as those towards which our researches should be directed; for it must be confessed that, in spite of the labours of the last sixty years, we have merely reached the threshold of this grand study, and that problems of the utmost importance, as regards the history of the human mind, there solicit the attention and the curiosity of the learned."

The Vedas, "those collections of ancient hymns which are, as it were, the mould in which the mind of the only philosophical race of mankind has received its shape," are the first of the Indian works which it imports Europeans to know; they are "the earliest essays of human thought,"—obscure, repulsive to the European student, presenting difficulties over which the Sanscrit race itself has never triumphed. The Report records the enterprising efforts of the Asiatic Society of Calcutta, under the patronage of the East-India Company, to publish a complete edition of the Vedas; the impediments encountered in the endeavour to procure perfect copies; and the commencement of the publication, in the meanwhile, in London, by M. Müller, of an edition of these ancient works, for which object Professor Wilson generously furnished his collection of MSS. The first volume of the Rigveda has been committed to the press. M. Roth has printed at Göttingen the first portion of the Nighamantas, with the Gloss of Yaska, a work highly serviceable to the interpretation of the Vedas and to the history of the Sanscrit language. A specimen of the Yajur Veda, which regulates sacrificial ceremonies, has been edited by Dr. Weber, of Breslau, who proposes to publish the whole Veda. M. Nève, professor at Louvain, has given to the world an "Essay on the Myth of the Ribhavas," in which he develops the early vestiges of the apotheosis in the Vedas. He commences by treating of the nature of the worship taught in those ancient works, and of the moral sentiment of ancient Hindu society, which led him to the idea of the apotheosis, and to the interpretation of the hymns in which it appears for the first time.

The Hindu epic poems take rank next to the Vedas; of those poems the most ancient is the Ramayana. Having published three volumes of the text of this poem, Sig. Gorresio has produced one volume (containing the first two books) of a translation into Italian.

Next to the epic poems are the Puranas. An edition of the Bhagavata Purana, a Poetical History of Krishna, commenced some time ago by M. Burnouf, has advanced to a third volume, comprising the 7th, 8th, and 9th books, to which the editor has prefixed a long and valuable preface, in which he examines some of the traditions contained in the volume, and shows their value in various aspects.

Several Sanscrit plays have been printed,—namely, the Sacuntala (of Calidasa), by Dr. Boehtlingk, of Bonn, whose text, often differing much from the edition of M. Chézy, is enriched with philological notes; the Urvashi (also a work of Calidasa), by M. Bollensen, of St. Petersburg, in which the Pracrit dialect is carefully attended to; and the Mrichakatika, or Clay-cart, which has found a new editor in M. Stenzler, who promises a translation, with notes.

The Report specifies several works which have appeared in Germany, being translations from Hindu authors, adapted to popular reading, as evidence that a taste for the literature of India is beginning to diffuse itself amongst the masses in that country.

The Panchatantra, in the original text, has been edited by M. Kosegarten; whilst, in the same department, Professor Wilson has given to the public, at the expense of the Oriental Translation Fund, a translation of the Dasa Kamara Charita, or Adventures of Ten Princes, the scene of which is laid in India in the tenth century of our era, presenting a highly-curious portraiture of Hindu manners at an epoch immediately preceding the Muslim invasion.

Two works have appeared, belonging to a branch of Hindu literature little cultivated, namely, a translation of the Susruta, or System of Medicine, from the Sanscrit into Latin, by Dr. Hessler; and a Commentary on the Hindu System of Medicine, by Mr. G. T. Wise, of Calcutta.

After particularizing several lexicographical and grammatical works relative to the Sanscrit language, and the philological labours of M. Bopp and others, the Report passes to the provincial dialects of India and the neighbouring countries connected by their literature with India; and notices, first, various works published by native writers, and then records the progress which the study of the Indian dialects has made in Europe. Hindustani literature has been the subject of a work by M. Garcin de Tassy, much more complete than has appeared in England. In the first volume of his history of Hindustani literature he gave the lives and bibliography of nearly 800 authors; the second volume contains translations, extracts, and analyses of the works of the chief writers, and a third volume will be required to exhaust his materials. Under this head the Report mentions very favourably the Hindustani Dictionary of Dr. Forbes.

A cursory notice is given of a few publications relating to the Bengali, Tamul, Guzerati, Affghan, Malay, Kawi, and Burman tongues; and of the Tibetan translation of the legendary life of Buddha, one of the chief canonical books in Nepal, printed by M. Foucaux, of Paris.

M. Mohl then reviews what has been done for Chinese literature. He observes that the study of this vast field would appear to have relaxed in Europe, if we considered the trifling number of works relating to China which have been published there for the last two years; but the fact is otherwise, since at Paris alone MM. Julien, Biot, and Bazin are preparing important works upon the philosophy, the history, and the literature of the Chinese. M. Biot has, however, completed his Essay on the History of Public Instruction in China, which contains important facts bearing upon the social history, moral and political, of the Chinese, in ancient and modern times. The Report notices the publication, at Shang-hai, of an edition of the Shoo-king, with a literal translation, by the Rev. W. H. Medhurst, and a dissertation by the same on the theology of the Chinese. It speaks in terms of high commendation of the Chinese Speaker of the late Mr. R. Thoms, as "an excellent introduction to the study of the romances, the dramas, and the modern literature of the Chinese."

With respect to the literature of Japan, M. Mohl observes that "it is an incomprehensible fact, that a people like the Dutch, who have always discovered a taste for knowledge, and who alone are in a condition to make us acquainted with Japan, should have hitherto done nothing to illustrate the language and literature of that country. They have written excellent works on Japan, but how is it," he asks, "that no member of the Faculty at Nangasaki has felt ambitious to distinguish himself by translating a Japanese work?" Two Germans, neither of whom has been in Japan, have, in spite of all disadvantages, recently translated two books from the Japanese. M. Hoffman has published, in the Netherlands, a translation of a treatise by Wekaki Morikooni, on the art of raising silk-worms; and Mr. Pfizmaier, of Vienna, has published a modern romance, by Riutei Tanefico, which appeared at Jeddo, in 1821, entitled, "The Six Leaves of a Skreen." The latter work is a picture of manners; its professed object is to refute the Japanese proverb, that a skreen cannot stand unless it be bent,—which is understood in the sense, that virtue in the sequel always becomes pliant.

In concluding his Report, M. Mohl refers in terms of regret and mortification to the sudden calamity which interposed a check to the progress of Oriental studies:—"Other and more considerable labours were in preparation, when the uproar of the streets overpowered the voice of science throughout Europe, and even still, restless spirits, ruined finances, and a dark future, from which the world seems to shrink aghast, oppress such peaceful studies as ours; but this state of agitation will have an end, whilst science is eternal, like that truth of which it is the expression."

With returning tranquillity in France, it is satisfactory to find that the patronage of Oriental studies is reviving. On the 22nd November, the National Assembly voted a sum of 146,860*fr.* for the publication of the work on the Ruins of Ancient Nineveh, &c.

The Tarikhi Guzideh, a history of the Seljudike princes, recording the actions of Sultan Mohammed, son of Malik Shah, who died A.D. 1118, relates this anecdote, which shews that the writer must have confounded him with Mahmood of Ghuzni:—"Sultan Mohammed made holy war in Hindustan, and fought a great battle. He took out of a temple of idols an idol, the largest of them all, which weighed nearly 10,000 mans. The Hindus offered to redeem this idol for its weight in pearls. He refused to sell it, observing, 'Men would say that Adser was a sculptor of idols, and Mohammed was a trader in idols.' He transported this statue to Ispahan, and, to show his contempt, laid it in a madriisa (mosque) which he had founded, upon the threshold of the apartment in which his tomb is placed. It remains there until this day." Similar instances of intolerance (observes M. Deffrémery, the translator of the Tarikh) are frequent in Musulman history. The celebrated traveller, Ibn Batuta, relates that "near the eastern gate of the great mosque of Delhi are two colossal idols in copper extended on the ground, and every person who passes or repasses to or from the mosque treads them under-foot."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, December 5, 1848.

SOME misconception seems to have arisen respecting the order issued by the General Government of India that the Bengal army shall be increased (to the war establishment) by the addition of 200 sepoyes to each regiment of native infantry, and of 100 sowars to each regiment of irregular cavalry. Surprise and even complaint have been expressed because no increase is to be made in the number of European officers; but it seems to be forgotten that this order is merely a recal or rescission of that of the 30th January, 1847, by which the numerical strength of the Bengal army was reduced in this very proportion, without any reduction of the number of European officers. The Government, fully aware how essential they are to the efficiency of the native army, and having the appointment of those officers, can hardly be suspected of a backwardness to augment their numbers to the utmost extent of the exigency, which is not to be measured by the condition of any individual corps.

THE security of our colonial possessions, and especially of British India, has so close a connection with the tranquillity of the mother-country, and is so liable to be affected by sudden political changes in Europe, that the gradual lull of the mighty tempest, which threatened at one time to submerge the continental nations beneath the angry billows of a wild democracy, is a more grateful theme of national congratulation than if our Indian Government had achieved a triumph over open enemies or perfidious allies. If Great Britain were at this moment trembling upon the verge of an European war, the commotions in the Punjab, which are now a subject of only transient interest, would wear a portentous aspect, and create the deepest anxiety: the question would be rather one of self-defence or of existence, than of annexation.

So far as we may be permitted to judge from the course of events in Europe during the last six months, the revolutionary agony has nearly subsided; the contention of disturbing forces is pretty well over; the cold and the hot, the moist and the dry, levity and gravity, have fought out the elementary strife, and the atoms, having discovered their mutual affinities, seem to be settling down into that comparative repose which will permit the re-establishment of systematic government. Questions will, no doubt, continue to arise to check and retard the final adjustment; extreme opinions, as well as private views and evil passions, will, for some time to come, exert an irritating influence upon people still subject to the morbid susceptibility left by recent agitation; but turbulence is under command.

Casting a retrospective glance upon the convulsion from which France, Germany, and Italy appear to be emerging, it is impossible not to be struck with some of its social and political incidents. The world has scarcely ever known, within the memory of man, a revolution so sudden, extensive, and menacing, at least in its beginning, as that which shook, almost simultaneously, those three nations, and the incidents we are about to notice are more or less common to all.

In the first place, wherever there has been a fair struggle between the masses and the few, between idleness and rapacity on the one hand, and industry and wealth on the other,—between the votaries of anarchy and the advocates of order,—the advantage of numbers has been neutralized, and order, property, and industry have finally prevailed. And the success has been owing, not to any adventitious agency, but purely to the principles themselves, which gave General Cavaignac, for example, the power he so well employed, both as a commander and as a minister. This is a fact of no slight moment, which it is manifest was unexpected, or the victory might have been earlier and more complete; and it affords a source of consolation and confidence for the future.

Another striking fact is that, although the masses of society in Germany and France have been loosened and stirred up from the very depths and dregs, no man of commanding powers, no intellectual giant, no Cromwell, Washington, or Napoleon, has been brought to the surface, fit to organize and lead movements which only wanted leaders. Those into whose hands power has been cast, by accident or the force of circumstances,—and who are of the party antagonistical to that whence the moving impulse originated,—are military men, of average abilities, which are of the stratagetic rather than the administrative order. The inference from this fact seems to be, that the distribution of society throughout Europe bears a tolerable relation to the actual value of its constituent parts; that talents are not indissolubly chained to a servile condition, and imprisoned for ever in hopeless degradation; that there is an approximation at least to equality in the only form in which equality can exist amongst beings differing by nature in the measure they respectively possess of qualities useful to their fellows; that the social pyramid is not constructed by an arbitrary disposition of heterogeneous materials.

A third fact to be deduced from these events, and which must instil an impressive lesson into rulers, is the fragility of all governments, however stable in their external aspect, where there is no real sympathy between them and the governed. This is a truth which, as a mere dogma, is as old as the theory of government itself; but it was never demonstrated with so much practical energy as during the last ten months, when authority, which seemed to have struck its roots deeply and widely, withered in an hour.

The moral teachings which may be extracted from the revolutions of 1848 will not, it is hoped, be lost either to rulers or the ruled. They will reveal to both their political strength and weakness, and the sources of each; they will instruct both in their mutual duties, and the obligations they owe towards each other; and they will, above all, show that, although revolution be a cure for tyranny, the remedy is, in its mildest form, scarcely more tolerable than the evil; for when the restraints of law are withdrawn, or even suspended, they cannot be reimposed without a resistance in which the very existence of civil society is imperilled, for law and morals are the bulwarks of civilization itself.

COMPANIONSHIP in misfortune is said to fortify the power of endurance. The minister of Montezuma suppressed his moans of anguish when he found that his unhappy master was subjected to the same tortures as himself. The ruined shareholders of the Union Bank of Calcutta may extract a similar soothing consolation from the discovery that other adventurers in joint stock concerns in that city are not "lying upon beds of roses." The details published in the Englishman (and which were given in the last Mail) respecting the Bengal Indigo Company, — one amongst several smaller joint-stock companies, from which public attention has been diverted by "the gigantic frauds of the Union Bank," — are, to our apprehension, equally astounding; and "it is very remarkable," observes the Englishman, "that the same individuals whose mismanagement has ruined the shareholders of the Union Bank have been also the directors of the Bengal Indigo Company." This company was formed only three years ago; its capital was Rs. 28,00,000, divided into 560 shares of Rs. 5,000 each, all of which except four were taken up and paid for; so that the company started with a bond fide capital of Rs. 27,80,000 in hard cash. Of this sum no less than Rs. 26,50,000 was paid for the blocks of the concern, which never, at the period of highest prices, could have realized more than half this amount, and now would hardly fetch Rs. 6,00,000. The mode in which the money transactions of this concern were conducted, the prodigious amount of bills accepted and unaccepted, the "debentures," to the amount of 100,000*l.*, the greater part of which were pledged for loans, "though it does not appear that the Bengal Indigo Company received any money or credit on account of the debentures so pledged," — these strange doings are recorded in the article referred to, which is said to be founded upon a printed statement circulated by the shareholders of this unfortunate concern, in order, apparently, to excite the compassion of their obdurate creditors; and the result is, that the claims upon the company amount to Rs. 18,31,000, and the deficiency of their assets is Rs. 11,33,000! So that, in three years, all the invested capital, upwards of a quarter of a million sterling, has been got rid of, and the poor shareholders have "more to pay." What makes matters worse, we are told that about two-thirds of them are either totally or nearly insolvent!

These transactions cover Calcutta with disgrace, and look ugly even beside Pennsylvanian repudiation.

Mr. Crawford has proposed a scheme for representing the sounds of the Malay language by Roman letters, which, he says, are far better adapted to it than the Arabic characters now used. "The Arabian alphabet, imperfect in itself, is preposterous when applied to the languages of the Archipelago, the genius of the pronunciation of which is far more at variance with that of the Arabic than of the languages of the south of Europe. It wants eight letters, which the Javanese alphabet and the Malay language have, and it supplies their place by diacritical points over their respective cognates, while it has no less than twelve which no native alphabet possesses."

BATTERING RAMS OF THE CRUSADERS.—The Arabian historian Boha-eddin, speaking of the engines which the Crusaders employed at the siege of Acre, in 1190, declares that their aspect alone was terrible. "The most formidable of these machines," he says, "was a vast structure of wood, which could contain a great number of warriors; it was covered with large plates of iron, and moved on wheels, receiving its impulse from within. This machine was furnished with an enormous head of iron, called a ram, which made horrible ravages; the men within the machine caused this head to move, and overturn the most solid buildings."

LAW.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, NOV. 20.

Sittings in Banco — Regina v. Charretie.—The defendant had been indicted with several others for a misdemeanour, committed in respect to the sale of a cadetship in the East-India Company's service. The indictment was founded upon the 3rd section of 49 Geo. 3, c. 126, and contained in all thirteen counts. The first charged that John Charretie, James Rallett, and Ame, wife of Allan Stewart, on 1st November, unlawfully and corruptly did receive, have, and take from one William Wotherspoon the sum of £2,000, the moneys of the said William Wotherspoon, for the appointment and nomination of William White Wotherspoon to a certain office, commission, place, and employment, then and there being under the appointment and control of the East-India Company, to wit, the office, commission, place, and employment of a cadet in the service of the East-India Company, against the form of the statute, &c.; and that Sir William Young, Bart., unlawfully, wilfully, and knowingly did aid and abet and assist them in the offence and misdemeanour aforesaid to do and commit, &c. The seventh count was for a conspiracy, and charged that the defendants did conspire, combine, confederate, and agree together unlawfully and corruptly to bargain for the sale of a certain other office, commission, place, and employment, then and there being under the appointment and control of the East-India Company, to wit, the office, commission, place, and employment of a cadet in the service of the East-India Company, in contempt, &c. At the trial, before Lord Chief-Justice Denman, at the sittings after Michaelmas Term, 1847, the defendants, John Charretie and Sir William Young, Bart. (since deceased), were convicted; and the verdict of "Guilty" was entered upon the first and seventh counts only, a verdict of "Not guilty" being entered upon all the other counts. Subsequently, a Rule was granted by this Court, upon the application of Mr. Crowder, who appeared for Capt. Charretie, for a new trial, on the three following grounds, — first, it was not proved at the trial that a cadetship was either an office, commission, place, or appointment, within the meaning of the Act of Parliament; secondly, the statute only applied to cases where the party charged had the power of making an appointment, which in the present case did not reside in Sir William Young, but in the East-India Company; and thirdly, the facts proved did not amount to an offence under the third section, but the parties should have been charged upon an indictment framed upon the fourth section.

The Attorney-General, Sir F. Thesiger, Mr. Clarkson, Mr. Peacock, and Mr. Forsyth, now showed cause against the Rule, and contended that a cadetship was an "office or place" within the meaning of the Act. It was said that a cadet was only a candidate for a commission in the army, which was to be given to him on his arrival in India. If that were so, a cadetship might not be a "commission;" and, as nothing was to be done by a cadet till he obtained his commission, it might not be an "employment;" but, at all events, it was "an office or place." The 33 Geo. 3, c. 52, ss. 59 and 60, had recognised the office of a cadet, and provided that no person should be capable of acting, or be appointed or sent out to India in the capacity of a cadet of writer, whose age should be under fifteen years. The second objection was, that Sir William Young had no power to confer the office. The count, however, did not allege that he had such power, but only that he had the nomination or appointment to an office "under the appointment and control of the East-India Company." Besides, the money was paid by Mr. Wotherspoon for the appointment, and it does not signify whether the person who professed to sell had the power legally to sell it or not. If Capt. Charretie agreed to sell the appointment, and in pursuance of that agreement received the money, the offence would be complete, though the transaction might be so fraudulent that he could not complete the arrangement. As to the third objection, it was said that the bargain proved was a bargain, not for the actual sale of a nomination, but for the defendant's interest in procuring it, and that the indictment should have been framed upon the fourth section of the Act. The seventh count charged a conspiracy, and it was equally unlawful to bargain for the interest of a person in procuring a sale, as for the actual sale; the seventh count was, therefore, free from all objection.

Mr. Crowder and Mr. Warren were heard in support of the Rule, and contended that a cadetship was not proved by the evidence to be within the terms of the Act. The evidence showed that a cadet did not get any commission until he arrived in India. On leaving England, he received a nomination, as it was called, or a bit of parchment (for it was not proved what it contained), and if he went to India and presented it, at some time or another, he would get a commission. Until that time, he was no more than a candidate for a cadetship. Dr. Johnson's definition of a cadet was, that he was one who volunteers to serve in the army in expectation of a commission. A cadet had no duty to perform, and it was not proved that he received any pay before he received his commission. He was not bound to go to India, though he might go if he liked. Secondly, the third section of the Act, if construed in connection with the preamble, showed that it could only apply to a person who sold an office to which he himself had the nomination. Suppose any person should agree with another to sell the next presentation to the office of Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, or to that of the Attorney-General; could he be indicted under this Act? Certainly not, for he had no place which it was in his power to sell. Thirdly, the seventh count was not proved, for the defendants did not conspire for the sale of the office, but only for the sale of their interest in procuring it. Fourthly, the prosecutors were bound not only to prove that a cadetship was a "place or appointment," but also that it was "an office or commission, place, and employment." The seventh count charged a conspiracy to make an illegal contract, which was set out. The prosecutors were bound to prove that a cadetship was "a commission and employment," as well as "an office and place." It was matter of description which must be strictly proved as laid, and the failure to do so would be fatal.

Lord Deane intimated that the Court would take time to consider their decision.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT, NOV. 24.

Impey v. Impey.—Capt. Impey, an officer in the Indian army, left two illegitimate children, to whom he bequeathed all his property. He died in the year 1835, and the children, who then appeared to be left destitute, were maintained by the Bengal Military Orphan School. Some property belonging to the estate of the father came into the possession of his executors in the year 1811; and one of the children having subsequently died, the interest of the property, which became due to the other, amounted to about £60 a year. The Orphan School afterwards applied to the Court for repayment of their expenses of the maintenance of the infant, which they charged at the rate of £48 per annum. It was referred to the Master to take an account of such maintenance, and the interest of the fund, so far as was necessary, was ordered to be applied in the repayment to the charity. The Orphan School claimed a sum of £460, and the interest of the property amounted only to about £340. The present petition was presented by Major Turner, the agent of the Orphan School, to be allowed the residue of the maintenance out of the corpus of the infant's property. Mr. G. L. Russell was for the petition. The Solicitor-General and Mr. Fisher opposed it. His Honour said, that the allowance for maintenance ought not properly to have begun until 1841, when the infant became entitled to the property. The Orphan School was certainly entitled to no more than the interest of the Fund, and the petition, so far as it asked for payment out of the principal, must be refused, with costs.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ANNEXATION OF THE PUNJAB.—It is now said that we are to annex the Punjab definitively to the dominions of British India. Of course, as far as the mere question of power is involved, this consummation could be brought to pass by one and the same effort already required to suppress the existing revolt. We must necessarily terminate the present state of things, and when that is effected the expedient of annexation will be attended, in point of fact, with rather fewer embarrassments than any other: nor is it probable, we should imagine, that the expense of occupying the Punjab as a British province will bear a greater proportion to the revenues of the whole country than our present charges bear to the two and twenty lacs contributed by the Sikh Durbar in presumed liquidation of them. Whether, in every other point of view, this finality would be equally desirable, is a question open perhaps to discussion, though it is hardly in human nature to be without a strong opinion upon the matter under circumstances so irritating as the present. The chief difficulty would lie in the reversionary rights of the helpless Maharajah, who must, as yet, be conceived incapable of criminality, and consequently of forfeit. But it would be hard that we should be hampered in our dealings with a power de facto by consideration of our relationship with a power de jure. The only authorities practically cognizable in the Punjab are those sirdars who, after swearing friendship to us, and receiving acquittances and obligations at our hands, have gratuitously employed the opportunities which were given for their benefit in wicked and wanton efforts for the destruction of their benefactors.—Times, Nov. 20.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.—A meeting of merchants and manufacturers connected with the cotton trade was held at Manchester on the 28th November, to take into consideration the subject of railways in India, and particularly of the above railway. Mr. John Potter, the Mayor of Manchester, took the chair, and opened the proceedings by stating that it had been proved that they could obtain a large supply of cotton from India, and that our exports to that country must be in proportion to our imports. One main cause which prevented the cultivation of cotton in India was the very inefficient state of the internal communication in the country, and it was therefore of the utmost importance that railway communication should be established. Mr. Bazley, the president of the Chamber of Commerce, moved a resolution to the effect that a steady and plentiful supply of raw cotton was indispensable to the well-being of these districts, and the meeting lamented that India should have hitherto secured so small a share in the British markets, one great cause being the want of roads and means of transport. The resolution was passed unanimously. Mr. Bright, M.P., went into the whole history of the negotiations between the Railway and the East-India Companies; and concluded by moving a resolution that it was the opinion of the meeting that the introduction of the railway system into India was necessary for developing the vast commercial, but neglected, resources of that country. The resolution was carried unanimously. Mr. Chapman, the managing director of the Bombay and Calcutta Railway, stated that, if this line were extended into the interior of India, cotton might be laid down at Liverpool at 2½d. per pound. It was proposed, at present, only to execute the first section of the line, constituting the only possible approach to Bombay. There was no doubt the line would be extended; the plans and sections for 200 miles had been carefully prepared. The guarantee from the East-India Company might be considered as an absolute guarantee of 5 per cent. for 25 years. The Bombay list of shareholders included several native rajahs, who had promised that, when the railway reached their territories, they would give the land necessary to carry it on to Delhi, 200 miles further. The share list was not full at present; applications had been received for 80,000 shares; but, in order to raise the necessary amount of capital for the completion of the railway and satisfaction of the East-India Company, 20,000 more shares were required to be taken up. He believed that the present estimate of the cost of the line, £15,000 per mile, would be more than was necessary. The contracts already entered into reduced the cost of these 35 miles £40,000 below the estimate. From Behar to Bombay, about 300 miles, the cost of the conveyance of cotton was 1d. per lb.; by railway it would be about one-third of that amount. Resolutions were then passed to the effect that the meeting expressed a strong interest in the prosecution of the scheme.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

A Dictionary, Hindustani and English; to which is added a Reversed Part, English and Hindustani. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D., Professor of Oriental Languages and Literature in King's College, London; &c. London. W. H. Allen & Co. THE essential requisites of a dictionary are accuracy and copiousness, and if these are brought within a compass, as respects bulk, convenient for use,—a great book is always a great evil,—the object of the work is attained. When we speak of a dictionary of a foreign language, we of course mean both parts, whereby the language to be learned, and that which is the medium of learning it, can be mutually rendered into each other, as the student has only half a dictionary if he has but the means of translating the foreign language into his own. It is somewhat surprising that, hitherto, the English dictionaries of Hindustani, which have been big enough in all conscience,—and, we may add, dear enough,—should have merely contained the renderings of Hindustani words into English, and that the reversed part, by which English could be turned into Hindustani,—perhaps of greater importance, in a colloquial tongue,—should have been thought unnecessary. Dr. Forbes tells us that twenty years' experience in the study and teaching of Hindustani convinced him of a fact which might very well have been demonstrated a priori, "that this deficiency, added to the exorbitant prices charged for Hindustani dictionaries, has greatly impeded learners." Having satisfied himself as to the existence of the evil, he set about remedying it, and he has produced a dictionary, containing both parts, "at once copious, portable, and of a moderate price," in one clearly and elegantly printed volume. Students of the language, as well as parents and guardians, who have to pay for outlays, will thank Dr. Forbes for getting rid of so much superfluity of matter and cost.

The acquisition of an Oriental language will always present some difficulties to Europeans; but there is nothing appalling in Dr. Forbes's dictionary. By a system of careful concentration; by a free use of the Roman character, where the Oriental is not needed; by rejecting a great many words found in other dictionaries, but which, strictly speaking, do not belong to the language, he has made room for the admission of some thousands of words which will not be found in any one dictionary besides.

The utility of the Hindustani dialect, which is the common medium of colloquial intercourse in almost all parts of India, and which is not difficult to acquire, wants only such a work as this to recommend the study of it to all persons who visit that country either in an official character, or in a commercial capacity, or even out of curiosity. To all these we recommend Dr. Forbes's Hindustani dictionary.

The Calcutta Review, a good authority, declares that, "in point of practical utility, Dr. Forbes's dictionary will be just as superior to all former dictionaries as his Persian and Hindustani grammars are to all former works of a similar description."

A History of the Reigning Family of Lahore, with some Account of the Jummoo Rajahs, the Sikh Soldiers and their Sirdars. Edited by Major G. CARMICHAEL SMYTH, 3rd Bengal Light Cavalry. Calcutta. Thacker and Co.

CAPT. SMYTH has enjoyed great opportunities of obtaining information respecting the history of the Sikh families, and the political transactions and secret intrigues at Lahore since the decease of Runjeet Singh; but, although he is more minute in some particulars, we do not perceive that he has added anything of material importance to the more copious history which Mr. Prinsep has given of the family of Runjeet. Of the more recent occurrences (previous to the treaties of 1846) he has furnished very full details; but, except in these details, the narrative does not differ substantially from that given in the History of the Punjab.

Of the remarkable death of No Nehal Singh (the son of Khuruk Singh) Capt. Smyth has furnished particulars, of the accuracy of which there can be no doubt, as they are reported by an eye-witness, though they differ from all other accounts we have hitherto seen, which represent that the prince was upon an elephant, passing through the gateway of the citadel at Lahore, when a beam, or part of the brickwork, gave way, and crushed both him and Oodum Singh (the son of Golab Singh), who was upon the same elephant. Capt. Gardner says: "No Nehal Singh was not seated upon an elephant, but was on foot; and it was not a beam that fell, but some brick-bats: I was present." Capt. Smyth has, from other sources, derived the following particulars of this singular catastrophe, which, though now well ascertained to have been accidental, was ascribed, at the time, to a political plot or contrivance:—

"The ceremony (of burning the corpse of Khuruk Singh) was performed in an open space opposite the mausoleum of Runjeet Singh, and near the Hazoree Bagh, within the precincts of the palace, and while the body was being burnt, the new Maharajah, No Nehal Singh, stood by the blazing pile of his father. Rajah Dehan Singh was at his side. Ere the corpse was consumed, however, the prince felt desirous to leave the spot, and to perform the ceremony of ablution in a nullah at a short distance. On this the minister politely represented to him that it would be contrary to rule and etiquette for him to leave the place before the body was consumed. No Nehal was then persuaded to stay a little longer; but presently, on the plea of sickness, he left the spot. He then proceeded on foot towards the bathing-place, which was at the distance of only about 120 yards. While on his way, the minister again brought him to a stand for a moment to remonstrate with him on his indecorous haste; the prince, however, was not to be detained, and he went on towards the stream. He was attended by the whole court, and followed by five elephants; but as it would have been considered irreverent for him to ride past the funeral pile on his return, the elephants were sent back to wait at a little distance. Having washed, the prince set forth on his return. He had to pass, first, through a gateway, then across a court-yard, and lastly through a deep archway leading from this court-yard to the spot on which the corpse had been burnt, and near which the elephants were now in waiting. Just before he entered this archway, the prince took the hand of Meean Oottum Singh, the eldest son of Golab Singh and nephew of Dehan Singh, and the two proceeded through the gateway together. As they emerged from the passage, the young Maharajah made a momentary halt while he addressed some jocular remark to his companion, and the next instant, a crash was heard,—the beams, stones, and tiles fell from above, and the two young men were struck to the ground."

A large portion of the volume is dedicated to an account of the Jummoo family, amongst whom Maharaja Golab Singh,—a personage of importance in the existing state of the Punjab,—holds a conspicuous place. Capt. Smyth depicts Golab in the most detestable colours, as a "monster," an "infamous miscreant," and relates particulars of his doings which, assuming them to be authentic, dispose us to give full credit to the stories now abroad of his deep dissimulation and incurable treachery.

The volume contains some curious "miscellaneous notices" of Phoola, the Akali; the Wuzer Zoroveroo; Futeh Khan, Tewana; Rajah Lall Singh and the slave-girl Mungela, and other characters.

The work has been compiled, the author tells us, partly from native manuscripts, and partly from information collected from Sikh sirdars, and European officers in the Sikh service; but chiefly from the notes of a Capt. Gardner, of the Sikh artillery, "who has for several years past supplied important information to the British Government without betraying his own."

The History of Bahawalpur, with Notices of the adjacent Countries of Sindh, Afghanistan, Multan, and the West of India. By SHAHAMET ALI. London. Madden.

THIS, we are told, is an abstract of the family annals of the Nawab Bahawal Khan, by Peer Ibrahim Khan, the British native agent at Bahawalpore, which was placed by Capt. J. D. Cunningham in the hands of Shahamet Ali, who translated it, and has augmented the work by much original information, historical and statistical, obtained by himself, when accompanying the mission of Sir C. M. Wade, in 1833, or from Major Mackeson and others. Something more than common interest attaches to the state of Bahawalpore, the chief of which has always been one of the most faithful of our allies in India, and has on various occasions rendered us important services, the present Nawab being the hearty coadjutor, with his "miserable rabble" (as Major Mackeson designates his regular troops), of Major Edwardes against the rebellious Dewan of Mooltan.

The tribe of Daoodputras, to which the Bahawalpore family belongs, and who deduce their origin from one Daood, a weaver of Shikarpore, seem to have gradually risen into importance, during the troubles of Western India, in the time of Aurungzeb: their chiefs first obtained territorial possessions about the time of Nadir Shah. The history of the family, from about the middle of the eighteenth century, is marked with the usual vicissitudes, but they maintained their position, in spite of reverses, until 1808, when the Hon. M. Elphinstone proceeded through Bahawalpore on his mission to Cabul, and was hospitably entertained by the Khan, who entered into a friendly treaty with the British Government, betwixt whom and this state the most amicable relations have ever since subsisted.

Some credit is due to the discernment of the Bahawalpore Khan who entertained Mr. Elphinstone; for when he was reproached by his minister for his lavish expenditure, which he considered to be thrown away upon a stranger, from whom nothing could be expected, he rebuked him for his want of foresight, observing, that "though he might not derive advantage from it, his successors would; for it was written in the Koran, that the power of the Feringhees would extend over the whole of India."

The materials in this volume are not worked up with much care; we have some matters twice over, and others are quite superfluous. "A brief account of the English nation and their country" might have been well omitted, for the errors it contains will induce many readers to distrust other portions of the work. In this "brief account," the Court of Directors are said to mean the East-India Company, who "lease" India from the King's Government, and if they are disposed to introduce any new law, or carry out any political measure of importance, "they are under the obligation of previously obtaining the assent of the three legislative powers," which is communicated through the Board of Control.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

I BEG most respectfully to announce to you my intention of offering myself, at a future opportunity, as a Candidate for the East-India Direction.

In soliciting the favour of your support, I may be permitted to advert to the long connection of my family with commercial affairs, as bankers in the City of London, and to express a hope that you will find some guarantee for trustworthiness and business habits in the responsible situation in which I am already placed, and in the character of those who have preceded me.

I have been engaged during a large portion of the last three years in prosecuting a tour in the East, and have visited great part of British India, as well as more remote provinces rarely traversed by Europeans. While these circumstances have made me acquainted with the wonderful efficiency of that organization through which India is governed,—with the ability, energy, and self-devotion to your civil and military servants,—they have led me to feel a personal and lasting interest in the destinies of its immense and varied population.

Should you honour me with your confidence, and confer on me a share in the administration of your affairs, I shall enter on that important trust with a deep sense of its responsibilities, and with the earnest desire to co-operate in every measure calculated to advance the welfare and develop the resources of your Eastern empire.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your obedient and faithful servant,

GEORGE WODEHOUSE CURRIE.

H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS, &c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavor to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the utmost despatch will be used in the shipments from London.

H. and T. PEAT feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are not of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior quality. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12 lb. saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9 lbs., at present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. FINE HEAD of HAIR.—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR

OIL.—The extraordinary efficacy and happy amalgamation of its purely exotic materials have rendered it justly renowned throughout the world for its remarkable virtues in nourishing, preserving, and beautifying the human hair. It stimulates its balsamic properties into the pores of the head, nourishes the hair in its embryo state, accelerates its growth, cleanses it from scurf and dandruff, sustains it in maturity, and continues its possession of healthy vigour, silky softness, and luxurious redundancy, to the latest period of human life. Its operation in cases of baldness is peculiarly active; so that, in numerous instances wherein other remedies have been tried in vain, Rowland's Macassar Oil has superseded the ornaments of art, by reinstating, in full plenitude, the permanent gifts and graces of nature. In the growth of whiskers, eyebrows, and mustachios, it is also undubbing in its stimulative operation. For children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair, and rendering the use of the fine comb unnecessary. A small pamphlet accompanying each bottle of Rowland's Macassar Oil, wherein important hints and advice will be found on the culture of the hair of infancy, and on its preservation and beauty through the several stages of human life. Its invaluable properties have obtained the especial patronage of her Majesty the Queen, the Court, and the whole of the Royal Family of Great Britain, and of every Court of the civilized world; and the high esteem in which it is universally held, together with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits.—Price 2s. 6d.; 7s.; or family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION.—On the wrapper of each bottle of the genuine article are these words in two lines:—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL. The same are engraved on the back of the wrapper nearly 1,500 times, containing 29,088 letters. Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 30, Hatton Garden, London, and by all Chemists and Perfumers. Beware of spurious "Macassar Oil."—Some are offered under the implied sanction of Royalty and the Government Departments, and similar attempts at deception.

A LIFE GUARDSMAN, ONE OF THE HEROES

OF WATERLOO, CURED OF RHEUMATISM BY HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Mr. Thomas Brunton, landlord of the Waterloo Tavern, Coutham, Yorkshire, was afflicted for many months with rheumatism and rheumatic gout; his legs were dreadfully painful, and disfigured with colours of every hue, frightful to behold. For ten weeks he was wholly unable to walk; the treatment he received from medical men not only failing to do him any good, but leaving him, in fact, in a considerably worse condition. At this juncture, Holloway's Ointment and Pills were resorted to, and by their sole means he has been restored to health and strength.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 344, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, &c.
HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c.—They furnish equal pressure in every part, are perfectly porous, and draw on without lacing. Many have attempted to imitate them, by introduction of an article so full of serious defects, as to render this caution to the public necessary. H. and Co.'s Surgical Stockings, &c. are patronised by all the first surgeons in the kingdom. HUXLEY and Co., 6, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant, G. H. BOUTELL, Professor of Galvanism."—The celebrated Eye Saff can be had by forwarding money orders, directed to William Grimsstone, 434, Oxford-street, or Herbery, Highgate, near London. PORTABLE SODA WATER APPARATUS.—

BASSETT'S.—This apparatus will enable persons to make Soda Water themselves at any time, and at a trifling expense (about 1d. per bottle). It is also applicable for rendering most beverages effervescent and sparkling, such as Gooseberry Wine, Cider, Ale, and Lemonade. Flat soft water can also be very greatly improved by its aid. Part of the apparatus can be made available as a corkcrew, or a siphon, for drawing off ART PORTWINE in bottle or champagne. Madras Messrs. Line & Co.
Bombay Messrs. Ritchie, Stewart, & Co.
Ceylon

The following peculiar advantages are offered by this Company:—

1. Their policies cover the risk of living and voyaging over a far larger portion of the globe than do those issued by any other Company in existence. They allow the assured to reside in the Australasian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow to the assured for the whole of life one passage out and home to any of those colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged, and the premium is reduced to the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence.
2. Premiums may be paid, and claims settled at Sydney, where there is a Board of Directors and Trustees; and at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, where there are Agents.
3. A third of the premiums may remain unpaid for five years; nor is it necessary for the maintenance of the Assurance to pay up the premium at the end of that time, but the unpaid thirds may remain as a debt against the policy, if the interest be regularly paid upon them as the renewal premiums fall due.

ANNUITIES.

The Annuities offered by the Company are on a more favourable scale than those offered by any other Companies, having been calculated with reference to the rates of interest obtainable on Colonial Investments. Annuity holders also participate in the profits.

MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where Bata will be given on application.

W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote EMIGRATION, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CABIN-PASSENGER OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 66 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at St. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES.

HINDUSTANI, PERSIAN, ARABIC, SANSKRIT, &c.,
TAUGHT, ON MODERATE TERMS.

AT No. 58, BURTON CRESCENT, FROM 10 A.M. TO 1 P.M.,

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.,

Professor of Oriental Languages in the King's College, London; Member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland; Member of the Asiatic Society of Paris; and author of the following Works, just published on the

HINDUSTANI & PERSIAN LANGUAGES.

A DICTIONARYHINDUSTANI-ENGLISH & ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

In One Volume, royal 8vo. price £2. 12s. 6d.

•• This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have been hitherto collected in any one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

GRAMMAR of the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE, in the Oriental and Roman Characters, with numerous copper-plate illustrations of the Persian and Devanagari Systems of Alphabetic Writing. To which is added, a copious Selection of Easy Extracts for reading in the Persian and Devanagari Characters, forming a complete introduction to the Bagh-o-Bahar, together with a Vocabulary and explanatory Notes. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D. 8vo. cloth 12s.

HINDUSTANI MANUAL: a Pocket Companion for those who visit India in any capacity; intended to facilitate the essential attainments of conversing with fluency, and composing with accuracy, in the most useful of all the languages spoken in our Eastern Empire.

IN TWO PARTS.

PART I.—A compendious Grammar of the Language, with Exercises on its more prominent peculiarities; together with a Selection of useful Phrases, Dialogues, and Subjects for translation into English.

PART II.—A Vocabulary of useful Words, English and Hindustani, showing at the same time the difference of idiom between the two Languages.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

Second Edition, considerably improved. 18mo. bd. 5s. 6d.

Extracted from the "Friend of India," published at Serampore:—

"We have been favoured with a copy of the 'Hindustani Manual,' published by Dr. FORBES, the Professor of Oriental Languages and Literature in King's College, London. It is a small duodecimo volume of 156 pages, within which narrow space more instruction is condensed than is to be found in works four times its size and cost. •• The Work can be honestly recommended to all who are desirous of acquiring the elements of the language, or of making themselves understood among the people of this country. We have seldom, if ever, seen such a small pocket companion with such a variety of useful instruction. The language of the Vocabulary and of the Dialogues appears quite unexceptionable. Any one acquainted with Hindustani will at once recognize its idiomatic accuracy, and cheerfully recommend it to the notice of all those who desire to come out to India not altogether unprepared to convey their own wishes to those who surround them."

BAGH-O-BAHAR; consisting of entertaining Tales in the Hindustani Language. By MIR ANMAN, of Delhi. A new edition, carefully collated with original Manuscripts, having the essential vowel points and punctuation marked throughout. To which is added, a Vocabulary of the Words occurring in the work. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D. Royal 8vo. cloth . . . 15s.

•• The Bagh-o-Bahar is the text-book in which cadets and assistant-surgeons have to pass an examination in India, as to their knowledge of the Hindustani language. This edition was prepared by Dr. Forbes under the direction of the Honourable the East-India Company.

GRAMMAR of the PERSIAN LANGUAGE. To which is added, a Selection of Easy Extracts for reading, together with a copious Vocabulary. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D. Second edition, greatly improved and considerably enlarged. Royal 8vo. cloth 12s. 6d.

•• A knowledge of Persian is absolutely necessary for reading the best compositions in Hindustani. The preceding Grammar, with its Selections, will amply suffice for this purpose: when the student has finished the Hindustani Grammar, with its Selections (in the Persian character), he will find it greatly to his advantage to devote a month to the Persian before he commences the Bagh-o-Bahar.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

THE intelligence by this mail will contribute but little to allay impatience respecting the issue of the conflict which has been so long expected at Mooltan. Both the belligerent parties, at the date of the latest advices from thence (November 3rd), remained in precisely the same position and circumstances as they were left in twelve days before, when the latest letters were dated which were brought by the last mail. Time, however, as we before observed, whilst it is undermining the resources of Moolraj, is strengthening and increasing those of his assailants.

Rajah Shere Singh, whose departure from Mooltan we mentioned in our last Summary, appears to have proceeded slowly up the Chenab until he was about seventy miles from Lahore, when he crossed the river, and marched to Pind Dadun Khan, in the Salt Range, with the view, probably, of establishing a communication with Chuttoor Singh, his father, who was still on the banks of the Upper Indus. The report given in our last Summary, of the advance of Chuttoor Singh upon Lahore, turns out to be false (though some of his troops occupied Wuzerabad), and, therefore, there is no present appearance of any combined movement on the part of these two Sirdars upon the capital. The force under Shere Singh is said to amount to 5,000 men, with 12 guns, and he expected to be joined by the Bunnoo Sikhs (of whom, however, nothing had been heard), who are supposed to number as many more. This would make the aggregate force under this commander 10,000 men. Chuttoor Singh had about 9,000; and another of his sons, Aotar Singh, it is said, was at Jalalpoore, on the Jelum, with 1,500. This hopeful family of rebels, therefore, have collected about 20,000 mutinous Sikhs; and theirs appear to be the only bodies of troops with whom the British commanders have to deal in the field. By the retreat of Shere Singh, the force at Mooltan is said to be reduced to below 8,000. Against these opponents we have nearly 28,000 British troops within the Lahore territories, and at least 36,000 beyond the Sutlej and Beas, besides 30,000 auxiliaries,—whilst 30,000 regulars are collecting on our north-western frontier.

It seems to have been determined that nothing should be attempted by Major-General Whish until the arrival of the Bombay column, which had assembled at Roree, and was expected to move on the 15th or 16th November, under Colonel Dundas; it would probably reach Mooltan early this month. Major-General Auchmuty, who was originally in command of this force, had been ordered to remain in command of the troops in Scinde; and as he was senior to General Whish, and would, therefore, have superseded him, the change implies that there is no intention on the part of the Government to transfer the conduct of the siege to other hands than those in which it was at first placed. It has been resolved that no troops shall be sent to Mooltan from any other quarter, and the march of Major Eckford's brigade, which had moved from Ferozepore, had been countermanded.

General Whish had received a reinforcement of 1,000 returned furlough men. The 3rd Bombay N.I., with 500 of Jacob's horse, belonging to the Bombay column, had reached Subzulcote, 80 miles in advance. The column would be accompanied by a pontoon and battery train, consisting of 30 pieces of heavy ordnance, which would place at the General's command 120 pieces of artillery, half of them of the largest calibre.

There had been some skirmishing betwixt our troops and the Mooltanis, and the cavalry of the enemy was constantly hovering about the camp. Moolraj is said to exhibit no lack of activity; he has endeavoured to establish batteries, from whence to annoy our position, and has employed rockets, which, being probably of native manufacture, were not very effective. He has released all the prisoners he had taken (and whom he treated with much kindness), who represent him to be a man of very engaging manners. Some deserters from Mooltan had made a model of the fort upon a large scale. Very smart skirmishes took place on the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd November, the details of which are given elsewhere. Nothing more is said respecting the alleged attempt to assassinate General Whish. A suggestion is thrown out in one of the letters that Moolraj will probably evacuate the fort on the arrival of the reinforcements, and join Shere Singh.

At Lahore, where all was activity and bustle, in connexion with the military movements, no appearance of disaffection or disorder had appeared. A bridge of boats to cross the Ravee, which had been left in charge of a Durbar guard, had been fired by some marauders, who overpowered the guard. The accident was soon repaired, and Brigadier Godby's brigade crossed on the 28th October, and encamped on the other side of the river. This brigade consists of Lane's troop of Horse Artillery and the 8th Light Cavalry, the 2nd European regiment, and the 70th N.I. A strong body of cavalry under Brigadier-General Cureton likewise crossed and encamped at Shadaree. Major Eckford's brigade, which had been thrice under orders for Mooltan and thrice recalled—consisting of a light field battery, a company of artillery, and the 31st and 56th regiments of N.I.—crossed on the 3rd November and encamped in the neighbourhood of the rest. The whole force thus assembled beyond the Ravee amounted to 7,000 men. All these troops have been pushed forward from Ferozepore, where the strength of the garrison has been brought up by troops advancing from behind. The Delhi Gazette of the 8th November states that on the 3rd the greater part of the troops on the right bank of the Ravee had marched in the direction of Wuzerabad.

Brigadier Wheeler, who, as stated in our last issue, had crossed the Beas, and commenced operations against certain marauders, had taken the fort of Moraree, which, as well as that of Rungrungul, he destroyed. He was preparing to cross the Ravee, so as to be ready to co-operate with Brigadier-General Cureton, and the brigades of Godby and Eckford.

The Jummoo contingent, of 5,000 men, despatched by Golab Singh, under Colonel Steinbach, had come down the Bheembur Pass, from Cashmere, as far as Rajooree, and thence moved to the town of Jelum, about half-way betwixt Lahore and Attock, 150 miles from each, and within 50 miles of Pind Dadun Khan. This movement will have the effect of preventing the junction of Chuttoor Singh and Shere Singh, and the advance of either upon Lahore.

Upon the whole, the complexion of affairs in the Punjab country is favourable. The Commander-in-Chief, who was on the 1st November at Indghur, between Lodiana and Ferozepore, and was expected at the latter station on the 5th, is said to have some plan in contemplation which will require a large force; but we must wait for its further development.

All was quiet at Peshawur on the 5th October; but the communication between that place and Lahore was still obstructed. In the Hazareh country, Capt. Abbott had been joined by almost all the chiefs, with their levies, notwithstanding the superior force of the sirdar Chuttoor Singh in cavalry and artillery. The accounts from Bunnoolament the fate of Mullik Futteh Khan, Tawana, the Sikh governor of the province, who, it appears, held out gallantly in the fort of Dhuleep Ghur until the very last, and then tried to escape by a rope over the bastion. He was seized by the mutinous Sikh soldiers and beheaded, in revenge, as they said, for the murder of Prince Peshora Singh, of which deed Futteh Khan was the chief instrument. He has done good service to the British; he was the chief means of bringing in Shaikh Emam-ood-deen, and of producing the written orders to rebel from Rajah Lall Singh, which caused the deposition of that personage from the Wuzerat. Ram Singh had crossed the Indus at Eejan Khail, about the 15th October, and was marching along the foot of the Salt Range, in the direction of Pind Dadun Khan, apparently to join Shere Singh.

Nothing has occurred worthy of notice in Cabul, the accounts from whence reach to no later date than the 27th September.

Rumours were in circulation at Calcutta that some suspicious movements had been made by the Nepaulese, as if to take advantage of any reverse that might befall us. A camp is said to be preparing in Nepaul contiguous to the British territories, capable of holding 12,000 men, under immediate orders from Catmandoo, on the pretext that the head-quarters of our troops in the Dinapore division had been recently advanced too near the Nepaulese frontier.

In the Nizam's territories, the oppression of the government officers has roused resistance in different parts of the country, which has become so serious as to call for the aid of the subsidiary force. The principal disturbance has taken place at Goolburgah, where two pearsadaha (priests) occupied a fort with about 800 men. Two companies of H.M.'s 84th, the 17th N.I., and some artillery, were despatched from Secunderabad, under Colonel Blundell, accompanied by General Frazer; but at the first summons the place surrendered.

The local incidents at the presidencies are scanty. At Calcutta, the only noticeable occurrence is connected with the Union Bank. The creditors' committee applied to the Insolvent Court for an adjudication of insolvency against two recusant shareholders (the brothers Aushetosh Dey and Promothonauth Dey), on the ground that they, the wealthiest individuals, had, contrary to the new Act, transferred a part of their property to their wives, in order to defraud their creditors. The application, which was ex-parte, was granted, the Chief Justice (who sat as Commissioner) stating that, in his opinion, all the shareholders of the bank were liable to be declared individually insolvent, if they committed any act of insolvency defined as such in the Act.

The Madras papers contain but little local news. The subject of Mrs. Frere's death is not set at rest by the verdict of the jury acquitting Dr. Daubeney. The report of the trial, which is extremely long, discloses some distressing and extraordinary facts. "Everything connected with the birth and death of the infant found in Mrs. Frere's apartment," observes the Athenæum, "as well as the nature of the death of the unfortunate woman herself, still continue mysteries." The much-vexed question of the conduct of Capt. Macpherson, the Government agent in the hill tracts of Orissa, has, it appears, at length been settled by Lord Dalhousie, who, it is said, has vindicated that officer from the major part of the aspersions cast upon him, and condemned, in the strongest terms, the conduct of General Dyce. Several movements of troops had taken place in the Madras territories; the 22nd, 28th, and 34th regiments M. N. I. had proceeded to stations under the Bengal presidency; and it was rumoured that, in consequence of the large demand on the Bombay army, created by the Mooltan campaign, the southern frontier of the western presidency would be supplied with Madras troops.

The only event of any moment at that presidency, is an extraordinary "run" upon the Bank of Bombay, in consequence of the discovery of some forged notes in circulation in the Bazar. The total amount of the forgeries was only Rs. 8,000, yet such was the panic, that, in the course of two or three days, the "run" was to the extent of nearly 25 lakhs, or a quarter of a million sterling! The parties who flocked to the bank to get their notes cashed were almost all Marwarries.

The China intelligence is likewise barren of interest. The grand jury, at the Admiralty Sessions at Hong-Kong, on the 3rd October, threw out the bill preferred against the commander and crew of the schooner Spec, for piracy, in an irregular attempt on the part of the commander to suppress piracy.—Captain Cole having captured a junk, alleged to be a fishing junk, on the grounds of her being a pirate.

The new viceroy of Egypt, Abbas Pasha, arrived at Cairo from Suez on the 26th November, and assumed the viceroyalty. On the 2nd December Mazloum Bey, Minister of Justice at the Sublime Porte, arrived with a firman, nominating Abbas Pasha to the viceroyalty, and charged to invite his Highness to Constantinople, there to receive the formal investiture. The young Pasha had already conciliated the higher ranks of his subjects, and gratified all classes by a graceful act of attention towards his grandfather, Mehemet Ali, to whom he paid a visit of respect as soon as he arrived at Cairo.

BENGAL.

MOOLTAN.

"Mooltan, Nov. 1.—Taylor is gone towards Cohaut; Lumsden with his guides gone via Bahawalpoor to Lahore. Edwardes contemplated a march to Bunnoo to settle that valley, calculating that he could return by the time the Bombay troops will be here, since there had been some unaccountable delay in that quarter. However, I hear that he has either been dissuaded, or of his own accord relinquished the idea. Moolraj's deserters have made a model in mud on a large scale of the fort, and to the eye it seems correct, and to correspond with all I have seen. I should say it was a most difficult place either to batter or mine—but that shelling will be effective. Moolraj's cavalry, in small parties, has been hovering about, and our pickets have been out three days running; but the enemy is too cunning for us. Yesterday he came out in great force opposite Edwardes, and drove in the pickets; he sticks so close to the canal that there is no touching him; towards evening five or six rockets were fired, and Moolraj retired. The rockets answered very well, for a wonder. I believe they have been kept damp for some days. The cause of their bursting was the dryness of the composition. The cause of Moolraj being again thus active is a quarrel amongst his soldiers, in which one Ruttun Singh is said to have been killed by an Akalee; in Durbar they accused each other of cowardice, and this is the result. They are out again to-day in the same spot, but the cavalry officers say they cannot touch them in such a position. Firing in Edwardes's camp at this present writing. We saw rather a large body of the enemy's cavalry yesterday. Cavalry and Anderson's guns out. Some few plunderers were seen, and a few men sent out after them. Lieut. M. was obliged to fall back for a while, when the rest of the cavalry and horse artillery came out, and the enemy of course made off. I heard Major Wheeler say that his troop or troops, I forget which, had suffered (six wounded and some horses killed). More were seen, and a troop of 7th irregular cavalry went out, and, going too far, brought a large force of cavalry, infantry, and zamburruks, on itself. It charged, and punished the enemy pretty handsomely, supported by another troop, which was just in time to assist, and subsequently by Lieut. Matheson, and a troop of the 11th light and irregular cavalry."

"Nov. 2.—The cannonade in and against Edwardes's camp has continued, and was kept up occasionally all night, and continues still. We fired four 18 lb. shot yesterday, and M'Kenzie's troop sent out two guns to the front to try and silence Moolraj. Moolraj is impetuous, and must be driven out of that."—Mofussilite Extra, Nov. 8.

"Camp Mooltan, Nov. 2.—The party of irregular cavalry who were engaged with the enemy amounted to only sixty sabres, under the command of Reesalder Abdoolah Khan, of the 7th or Wheeler's corps. In performance of the somewhat dull duty of escorting dobbies to their place of avocation, they surprised some ten or twelve suwars of the enemy, who immediately poured in a volley, and retreated towards their picquets, hotly pursued by the gallant native officer and his men. It was not long before some hundred cavalry made their appearance, when the brave little band had to cut their way out, the lion-hearted leader killing and disabling no less than four opponents with his own hand, and receiving two deep cuts while doing so. He cleverly managed to draw off with his wounded until a reinforcement relieved him, and then some further punishment was inflicted on the foe. Our loss was very trifling, altogether about ten wounded (one only mortally), half the number belonging to the 7th, and the other half to the 11th, irregulars. On the opposite side some nine men killed and about ten horses, and a great many of both wounded: several heads were brought into our camp. This little affair will, I think, silence grumblers (they are not a few), who are continually denying the merits of all native cavalry, and trying to prove that they are the "curse of the country." Our allies had hard work all day, all night, and, I think I may say, will have all to-day. Cortlandt might be seen from an early until a late hour on the move, pushing forward a gun occasionally when it was required. His loss was, I believe, one horse badly wounded, and some three or four men killed and wounded by round shot. In a skirmish during the evening three or four more were wounded by matchlock balls. The 6 pr. balls of the enemy occasionally fell into their camp. Our 2 H. A. guns actually advanced within 600 yards of their advanced post, and some shrapnel was bestowed, apparently with great effect. From sunset until about 8 p.m. all was perfectly quiet, then the fire of artillery announced a renewal of the game. The enemy must have advanced some of their guns, for the picquets and quarter guard of the extreme corps (52nd N.I.) were occasionally treated to a round shot, and shell were thrown on both sides during the greater part of the night. This morning a dark column of smoke rose above the Mooltanee's position; it lasted for some time, and was probably caused by the 'funeral pyres' of 'deceased warriors.' General Whish and his staff rode on some hundred yards to the front to examine some ground where it has been recommended that an 18 pr. battery be immediately erected.

"3 p.m.—A brisk exchange of compliments between the allies and the enemy at about 1,200 yards. A camp follower cut down only a short distance to the front. Some amateurs started off in chase, but found they could not catch the cowardly rascal, who soon regained his picquet. A village in our neighbourhood appeared to be full of rebels. The cause of all these hostilities appears to lie in a delusion that Edwardes and a greater part of the allied forces had left us. I hear from good authority that Moolraj has been submitting terms of capitulation to a high quarter, and it is expected that a speedy close will be brought to the Mooltan campaign. It is also rumoured that one of our brigades will remain here."

Nov. 3.—Cortlandt as usual gave the enemy a good cannonading until near sunset; the grass and bushes near their position appeared to be on fire for about half an hour, supposed to have been caused by a shell. The allied camp and batteries were subjected to constant visits of ricochet shot, but no great mischief occurred; another actually fell between the picquets of the 52nd N.I., on their turning out in the evening. I believe that not above three or four men of Cortlandt's force were killed and wounded, while that of the Mooltanees is stated by a spy to have amounted to one sirdar and fourteen men killed. Narain Singh (a sirdar of Moolraj), with 1,000 men, is reported to have been seen proceeding towards our rear, for what purpose was not known, but it was surmised in camp that the object in view was a dour on the stores in charge of Capt. Price. I believe Edwardes despatched a large body of sirdars in case of reinforcements being needed. I am happy to say that Capt. Price arrived safe in camp this morning, having got rid of about fifty hackery loads of powder, &c. by leaving them in Soojabad. Soon after sunset of yesterday orders were issued to form a battery in a previously chosen site (about 500 yards to the front). The left brigade furnished the working and covering parties until 12 p.m., when they were relieved by similar ones from the right. The enemy, when first disturbed, opened a fire of matchlocks and zumbooraks, without doing further damage than wounding a sepoy of the 72nd N.I. From midnight until daybreak of this morning our work progressed very uninterruptedly, and it was imagined that the hostile batteries had withdrawn, but scarcely was daylight ushered in by the drums and fifes of our force when some angry missiles were ejected, with the apparent view of undeceiving us on this point.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 8.

THE UNION BANK.

The "Act to confirm an Agreement between certain Shareholders and Creditors of the Union Bank of Calcutta" premises that a memorial had been presented to the Governor-General in Council from members of the Committee of Management of the Bank, and also by certain members of the Committee of Creditors of the Bank, setting forth that the assets are insufficient to satisfy the outstanding debts and liabilities, and several creditors had obtained judgment against its public officer, and some of the judgments had been put in suit against individual shareholders; that many of the creditors were willing to give a discharge to those shareholders who will pay a reasonable assessment on account of their debts, provided that such discharge do not work a release of their claims against others who should refuse to pay such assessments; and praying that the effect of such agreement may be legalised without prejudice to the rights of any creditor who should not execute the same, &c.; and it enacts that the agreement set forth in the schedule (annexed) shall be of full force as between those creditors of the Union Bank who shall execute the same, and receive any payment out of the sums contributed according to such agreement, on account of the debts and liabilities due to them respectively by the Bank, [and those persons named in the schedule, and in the agreement, who shall pay, at the time and in the manner mentioned in the agreement, the several sums at which they are severally assessed in the schedule of assessment; and as between all other persons shall be wholly null and void; that if any creditor who shall have executed the agreement shall thereafter take any proceeding at law or in equity on account of any debt or liability of the Bank against any person named in the schedule of assessment, who shall pay, at the time and in the manner mentioned in the agreement, the full sum at which he or she is assessed, the execution of the agreement by such creditor, and payment of the assessment, may be pleaded in bar thereof; that if any creditor who shall not have executed the agreement shall take any proceeding at law or in equity, on account of any debt or liability of the Bank, against any person liable to make good the same, or if any creditor who shall have executed the agreement shall take any proceeding at law or in equity, on account of any debt or liability of the Bank, against any person liable to make good the same, who shall not pay at the time and in the manner mentioned in the agreement, the full sum at which he is assessed, the agreement shall not be pleadable to such proceeding.

The schedule is as follows: "We, the undersigned, creditors of the Union Bank of Calcutta, hereby undertake and promise, upon payment, by the executive committee of the said Bank, of an immediate first dividend of 25 per cent. upon our respective claims, to accept the schedule hereunto annexed (which has been framed by a committee of creditors of the Bank) as the schedule of assessment or contribution towards the liquidation of the debts of the Bank of the several shareholders, past and present, therein named; and we promise and agree not to sue out any writ of scire facias against, or otherwise to molest, the person or property of any shareholder or shareholders of the Union Bank, named in the schedule, who shall pay up the full sum placed opposite his or her name in the schedule, as and for his or her assessment or contribution as aforesaid, provided, however, that nothing herein-contained shall be construed to protect any of the said parties from being proceeded against, unless and until he shall have actually paid his assessment in full, and to prevent any writ of scire facias which shall have been issued, or any action or suit which shall have been actually commenced against any shareholder, before payment of his assessment, from being prosecuted, and continued afterwards, if the party instituting such proceeding chooses so to do: Provided, further, that if any shareholder in the schedule named shall not have paid or given security to the executive committee of the Bank, certified by them to be sufficient for the payment of his assessment, within three months from this date, if he be resident in India, or within five months if resident out of India, the same shall be increased ten per cent., and that a further percentage of the like amount shall be added after every succeeding period of three months during which the same shall remain unpaid or unsecured. Provided also that the executive committee of the Bank do engage to pay from time to time such further dividends upon our respective claims until full satisfaction thereof respectively, as the sums realized from the contribution shall enable them to do, and whenever the realization shall amount to ten per cent. upon the remaining claims, to declare and pay a new dividend at that rate. Provided always, and it is hereby expressly declared and agreed, that we, the undersigned, reserve to ourselves all our rights and remedies whatsoever against the assets of the said Bank, legal and equitable, and against all shareholders, present and past, not paying up the full amount of their said assessments respectively as aforesaid. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our respective hands, this 25th day of September, in the year 1848."

THE OPIUM QUESTION.

We stated that the pecuniary advantage which might have been expected from the increase of the supply of opium was likely to be neutralized by the fall in the price of the drug, and that the immediate consequence would probably be a positive diminution of revenue. The object of this increase may possibly have been twofold—augmenting the resources of Government, and modifying the character of the opium revenue to meet the contingency of future events; but, in the present state of the treasury, we apprehend that the first object was revenue; and the scheme may, therefore, in one sense, be said to have failed of success. But, so far as it was intended to subvert the ulterior object of preserving the opium revenue, by presenting it in a less objectionable form to public view, it is likely to command the most complete success. It must have been apparent to every observer, that none of the objections which have been brought by the "philanthropists" in England against the introduction of opium into China have been applied to the exportation of Malwa opium, through the port of Bombay, on the payment of a duty of Rs. 400 a chest to Government. Their announcement of the iniquity of drugging that empire has been exclusively confined to the opium raised at this presidency, upon the principle of a monopoly, by the capital of the State, and under the superintendence of public officers; and we may therefore infer that the objection was rather to the mode in which the revenue was raised on our side of India, than to the result in China. There is an objection, on the principles of political economy, to the engagement of the State in any agricultural transactions, and a still stronger objection to the thing called monopoly; and hence it may be anticipated that when the Indian question is again forced on the consideration of Parliament, it will be the odious monopoly, which all parties will meet vigorously and most virtuously attack. How far the late arrangements were designed to break the edge of that censure, and to enable the Indian authorities to propose to place this revenue at our presidency upon the same unobjectionable footing on which that at Bombay rests, we have not, of course, any means of ascertaining; but if any such design lies at the bottom of the new plan, we think the author of it deserves the commendation of Leadenhall Street for his sagacity. By bringing the profits of each chest down to a level with the duty levied at Bombay, and making up the deficiency by an increase of the supply, the Government is placing itself upon high vantage-ground; and whenever the struggle comes on, may even obtain credit for offering at once to sacrifice the cultivation and the monopoly, and substitute an export duty in their stead. But in this case the integrity of the revenue will be preserved at the expense of Chinese morals, that is to say, so far as they are affected by the consumption of the drug. It will then be found that, to enable Government to substitute a duty which is deemed unobjectionable for the "monopoly," which is so loudly reprobated, it has been necessary to reduce the price of the article, and thus to place it within the reach of a much larger body of consumers, and at the same time to double the supply. Those who take a philanthropic view of the question, will find that the interests of the Chinese would have been best consulted by allowing the anomaly of the "Government monopoly" of this pernicious drug to continue, and that the result of their campaign against it has been anything but advantageous to the well-being of those for whose benefit they profess to have been combating. There can be little doubt that, as soon as the cultivation is thrown open, private enterprise and capital will immediately enlarge the production, and it is not unlikely that, within five years after the alteration has been effected, even the present enormous supply will be doubled.—Friend of India.

MESSRS. GILLANDERS, ARBUTHNOT, AND CO.—The proprietors of the Delhi Gazette have apologized in court for falsely announcing the stoppage of the firm of Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot, and Co., which has been accepted on payment of costs.

THE Mofussilite says editorially, "it is imagined there will be one grand battle in the Punjab—but not on this side of Lahore." This belief appears to be becoming pretty general; we expressed it ourselves a few days ago. It is founded on the assumption that the Seikh troops, collecting under Chutter Singh and his son, will, when they think themselves strong enough, advance on Lahore, and that, as a matter of course, our army now forming will advance to meet them and bar their way to the capital. It is possible that a successful dour by Cureton's brigade and a charge of the Moodkee-wallas & Co., on Shere Singh's legions, may alter the state of affairs present and prospective considerably; but, as matters stand, it is to be hoped that no time will be lost in getting together and pushing on "the army of the Punjab."—Bengal Hurkura, Nov. 1.

CONSULS FOR AUSTRIA.—The Honourable the President in Council is pleased to recognize the nomination of Mr. J. F. Wingate and Mr. L. Fraser as consuls for Austria, at Calcutta and Singapore respectively.

A PROSPECTUS of a new fund has been published in the Englishman. The object of the fund is to relieve the subalterns of the onus, and transfer it to the majors who derive the most immediate benefit.

RETIREMENT.—The Delhi Gazette mentions that arrangements have been made to purchase out Major Charlton, and Captain Leacock, of the 70th N.I.

WARS IN INDIA.—It has been repeatedly said that, however tranquil India may be, every new Governor-General is sure to find some reason for going to war. That this is unfortunately true of some, must be admitted; but history will acquit Lord Dalhousie of having wilfully plunged the country into a fresh contest. The war in which we are now engaged was a legacy left to him by his predecessor, which he could not refuse without greater danger than he must incur from its acceptance. There is an old saying, Pejor est bello timor ipse belli, which is most assuredly applicable to India. The perpetual apprehension of war is as costly as war itself, perhaps more so, and is an excuse for putting off the consideration of every suggestion for the improvement of the country. A treacherous foe will now be met, as he ought to be, with a crushing force. His means of future resistance must be removed, and then indeed we may hope for a long and uninterrupted peace. Sixty thousand men in arms in the Punjab or on its borders will suffice to put down all resistance; but unless a partition of the country be made, very different from that effected by the Hardinge treaties, a repetition of disturbances may be rationally expected whenever opportunity occurs.—Englishman, Oct. 18.

THE KASSIS OF THE Kossya hills, according to the Rev. Mr. Jones, a Welsh Calvinistic Methodist missionary amongst them, are an open and affable people, possessing a great deal of genuine uprightness of character; and, although their superstitions are deeply rooted in their minds, they listen attentively to the Gospel, and reason candidly about its truths. He has made several converts.

WAGERS.—By the Act No. 21 of 1848, the Courts of Law are freed from the disgrace of deciding wagers, which will in future be left to the proper tribunals,—the various sporting clubs of the country. The Act nullifies all agreements, whether verbal or in writing, by way of gaming or wagering.

SIKH PROCLAMATION.—The following is a translation of a placard found pasted on the gate of the temple in the city of Umritsir:—"These orders are circulated for all people under the government of Lahore: both small and great well know what oppressions have been practised by the English on Runjeet Singh; that is, the Khalsa and inhabitants of the Punjab. 1st. That they have imprisoned the queen and sent her to Hindostan, and thereby violated their promise and agreement. 2nd. The Sikhs, who are children of Gooroo Khalsa Jee, are weary of the English, because they commit acts contrary to the Sikh religion. 3rd. That the authority of the Khalsa people has been diminished to such a degree, that they are powerless; therefore, according to the decrees of Shree Akal Poorush Jee and Shree Wa Gooroo Jee, Rajah Shere Singh Bahadoor and the other rulers and princes, together with a large force on behalf of Maharajah Dhuileep Singh, are appointed to root out this tribe of oppressors; and the loyal Dewan Moolraj is concocting a plan for driving out those deceitful oppressors, and striving to do so with heart and soul. Thus it behoves the subjects of the Sirkar Khalsa Jee to strive to join the army of Moolraj, to kill the English wherever they may meet them, and stop the dak. In return for such fidelity, they will ensure for themselves the goodwill of the Gooroo, the happiness of all men, and their exaltation. Whoever acts according to this proclamation, and gives his life as a sacrifice, will reap the reward of his fidelity in this world and in the next; and whoever refuses acquiescence to this mandate, is not a true Sikh."

LUSHKUR GWALIOR.—On the morning of the 30th September, the Resident, Major Ross, in company with Brigadier Parsons and six more officers and three ladies of the contingent, visited the palace royal. The ladies were directed to the female apartment of the palace, with a view, no doubt, to ascertain the grievances the Tara Bae had complained of, and to report the same through the agent to the Governor-General. The Regent, to secure himself from the imputations complained of by her Highness, took the precaution to get his wife to send a verbal message to the Tara Bae not to make any complaints, and if she did she would most inevitably feel the consequences: that he would have her Highness and relatives all banished the territories. This message was conveyed to her Highness through the medium of a buthee (slave girl), in the confidence of the Regent, at the moment when Major Ross had sent word to the durbar that the wife of the Regent, as well as all other females connected with him, should not be admitted to her Highness at this interview. It is said that the sum total of her Highness's complaints have been submitted in a memorial to the Supreme Government of India, in the full anticipation that the Government will do her the justice which her position may entitle her to. That her dignity has been insulted in an occurrence quite public in the Lushkur; that she is labouring under every manner of restriction, is indisputable. That there is something yet of a more serious charge against the Regent, time, the author of futurity, has still to develop.—Mofussilee, Oct. 21.

THE HIMALYA MOUNTAINS are being subjected to the same searching scientific examination by British officers as were the Andes by Humboldt. The long-standing disgrace attached to our Government on account of the mean contributions to science hitherto afforded, notwithstanding its thirty years' possession of the highest mountains of the world, is now about to cease. With the sanction of the Supreme Government, the present enlightened head of the North-west Government seized the occasion of the presence in the province of Kumaon of Lieut. Strachey, engineers,—one of a brilliant family, and himself accomplished in all useful and interesting knowledge,—to place him at the head of a commission for investigating the "natural history" of the Himalya; and since the commencement of this year the labours of that gentleman and his friends have been incessant in every department that can be properly classed under the term.—Agra Messenger.

THE LATE CAPTAIN E. J. BROWN, BENGAL ENGINEERS.—In our obituary will be found an intimation of the demise, on the 9th instant, of Captain E. J. Brown, of the Bengal engineers, late first assistant to the commissioner in Scinde. The officer just named became principal assistant to Mr. Ross Bell, in 1839, and enjoyed the trust and favour of that gentleman till the time of his demise in August, 1841. He continued in employment under Colonel Outram, and became a great favourite with Sir Charles Napier, when the gallant general was placed in full political as well as military power, in October, 1842. After the conquest he was appointed secretary to the Scinde government, in which situation he continued under Mr. Pringle, after the retirement of the conqueror of the country. He was one of a body of amateurs who proceeded to Mooltan in August to be present at the siege. His constitution had suffered severely from a residence on the Indus of unparalleled duration for an Englishman, and was suffering from an alarming attack of sickness on his return to Kurrachee. He arrived at Bombay on the 17th ultimo, intending to proceed to Europe, on sick leave. He became gradually worse, and was at the dispatch of the last steamer unable to be moved. On Thursday he breathed his last. Captain Brown was a man of good talents and fair acquirements—of much energy and enterprize, and with that happy facility of securing the entire confidence of those by whom he was employed or trusted. Few constitutions, indeed, could have braved for ten years the climate of Scinde under circumstances similar to those in which he was exposed to it. Liver complaint was that which proved fatal to him.—Bombay Times, Nov. 11.

THE LATE LIEUT.-COLONEL WILCOX, ASTRONOMER AT LUCKNOW.—The following is communicated in a letter from Lucknow:—"I regret to inform you of the death of Lieut.-Col. Wilcox, 68th N. I., which took place at Cawnpore, on the 25th instant, at 11 p.m. His loss is here deeply deplored on account of his merits as a member of society, by many who know not the claims he has to their admiration as a man of science. I believe that from the time his destination to India became known, he began to qualify himself for the service of a government which has such splendid means at its disposal for the reward of talent. In England his attention was confined principally to mathematics, but on his arrival in India he devoted himself with ardour to the study of the native languages. This pursuit was attended with success, as he obtained a certificate of distinguished proficiency from the College of Fort William, and was always remarkable for his command of the Urdu form of the vernacular of Hindustan, in which language he has appeared both as an author and translator. Soon after passing the college he obtained an appointment in the Survey of Assam. His enterprise and research in that field extended the bounds of geographical science, and consequently attracted attention in Europe, as will be seen on reference to the article on Assam in the Cyclopædia of the Useful Knowledge Society. After this he was engaged for six months in measuring the base line near Calcutta of the Great Trigonometrical Survey—a department in which he ably seconded the Surveyor-general, as I have been informed by an officer engaged in it. On this point silence has been observed where there was most reason to expect acknowledgement. He was transferred from the Great Trigonometrical Survey to the service of the king of Oude, who was in want of a head for the observatory he was contemplating at Lucknow. Colonel Wilcox there went through the labour, appreciable by none but those who have performed it, of laying the foundations of and erecting the support of the instruments of a first-class observatory. The judgment with which he selected proper objects, and the diligence with which he superintended the business of observation, soon made the Lucknow Observatory known in Europe, and the Colonel's name is therefore frequently to be found in the transactions of the Royal Astronomical Society. Nor was he less zealous in the important labour of reducing his observations. Notwithstanding the establishment was numerically too weak for the purpose, he, by the zeal with which his example inspired them, was enabled completely to reduce the observations of three years, and was proceeding with the remainder. The King of Oude liberally devoted, in 1846, a sufficient sum for printing them, and they are likely to appear as soon as they are carried through the press, being already prepared for it to the extent mentioned. The observations were almost entirely meridional, the exceptions being Jupiter's satellites, which were observed with the equatorial. None but an astronomer can tell the difference between observing and the far greater and more important and less interesting labour of reducing the results. There is no doubt of his application having shortened his days. But the observations when printed will preserve his name, when those amongst whom he lived and was beloved have like him gone to their rest; when, and when only, his private virtues will cease to be remembered."—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 1.

CAPT. PHAYRE.—The Maulmein journals speak with regret of the departure of Capt. Phayre, principal assistant to the commissioner. Addresses were presented to him, and a farewell dinner given to him by the public. No public officer, it is added, ever gained more completely the affection of all with whom he might be connected than Capt. Phayre.

THE EARL OF DALHOUSIE arrived at Buxar on the morning of November 3, and the Countess reached Allahabad on the 5th.

COMMISSIONER OF KUMAON.—The successor to Mr. G. T. Lushington, civil and political commissioner of Kumaon, whose sudden death so lately took place at Nynee Tal, is not yet positively known; but it is thought that Mr. J. H. Batten, senior assistant under the deceased officer, is the most likely person to obtain the vacant appointment.—Agra Messenger, Nov. 4.

IMPORTATION OF FOREIGN SUGAR INTO THE TENASSERIM PROVINCES.

Fort William, Home Department, Separate—Revenue, Nov. 4th, 1848. Notification.—It having been represented to the Government of India that sugar from Singapore and Malacca has hitherto, in contravention of the law, been imported into the Tenasserim Provinces: and further, that the prevention of such importation would be likely to check the increasing rice cultivation and trade of the Tenasserim Provinces, without any present benefit to sugar-growers in those provinces, the honourable the President of the Council of India in Council has resolved to remove the existing prohibition against the importation into the Tenasserim Provinces to foreign sugar, rum, and rum shrub, or sugar, rum, and rum shrub, the produce of any British territory into which foreign sugar, rum, and rum shrub can be legally imported; and it is hereby declared that the resolutions of the 18th July, 1846, making such importation illegal are rescinded accordingly.

COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

The course of business has been a good deal interrupted since the date of our last report, by the intervention of occasional holidays, and latterly by the expected arrival of the 24th September mail, which was anxiously looked for as bearing important and decisive intelligence of the fate of the harvest. The Bombay Express, with the desired news, came to hand yesterday morning, and all fears respecting the harvest are now happily at rest.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE EXPRESS, with the London Mail of Oct. 7, arrived at Madras on the morning of Nov. 11.

THE Athenæum of Nov. 4 contains the following announcement:—"We are very much concerned to hear that a severe accident has occurred to Mr. J. B. Norton, of the Madras bar, by a fall from his horse, at the Sheveroy Hills, whilst travelling to the Neilgherries. By the aid of prompt medical treatment, his numerous friends will, however, be glad to hear that the consequences do not wear a serious aspect."

SECUNDERABAD, October 16.—"On Saturday afternoon a little surprise was created by an unusual stir at the arsenal, and on inquiry I was informed that some refractory rajah had set at nought the Nizam's authority, and disregarded the proffered mediation of the British resident; consequently, Brigadier James was requested to use his persuasive power, and had just issued an order for the equipment of a detachment as follows:—two companies of H.M.'s 84th regt., the 17th N.I., one division of 18-pounder breaching guns, one division of 24-pound howitzers, one 9-pound field piece; this little force marched this morning under the command of Colonel Blundel, and is to be joined by a ruasallah of the Nizam's cavalry. It is supposed that Gilburgah is the object in view; this place is very strong, and was built under the supervision of a French engineer. The ulterior operation of this detachment must entirely depend on circumstances. It is well found in stores, &c., and is considered fully equal to all that may be required of it."—Athenæum, October 24.

LETTERS FROM HYDERABAD state that the resident left for Goolburga on the 24th October. The fort surrendered at the first summons. Another small disturbance had also taken place at a village to the south, called Koloor.

CANNANORE, October 18.—H.M.'s 94th regiment was inspected by Major-General Lovell, K.H., in review order, on the evening of the 12th instant; and it is stated that this was done consequent upon private instructions from Madras, and the Major-General has reported the corps fit for service. The on dit is, that there is every probability of a wing of this fine, gallant regiment being sent either to Belgium or Bombay, for garrison duty. Surgeon Birch, M.D., of the 12th regt. N.I., has been appointed to officiate as superintending surgeon in Malabar and Canara, in the room of Dr. Williams, proceeding to Europe on furlough. Surgeon Cannan, of the 43rd N.I., has been appointed acting garrison surgeon and deputy medical storekeeper; and Assistant-surgeon C. B. Craske, of the superintending surgeon's department, to the medical charge of the 12th N.I., during such period as Dr. Birch may be acting in the higher appointment. Dr. St. John, inspector-general of hospitals, arrived here on the 10th instant, and after inspecting the invalids' hospital and barracks, &c., of H.M.'s 94th regiment, left en route to Bangalore on the 14th instant. Arrivals.—Capt. Maunsell and Lieut. H. J. Wahab, of H.M.'s 94th regt., from Bangalore.

THE 34TH N.I. embarked on the 23rd October.

CLARIFYING SUGAR.—We understand that some experiments have lately been made here by Professor Key, with a view to improving the method of clarifying sugar. His experiments on a small scale have been very successful, and arrangements are being made for testing the process on a larger scale. We believe a patent has been taken out in England for a similar discovery, the operation of which is thus likely to be anticipated in this country.—Athenæum.

MANUFACTURE OF POTTERY AT CHENGLEPUT.—The following account of Dr. Hunter's progress in the manufacture of pottery at Chengleput we take from the Athenæum of Oct. 21:—

"I have got a famous potter from the 2nd E.L.I. to assist me; he has worked many years at glazing and fine work—and says he thinks we can supply the Indian market with better wares than are sent out to India. He is quite astonished at the beauty of some of our materials and at the variety that I have collected; we have more and purer substances to work with than in Europe; he is a right good workman, and bears an excellent character from the major. He has just come in proper time, when I had a lot of materials prepared and our large glazing furnace nearly completed. Every week adds to the store of information that I am collecting, on the really valuable resources that lie neglected in India. I have just got a beautiful specimen of manganese ore, and another of enamel white felspar sent me; the latter I expect to turn to good account. I have got in a bandy load of it; I shall soon require assistance if business accumulates so much. I keep two writers at work, and the pottery gives employment to 96 or 97 besides myself; 20 of these are prisoners allowed by government. I hope to get up good glazed wares in a month or six weeks. I was working in the dark and wasting time and money before."

THE 30TH N.I. were to leave Vizianagram for Cuttack on the 20th October.

THE 52ND N.I. left Palaveram for Vellore on the 28th October.

THE SOLDIERS OF H. M.'s 84TH, who were concerned in the recent disturbances at Secunderabad, have been tried by court martial, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment; the Romish priests who were the instigators of the outrage have been ordered to leave the cantonment.

ASSISTANT-SURGEON DAUBENY has received permission to return to Europe.

SLAVE ELECTORS.—The Madras papers state that, in the French settlements, all the agricultural labourers have been made electors, a title which makes free de jure; but of this change in their social condition they remain perfectly ignorant, as their Meersadars and the authorities have been very careful not to explain it to them. They continue to be treated as slaves, and should any one of them attempt to emigrate, the authorities would not hesitate to have him apprehended and delivered back to his master. Nevertheless, when elections do take place, those very slaves will be sent as freemen to the electoral bureau, there to deliver, as their own, written suffrages prepared by their masters. Thus it is that the French authorities in India, while apparently conforming to the intentions of the home Government, are covertly defeating them.

A WRESTLING MATCH took place at Trichinopoly, in October last, between James Cameron, a private of the 2nd E. L. I., and Sheikh Hoossain, a sepoy of the 45th N.I. The match originated in a general challenge given to any man of the 2nd E.L.I. by Sheikh Hoossain, who had long enjoyed a reputation in his own regiment and with the natives at the various stations where it had been quartered, as an accomplished wrestler, he having come off the victor in thirteen regular matches with first-rate natives, and never having been thrown. His great personal strength and activity had been frequently witnessed and tested by several officers of the gallant 45th, but their great reliance was on his extreme skill in the native style of wrestling, which more resembles the French style than the English or Irish system. The only difficulty on the part of the European backers was to select a man from the interminable succession of brawny John Bulls and Pats, who eagerly offered "to wrestle any black man in Trichinopoly," who was best up to the Lancashire rough and tumble, which most nearly approaches to the native or "tiger fashion" of wrestling. A champion was soon found, however, in the person of a handsome young Highlander, James Cameron by name, whose strength, activity, and caution were miserably thrown away, and the ease with which Sheikh Hoossain, without a chance of displaying the scientific "hikmuts," of which we had heard so much, was three times in about two minutes "heavily grassed," astonished even the backers of the Highlander.

UNGOOL.—The Government of India have issued orders in reference to the ex-Rajah of Ungool, who last year caused our troops in Cuttack so much trouble. The ex-Rajah, an old cripple, is to be a state prisoner for life, and confined at Hazaree Baugh, at which place the Ameers of Scinde are located. His country is to be resumed by Government, and his eldest son to be pensioned and not allowed to reside nearer his old home than Cuttack. This will be a valuable acquisition to Government, for we shall thus have a district of our own, and a very productive one too, in a central position close to Boad and Duspollah.—U. S. Gaz., Oct. 17.

BOMBAY.

THE NAGPORE CONVERSION CASE.

Almost four years ago, a branch mission was established at Nagpore, under the auspices of the Free Church of Scotland. This is said to have been done "with the concurrence and support of Christian men on the spot (all British functionaries), and without any demur or prohibition on the part of the native government." Two ordained missionaries, Messrs. Hislop and Hunter, were sent out to take charge of the mission. These took up their abode within the limits of the British residency. In accordance with the system pursued by the Scottish missionaries, the education of the young was to constitute a principal part of the operations to be carried on at Nagpore. In furtherance of this object, a school was opened in May, 1846, in the city of Nagpore, where "instruction was openly given in Christianity, as well as in the ordinary branches of a secular education." This was accomplished without any let or hindrance, or any expression of disapprobation, direct or indirect, on the part of the native authorities of Nagpore. From about a month after its commencement, the school was attended by a Brahman boy, Baba Pandurang, now upwards of fourteen years of age. Being of a quick turn of mind, he made remarkably rapid progress in the different branches of learning. The usual and almost inevitable consequence followed. He began to doubt the truth of Hinduism, and to express himself favourably of the Christian Scriptures. When in this state of mind, he was withdrawn by his father from the school in June last, in consequence of the admission into it of two boys of low caste. Smarting, however, under the tedium and ennui of idleness, and thirsting for fresh draughts of the knowledge which had already regaled his inquisitive spirit, he considered himself justified in disregarding his father's superstitious and intolerant scruples, and on the 17th July returned to the school. After going home on the evening of that day, his father evinced his displeasure by summarily casting him out of the house without food or shelter. The youth fled to the bungalow of the missionaries, within the ceded British ground of the residency, for protection; but so anxious were the missionaries to avoid anything like precipitancy, that, in supplying the young refugee with the solicited food and shelter, they took care to grant both "in a manner consistent with the rules of his Brahmanical caste;" in other words, without allowing him to break his caste. On the following day, after attending school, he was met by his father and persuaded to return home, on the distinct understanding that he should be kindly treated, and freely allowed to go to school as before. In direct violation, however, of this solemn assurance, instead of permitting him to return to school next day, the father bound him hand and foot, and severely beat him with a bamboo, while the mother, as the boy asserts, threatened him with poison if he did not forego his desire for further instruction. On the succeeding day he visited the missionaries, in the company of his father, and to them related all the particulars of the cruel treatment he had experienced, in his father's presence; and followed up the statement by declaring it to be "his wish to profess the Christian religion, and not to return to live in heathenism with his father." The missionaries,—considering that they were living on British soil and under British laws, and believing the youth was possessed of discretion sufficient to be entitled, by recent decisions in British-Indian Courts, to freedom on British territory from his twofold bondage, physical and religious,—felt themselves bound to protect the persecuted suppliant; in other words, they would not allow the father to drag the youth, by main force, out of their house to the scene of his former cruel treatment.

This occurred on the 20th July; thereupon the father complained to the Rajah of Nagpore, who lost no time in appealing to Capt. Ramsay, the acting British Resident. On the following day, Capt. Ramsay sent an official letter to the Rev. Mr. Hislop, requesting that the youth should be delivered up to his parents, since any "dispute or difference which might exist between the boy and his parents must be settled by the local government, of which they were all subjects." Mr. Hislop promptly forwarded to the Resident a brief statement of the merits of the case, in which he said: "I am unwilling to give the boy up until you read this my reply, when, if your answer be to the same purport as the note now received, I shall of course consider myself freed from all responsibility in the matter, and at once surrender him, according to your directions." Next day (22nd), Capt. Ramsay wrote to say he was "still of opinion that it was his duty to request that Mr. Hislop would deliver up the boy to his parents, it being the wish of the Durbar, whose authority to govern its own subjects by its own laws we fully recognize;" that "it was unreasonable to expect that the Durbar would waive its right to claim the child, because he appeared inclined to become a convert to our religion, and that he did not feel justified on such grounds in interposing his official authority, by refusing the restoration of the boy, who, as a subject of the Nagpore state, was only amenable to the local, not to British law;" that he "sincerely regretted that he should have been called upon to interfere in this matter at all, but, having been appealed to by the Maharaja, he could not decline acceding to his request, or dispute his authority over his own subjects in this particular case, when in others the person claimed would at once be given up to the jurisdiction of his own government;" but that he "would move the Durbar to afford every protection to the boy, and prevent his being ill-used by his parents," beyond which he "could not interfere with him:" on receipt of this communication Mr. Hislop instantly delivered up the youth.

On the same day, Mr. Hislop addressed the Resident, respectfully begging to ask whether, as the subject involved many important questions, he (the Resident) would "allow him to submit the matter in the most regular way, for the decision of the Supreme Government at Calcutta." Capt. Ramsay, in reply, stated that it was his "intention to forward a copy of their correspondence for the information and decision of the Supreme Government." On receipt of this, Mr. Hislop once more wrote to suggest whether, since the correspondence did not embrace all the particulars which he should like to submit to the notice of the Supreme Government, the most satisfactory method would be for him to draw up a memorial, containing all that occurred to him, which the Resident could, if he thought proper, forward with remarks. To this Capt. Ramsay replied, that it was not his intention to enter into any further correspondence with him on the subject, "but that he was of course at liberty to address any memorial he pleased to the British Government."

A memorial was accordingly prepared, dated the 25th July last, and duly transmitted to the Governor-General of India in Council. On the 14th August, Capt. Ramsay wrote to Mr. Hislop as follows: "In reply to my communication to the Secretary in the Foreign Department, forwarding a copy of our correspondence regarding the boy Pandurang, who lately placed himself under your tuition, I have been directed to inform you that your memorial of the 25th ult. has been received, and that the Governor-General in Council has been pleased to approve of my conduct in this matter."

On the 23rd August, the Rev. Mr. Hunter addressed Capt. Ramsay, begging to draw his attention to the present condition of the boy Baba Pandurang, who, in utter disregard of the Resident's advice, was put in close confinement by the Nagpore Government; respectfully requesting him to use his legitimate influence with the Durbar "to set the youth at liberty, and afford protection to his religion and person;" and expressly adding that, in the event of the boy's release, he would not be again detained from his parents "while he continued to be regarded as a minor by the laws of Mahratta states." On which the Resident returned the following brief reply: "I have no objection to mention to the Durbar that you have assured me that you will not again detain the boy Pandurang from his parents. Beyond this I will not interfere. I have begged that the boy may be protected, and there the matter will end as far as I am concerned."—Friend of India, Oct. 12.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL with letters from London to Oct. 7, arrived at Bombay on the 5th Nov.

THE REV. M^r. EVEREST, chaplain of Neemuch, is about to proceed to Bombay, to make arrangements for his retirement from the service.

RUN UPON THE BANK OF BOMBAY.—There has been a most extraordinary run upon the Bank of Bombay, in consequence of the recent discovery of some forged notes in circulation in the Bazar. The total amount of forgeries is only Rs. 8,000; notes representing Rs. 6,000 are in possession of the officers of the bank. In the course of two or three days there has been a "run" to the large extent of twenty-five lacs of rupees, or thereabouts. The "run" is over, and the bank was never in a stronger position.

M^r. N. OLIVER has been appointed to act as master-assistant, till further orders.

M^r. S. S. DICKINSON, barrister-at-law, is to be sheriff of Bombay for the ensuing year. This we believe will be the third time that gentleman has enjoyed the honour of shrievalty.

THE LAUNCH of the new line-of-battle ship Meance, of eighty guns, took place on the 11th of November.

MAJOR C. H. DELAMAIN, C. B., 3rd LIGHT CAVALRY, has been appointed to the post of Town-major of Bombay, during the period Captain French may be in charge of the Baroda Residency.

THE OVERLAND MAIL.—We mentioned in our last that the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company had made an offer to Government to convey the mails direct from Southampton to Bombay, without any breach, at less cost by 50,000*l.* a year than that which they presently occasion H. M.'s Government and the East-India Company; and we now observe that a steamer, called the Bombay, of 450 horse-power, and 1,300 tons,—the size of the Acbar—has just been launched, and that another is in process of construction, both intended for the Bombay and Suez line. Arrangements therefore are in a state of considerable advancement for an alteration, which will be of the utmost advantage to the community, and effect a very large saving to Government. A twelvemonth since, when the publication of Mr. Hume's tables let us into the enormous expenses of our Bombay naval establishment, and the trials before the Supreme Court gave us some notion of the mismanagement which might pass undetected under it, we expressed our conviction that the packet service would, in all likelihood, at no distant date, be transferred from the Indian navy altogether; and our anticipations seem likely to be realised more speedily than it was then thought by the majority of our brethren they were likely to have been.—Bombay Times.

THE COURT OF DIRECTORS have declined to allow an extra year in council to the Honourable Mr. Reid. His time expires in February, when Mr. Blane comes into council.

THE RIGHT REVEREND THE LORD BISHOP OF BOMBAY has returned to the presidency from his visitation tour.

THE HEAD QUARTERS WING OF THE 22ND N. I., under command of Capt. J. D. Leckie, reached the presidency on Wednesday the 1st inst., from Baroda the 18th ultimo. The wing was accompanied by but five officers besides the commander; viz. Lieutenants W. J. Briggs and A. J. Hessman; Ensigns K. H. Shortt and P. Hodgson; and Assistant Surgeon H. Johnston, M.D.

BELGAUM, 8th Nov.—Owing to the small number of native troops here for duty, I am informed that the 17th regiment N.I. is to be relieved from Dharwar by the 16th M. N.I. at present at Bangalore, and that the 15th regt. M.N.I. is to be stationed at Kulladghee: in short, the Madras troops are edging pretty close on this division, and may in time get what they have long desired—the southern Mahratta country to themselves, thereby depriving us ducks of the only healthy full battalions within easy reach of Bombay. A rumour is current that the artillery (European) stationed at Kolapore will move on to Vizadroog, and there embark for Kurrachee should more troops of this army be required at Mooltan. Captain Stock, the deputy-adjutant general, has gone away on a short leave of absence, Lieutenant Hatch, of the artillery, performing his duties. Captain Barr, A.D.C. to the major-general, acts for Major Adams, the deputy-quarter-master-general. Captain McDougal, 13th regiment, has been appointed deputy judge-advocate-general, vice Captain Rawlinson.

THE JUBILEE OF THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY commenced on the 1st November. On the morning of that day, the Rev. Mr. Isenberg preached in the cathedral, when the service was performed in the Mahratta language, and a number of natives were present. We regret to have to record the fact, that after the service was over and the congregation almost dispersed, a convert youth, of Banian parents, was attacked by certain members of his caste, and maltreated by them. Crowds of natives stood by, and saw the unequal combat, but did not interfere to prevent it; and the young man might have become literally a martyr to his faith, had it not been for the prompt interference of the Rev. Mr. Pigott, who caused his rescue. We believe the matter was afterwards made the subject of a complaint before Mr. Rivett.—Bombay Courier.

COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

Wednesday afternoon, 5 o'clock, Nov. 15, 1848.—Our market for Imports has been very steady during the past fortnight, but as stocks are small, and supplies continue on a moderate scale, holders have been induced to display considerable firmness, so that, from these causes, the amount of business transacted is less than usual at this period of the year. Several kinds of manufactured goods have, from their scarcity, already experienced considerable advance, and in the absence of supplies, further rise is looked for. One circumstance alone exists to cause inquietude, and that is an absurd panic that has prevailed for some days in the bazaar, owing to the discovery that forged notes of the Bank of Bombay have been in circulation. The forgeries are only to a very limited amount, but the natives in their fears have magnified the evil. The consequence has been a run on the bank for several days, and a large amount of notes has been taken in. It is feared by some, that the money thus withdrawn from the bank will be hoarded by the natives, and that a tightness in the money market will consequently ensue, to the detriment of business generally; but we are inclined to think more favourably, and are of opinion the native merchants will soon see how groundless have been their fears, and that, consequently, the specie thus withdrawn will speedily return into general circulation. Some inconvenience will undoubtedly be caused, for now that almost the whole of the notes in circulation here have been taken in, the bank has raised its rates of discount two per cent. and is adopting other stringent measures, but which, we hope, will only be of temporary necessity.—While writing, we are glad to learn that the native merchants begin already to see how needlessly they have been alarmed, and are again bringing their specie in considerable quantities to be exchanged for notes.

CEYLON.

At the opening of the Session of the Legislative Council, 2nd October, Lord Torrington delivered a speech, in which are the following passages:—

"You are already aware that in certain portions of the Kandyan districts, the evil designs of ambitious individuals taking advantage of the casual as well as traditional influence of their position over an ignorant population, have induced them to array themselves in open hostility to the Government; actual encounters have taken place with her Majesty's forces, which have terminated, as might be expected, in the entire defeat and dispersion of the insurgents, and must have convinced them of the utter hopelessness of armed resistance to her Majesty's authority. It is satisfactory to me to be able to announce to you, that the individual, who on this occasion was set up as the pretended king, has now been captured, and that not only have many of his partisans and followers been already brought to punishment, but important disclosures have been made which will, I hope, suffice completely to establish the guilt of the originators of the late conspiracy.

"At a period of general commercial difficulty throughout the world, Ceylon could scarcely escape the effects of an universal crisis. But it is gratifying to me to be able to state to you, that the net revenue of the year ending 31st December, 1847, exceeded that of 1846 by the sum of about 24,000l., which was in a great measure due to an increase in the receipts from customs. On the other hand, the comparative expenditure for the same period was in reality somewhat less in 1847 than in the previous year. But notwithstanding the improved state of our finances for the past year, as compared with that of 1846, the fact cannot be withheld from you, that the revenue of the year 1847 fell short of the expenditure within the same period by the sum of about 58,000l., although every effort has been made since my assumption of the government to restrict the expenditure within the narrowest possible limits. The surplus revenue accumulated in more prosperous periods has at length become exhausted."

The state and prospects of the country are depicted in the papers in very unfavourable colours. The supply of labour in the colony had proved altogether inadequate for the wants of the planters. The Singhalese themselves refuse to work on any terms. From the favourable nature of the season in southern India tempting the natives to extend cultivation, and from the fact that through financial difficulties many planters had been compelled to permit their pay bills to fall many months into arrear, fewer coolies had been introduced this season than usual. The state of the weather was such that the labourers had only been able to work one day in three weeks, and the rain which had occasioned these interruptions had been fatal to the berry. Where coffee had been gathered it could not be dried, and the scanty returns thus preparing for the market must be sold at prices which would have been considered ruinously low even had crops been abundant. From 60,000 to 90,000 cwt. less than usual was likely this season to be brought to market, the diminution in value amounting to not less than 150,000l. The result anticipated is the total abandonment of the estates, which will not, it is said, be able to meet their own expenses.

The failure of the firm of H. Layard and Co. is announced. This event has been occasioned by their bill transactions with London houses. The affairs of the firm are to be wound up under inspection.

The Braganza, with the London Mail of Aug. 24, reached Hong Kong, Oct. 22.

MR. DAVIS, the United States Commissioner, had an interview with Seu, the Chinese commissioner. Seu withdraws his offensive letter to Mr. Davis, written in consequence of the latter gentleman having been unable to keep a former appointment.

The Governor of Macao has taken possession of the barrier wall which for centuries has crossed the isthmus connecting the point upon which the city is built with the island, and forming a boundary which no European was permitted to pass. His Excellency wrote to the Chinese authorities, requesting that the gateway be widened in order that carriages could pass into the country in terms of the treaty of Nankin. Of this application no notice was taken, and after waiting a reasonable time, Senhor Amaral quietly took possession, the Chinese guard having been for some time withdrawn.

NEPAUL.

A correspondent in Tirhoot writes as follows:—"Perhaps, neither our Government nor Major Thoresby, the resident at Katmandhoo, is aware that orders have been sent by Jung Bahadoor to the Soobah at Curorbunnah in the Nepaul Terai, to collect materials for the erection of a 'chownee' for a force of 12,000 men, with field-pieces, &c., which are to be marched from Katmandhoo in the cold weather. My informant, a most respectable and intelligent man, declares that he has just returned from the spot, Curorbunnah, where he saw the plans of the various buildings, and that whilst there, he heard that Jung Bahadoor was to visit the place about the beginning of December. The above-named place is within a few miles of Mullie in this district, and quite close to the boundary. The cause assigned for the proceeding is, the reported intention of our Government to make Segowlee, the head-quarters of the Dinapore division; in which case, the Nepaul Durbar think it necessary to have a force on their side to watch us. I do not believe there is the slightest truth in the report regarding our Government's intention; yet it is generally believed by the natives around this quarter, and indeed has gained credence even at Benares, whence some friends of mine received the news some time ago."—Bengal Hurkaru, Oct. 25.

NETHERLANDS INDIA.

By a resolution of the Governor-General of Netherlands India, the harbours of Menado and Kema, in the island of Celebes, are to be free harbours from 1st January, 1849. Nothing is yet heard of a fresh expedition against Bali. Batavia was visited by a severe shock of an earthquake on the night of the 2nd September. The colonies were in a healthy condition.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The London Gazette of December 8 contains a despatch from Sir H. Smith, giving very full details of the action at Bloem Plaats, on the 29th August. They do not differ from those already given in p. 663. Sir Harry does ample justice to the bravery of the Boers. He says: "A more rapid, fierce, and well-directed fire than that kept up by the rebels I have never seen maintained, and for some time they manfully held their ground, when a rush of the Rifle Brigade upon their left flank, of the 45th upon their left centre, and of the 91st, whom I now brought into action, upon their right centre, carried every thing before it, and gallantly dislodged the rebels. Meanwhile a fierce and determined conflict was going on between the Cape Mounted Rifles and the right of the rebels, who descended the hills far in their direction for the double purpose of turning my left flank and of insulating our baggage and commissariat stores, which were collected on the plain below. I have seldom seen a sharper skirmish, the rebels advancing most rapidly and successfully into the plain until their impetuosity exposed their left to the fire of one of the guns, by which they were checked, and the gallant Hottentots, nobly headed by their officers, then drove them back pell-mell into the hills."

LITERARY & SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

Mr. J. W. Laidlay, secretary of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, has made another and a very remarkable identification of a name found in the Itinerary of the Chinese pilgrim Fā-hēn, that of the Sattapanni cave, the scene of the "first convocation on religion," an ample account of which may be found in Mr. Turnour's extracts from the Pali Buddhistical Annals (J. A. S. vol. VI. p. 510), and in the third chapter of the Mahawanso. It is there narrated that the convocation in question was held in the 8th year of the reign of Ajātasatru, six months after the death of Buddha, in a magnificent hall in front of the Sattapanni cave, in the Webharo mountain, one of the hills that surround the ancient city of Rajagriha Fā-hēn, in his account of that city, mentions the scene of the first convocation, and the "grot of Pin pho lo," or "Pi pho lo," lying 300 paces to the west of the pass or valley that leads from the old to the new Rajagriha,—a site easily recognized from the marked and unchanging features of the locality. None of the learned French commentators on Fā-hēn has attempted any restoration of Pi pho lo; but, in connection with the preceding tradition, it is obviously the Chinese transcript of the Pali Webharo, or of its Sanscrit equivalent. Now, if we turn to Capt. Kittoe's interesting paper in the Journal for September, 1847, we shall find in the Sketch Map, at the foot of Plate XLII., the Sone Bundar cave set down in the Baibhar hill in the precise position indicated by Fā-hēn. The cave itself is thus described by Capt. Kittoe: "To the left or west side of the pass is a chamber called Sone Bundar, of precisely the same shape as those of Burabur. There are sockets to admit of timber roofing on the exterior of the cave, and there have been buildings extending to some distance in front: it would be interesting to clear the rubbish here. There are several short inscriptions, and some of the shell shape; one has some resemblance to Chinese; but the cave has been sadly used by a zemindar, who tried to blow it up many years ago, hoping to find hidden treasure, and a large piece of rock has been broken away at the very spot where we should have expected to find an inscription." There is scarce room to doubt that this is the very site of the hall of the first convocation; "at the entrance to the Sattapanni cave on the side of the Webharo mountain," and the precise spot where, as Fā-hēn assures us, "Fūh, after meals, habitually resorted to meditate."

In the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal for July, is a paper by Captain A. Cunningham, containing a detailed "Verification" of the Itinerary of Heuen-tsang through Afghanistan and India, which supplies some extraordinary identifications of places (including those of MM. Landresse and Lassen), many of which afford connecting links between the Sanscrit and Greek names of places, which it is extraordinary that we should obtain through such a language as the Chinese, and from a native of China. The following are a very few instances:—

The town of Pu-se-ko-la-fa-te, near a large stream, corresponds with the Sanscrit Pushkalavati, in Pārit, Pukhalavati, which is the original of the Greek Πευκελαωτις, and the position of the place, between the Cabul river and the Indus, shows that it is the very place which Alexander passed through when he invaded India. It answers to the modern Hashtnagar, or Hastinagara, which, Capt. Cunningham observes, perhaps derives its name from "Astes" or "Hasti," the chief of Peuke-laotis, in the time of Alexander. Some thirty or forty miles distant was U-to-ke-han-sha, or Uttak, on the Indus, with the city of Pho-lo-thu-lo, or Parthawara, or Bithor.

Tan-sha-she-lo, "the boundary of India towards the north, and a dependency of Kashmir," is the Sanscrit Takshasila, the Pali Takkasila, and the Greek Taxila. It is considered by Capt. C. as undoubtedly the present Manikyāla, which is surrounded by ruins, and one of the neighbouring villages is still called Takkāla. Fā-hēn, the earlier Chinese traveller, mentions a building at this place where Buddha is said to have made an "offering of his body" to a hungry tiger; and Heuen-tsang attributes its erection to Keu-lang-nu (Kuloka), the son of Asoka. Now the tope at Manikyāla, opened by General Ventura, contained a small silver disc, bearing a short inscription of two lines in ancient Pali, the upper line reading "of the abandoned body:" so that here are facts to show that the great tope was built by Kuloka, son of the great Asoka, upon a spot consecrated by a tradition of Buddha.

Fa-la-pe, which is clearly identified with Balabhi, is described as a place where much merchandise was brought from distant countries. Asoka built stupas there. The king was a kshatriya, of the race of Silāditya, of Malwa. The king of Kanoj, named Dhruvabhata, was also of that race. When Heuen-tsang was at Kanoj, the king was a Vaisya, named Kalyānos-phutana, showing that a change of dynasty had taken place whilst he was travelling from Kanoj to Balabhi.

The bearing and distance of Pe-to-she-lo point exactly to the ruins of Nasepur and Nerunkot, close to the present Haidarabad, the capital of Scinde, and is easily identified with the Patala of the Greeks. The Chinese syllables represent the Sanscrit Patala, 'the extensive rock,' a name of the same import as Patala. The "rocky" Nerunkot even now stands at the real head of the Delta, at the point of divergence of the Guni river, which must have been the eastern branch down which Alexander sailed.

At a meeting of the Bombay Branch Royal Asiatic Society, 12th October, a paper was read, "On Marathi works composed by the Portuguese," by the Rev. M. Mitchell. In this paper, the author chiefly dwells on the character and importance, in a critical and historical point of view, of a voluminous work, composed in Marathi verse, by Padre F. Vas de Guimaraens, which was originally published in Lisbon in 1659, and is still extensively circulated among the Portuguese in this part of India. This remarkable poem contains many of the more important facts recorded in the Gospels, with a large admixture of the traditions of the Roman Catholic Church: it extends to about 16,000 lines. Besides frequent allusions, which throw important light on the style of thought and manners prevalent 260 years ago among the Portuguese and Hindoos in this quarter of India, this work furnishes very material aid towards a critical solution of the interesting problem of the origin of those later Maratha legends, which possess a strong resemblance to facts recorded in the Christian Scriptures. The chief legendary histories current among the Maratha people have been composed since the publication of this Christian "Purana" (for so it is termed in the preface to the work); and the probability becomes very strong that the Maratha legends have been powerfully affected by a Christian element. Mr. Mitchell does not consider the literary merits of the work to be very high; and, although metrical throughout, it does not aim at that highly poetical style which characterizes the works, composed with a similar aim, by Beechi and other Romish ecclesiastics in Southern India.

"I cannot but remark," says the Rev. Mr. Fisk, in the interesting narrative of his travels in the East, "how strikingly influential on national character the fatalism of the Koran has been. 'Allah is great; Allah is good; Allah has unalterably fixed every event and circumstance in which his creatures are concerned; from his predestination there is no appeal; the chain of fate binds the universe.' It presents a melancholy picture of a right principle wrought out in error; it is an unrevealed predestination. But however erroneous, it does effectually influence the followers of the false prophet, and the charge they bring against the professors of the true faith is, that their avowed principles have little bearing upon their conduct. The Turks never commit suicide, under distressing affliction or reverses of fortune; such a thing is never heard of; they do not murmur under the heaviest burthens of existence. An intelligent gentleman, long resident in Constantinople, mentioned to me a remarkable instance of this. A pasha, with whom he had lived on terms of intimacy, who was the favourite of the Sultan and possessed an immense revenue, under one of those reverses so commonly connected with Turkish despotism, was disgraced and despoiled of every piastre. A few days after his misfortune, instead of flinging himself into the Bosphorus, or blowing out his brains, as many a nominal Christian, under similar circumstances, would have done, he was seen, with an unperturbed countenance, selling lemons at the corners of the bazars. To the inquiry whether he did not feel keenly the reverse of fortune, he replied, 'Not at all; Allah is great; Allah is good; he gave me all I possessed, and he has taken it again; he had a perfect right to do so; I am content.' This is no singular instance, I was assured, of the power of this principle, in which the Turkish mind is disciplined."

The ancient inscription upon a stone at Singapore, at the point of the river (which has been recently demolished by explosion, because "it was in the way of some projected bungalow"), which the late Mr. Prinsep thought was in Pali, is ascertained by Mr. Laidlay to be in the Kawi, or ancient sacred character of the Javanese. The breaking of the stone into fragments will probably prevent the inscription from being ever read. The race of Goths is not yet extinct.

Menu (c. iv. 138) gives the following rule of conversation for a Brahman: "Let him say what is true, but let him say what is pleasing; let him speak no disagreeable truth, nor let him speak agreeable falsehood."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We can answer "W. K.'s" inquiry only by stating that Mr. Thoroton's is the most complete work upon the subject, and that Mr. Anber's history, and the histories contained in the Family Library, and Edinburgh Cabinet Cyclopædia, are concise compendia.

The Title and Index for the volume of Allen's India Mail now completed will be ready for delivery with the next number.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

WEDNESDAY, December 20, 1848.

THERE is so much harmony of opinion between the Home and the Indian journals upon the subject of the annexation of the Punjab, and the journal which is supposed to be the channel of public sentiment in England upon political questions has spoken in a tone so decided in favour of the measure, that we must presume the die is cast. It is true the Punjab is not yet ours,—but this is a trifle.

The grounds upon which the measure is recommended appear to be these—that it is convenient and practicable on our part to take possession of the country; that the people would be better off under our sway than under that of the Sikhs, and the bulk of them are desirous of the change; lastly, that the revenues, which the territory could be made to yield, would more than cover the expenses of its government in British hands. These are, however, reasons rather for the acceptance of the territory, if tendered to us as a gift, than for taking it from its rulers contrary to their desire, a justification of which act must be found in some proceedings on the part of the Sikh Government subsequent to the treaty of 1846; and it is somewhat extraordinary that the justification of the act—so material a link in the chain of the argument for annexation—has not been stated with the same clearness as the circumstances are set forth which show the convenience, the desirableness, and the facility of appropriation.

By the treaty of 1846, the Sikh Government ceded to us a certain portion of its territories, and we virtually recognised the Maharajah's title to the remainder. Upon the execution of the treaty, the British troops would have evacuated the Lahore territories, but, at the solicitation of the Maharajah, the British Government consented to leave a part of its army at Lahore, for the protection of the Maharajah and the capital during the re-organization of the Sikh army, according to the provisions of the treaty; but this force was not to be detained beyond the expiration of the year 1846. During that year, various disturbances occurred in different parts of the Punjab, and, amongst others, Moolraj, the Dewan of Mooltan, exhibited early symptoms of his refractory disposition; but, by the intervention of the British authorities at Lahore, he was brought to terms with the Durbar. Lall Singh, the wuzer, was, likewise, detected in intrigues hostile to the state and to the British alliance, and he was deposed, the administration being vested in a council of chiefs, by whom an unanimous request was addressed to the British Government, that our troops, which were about to evacuate Lahore, might remain, and that we would take the state under our protection during the minority of Dhuleep Singh. This request was complied with; a fresh agreement was entered into, by which a large body of our troops were stationed at Lahore, and the Council of Regency carried on the government under the superintendence of a British resident.

In the early part of the ensuing year (1847), certain British officers, including Lieutenant Edwards and Mr. Vans Agnew, were employed in different parts of the Lahore territories, to settle disturbances, collect revenues, and reduce the local administrations into something like order. These officers, though, no doubt, under the immediate control of the British resident at Lahore, could act in no other capacity than that of agents of the Lahore Government.

Towards the close of the year 1847, the Dewan of Mooltan became again restive and refractory. The stipulations he had agreed to were not observed on his part; on the other hand, he professed to believe that the Council of Regency meditated his removal, being determined (probably under the advice of the British resident) to get rid of dewans altogether, and collect the revenues under some other mode of settlement. Negotiations were entered into between the Council at Lahore and their powerful provincial minister, which it was supposed had been brought to a successful issue, when the visit to Mooltan of two commissioners, Mr. Vans Agnew and Lieut. Anderson,—British subjects, but Sikh officials,—charged with some office repugnant to the views of Moolraj, caused probably a premature explosion of a plot, to which several of the Sikh sirdars were privy, but which does not appear to have comprehended the whole, still less to have involved the government. The two British functionaries were murdered by the Mooltanis; the Dewan renounced his dependence upon the Lahore Government, and prepared for and ultimately commenced hostilities against the Durbar troops and against the British, as their auxiliaries. The Council of Regency at Lahore being deprived of their army, by the reductions required under the treaty and by the mutiny of various Sikh corps, are incapable of reducing their refractory servant, and this office is necessarily thrown upon the protecting power, who, under the circumstances of the case, may, perhaps, be authorized to take part in the quarrel against Moolraj on its own account.

In this state of things, supposing that Mooltan should fall to the British army, which should, moreover, succeed in suppressing the other revolts in the Lahore territories, upon what ground is it proposed to justify the taking possession of the whole of these territories, dethroning the ruler, and annexing the whole Punjab to the British empire in India? This is a question which we are anxious to have explicitly answered. Had the British forces evacuated Lahore at the time stipulated, these occurrences would not have justified our invasion of its territories, still less the appropriation of them; they would have been regarded as internal transactions, with which the British Government had nothing to do, unless they threatened to disturb the relations between the two states, as settled by the treaty of 1846. Has the subsequent agreement, by which we stipulated to "protect" the sovereign of Lahore during his minority, given us a right, on the appearance of a wide-spread disaffection to his authority, when exercised under British superintendence and control, to convert protection into possession?

The only ground which, in our opinion, can afford us a shadow of title for absorbing this vast territory, is the discovery therein of a spirit of disaffection and treachery pervading government and people, which would render the withdrawal of the British troops from the country, and the relaxation of the control now exercised over the government, the signal for a general insurrection, leading to a sanguinary war, and hazarding the safety of our empire in India. If such a state of things does exist, something like a justification may be extracted from it for an act so arbitrary, under every aspect, as that of seizing upon the entire territory of the Five Rivers, which, without some ground at least as strong as that, would be very like an act of spoliation.

EAST-INDIA COLLEGE, HAILEYBURY.

CLOSE OF THE TERM.

The second term of the year 1848 closed on Friday, the 8th inst., when a deputation from the Hon. the Court of Directors of the East-India Company visited the college for the purpose of receiving the report of the Principal upon the attainments and conduct of the students, and of distributing the medals and prizes awarded to those who had distinguished themselves in the various branches of Oriental, Classical, and European literature.

A special train left the Bishopsgate-station of the Eastern Counties Railway at a quarter past 10 o'clock, and arrived at Haileybury about half-past 11. The deputation was received by the principal, and afterwards repaired to the council-room, where the following report was presented to them:—

"The Principal has the greatest satisfaction in being able to lay before the Honourable the Finance and Home Committee an unusually favourable report of the proficiency and conduct of the students.

"All the fourteen students constituting the fourth term have been found duly qualified for leaving college; all but one have obtained honours; all but three the rank of highly distinguished.

"This statement, however, but imperfectly exhibits the merits of the fourth term. The competition amongst its members for prizes and other honourable distinctions has been most severe; in several departments it has been found necessary to award double prizes; but a large amount of merit has nevertheless been unavoidably left without the recompence which, in ordinary years, it would certainly have secured.

"Whilst the fourth term, more especially, deserves honourable mention, the other terms have contributed to the memorable character of the recent examination. Of sixty-seven students who have been under examination, only one has failed; and this one, though found deficient in Sanscrit, had done enough in the European departments to secure himself the rank of highly distinguished. Of the other sixty-six, no fewer than fifty have gained honours, and thirty-seven of these are returned as highly distinguished, whilst nineteen are prizemen.

"When fifty out of sixty-six students exceed what is prescribed, and numbers in a very large measure, the committee will judge that there must have been a most laudable attention to the studies of the place.

"The competition for the prize in English composition has been great, perhaps almost beyond precedent. No fewer than twenty-six essays, were sent in; and whilst many of these are of a very superior order, there is hardly one which does not reflect great credit on the industry and intelligence of the writer. When considerably more than a third of the whole college voluntarily add to their prescribed labours the writing such essays as these, a proof is given, which the committee can hardly fail to estimate highly, of no ordinary devotedness to literary pursuits.

"With regard particularly to the Oriental classes, the visitor remarks that the results of the examination may be considered as more than usually satisfactory. With the exception of Mr. Smyth, there are, indeed, no instances of extraordinary ability and acquirement; but their are several of highly creditable application and attainment. Each department of the senior term presents a student who has entitled himself to the distinction of a medal. The whole of the fourth term have the mark of great, or of good, proficiency in Sanscrit, with a fair proportion of similar distinctions in Persian and Hindustani. A like character applies to the second and third terms; and the first is one of peculiarly favourable promise. Several of the students have voluntarily extended the range of their oriental acquirements—one in each of the two extra languages, Arabic and Mahratta; and two in Hindi—all of whom have acquitted themselves with credit.

"After so favourable an account of the studies of the term, the committee will naturally anticipate a satisfactory statement as to the general conduct of the students. It would be difficult for the Principal to speak too highly of this. Not only has there not been the slightest approach to the interruption of good order, but, with very few exceptions, the students have conformed so cheerfully and systematically to the rules of the place, that there has been but little occasion for the more ordinary exercise of authority, and none whatsoever for the more severe.

Mr. White read his Prize Essay on the subject,—"In what manner do the Distinctions of Rank and the unequal Distribution of Property contribute to the well-being of Society?" The Essay was evidently listened to by the deputation and visitors with much attention, and received with well-merited applause.

Mr. Smyth read a passage from the preface to Richardson's Persian Dictionary, translated by himself into Persian.

Mr. Swinton read a passage from Abu'l Feda's Muhammadian History, translated by himself into Telooqoo.

Mr. Smyth then read a passage from Prinsep's History of India, translated by himself into Hindustani.

Mr. Dampier read a passage from Milton's Paradise Lost,—the speech of Satan, commencing, "Is this the region, this the soil, the clime,"—translated by himself into Sanscrit verse.

The translations, which were admirably read, elicited much applause.

The Chairman then delivered the prizes to the successful candidates, who were loudly applauded by their fellow-students.

Mr. Hooper read the following classification and rank of the students about to depart for India:—

The Chairman then addressed the assembled students to the following effect:—

"Gentlemen Students,—I need scarcely assure you, how much I have been gratified at the more than usual favourable Report of the Principal and Professors, which has been made to me and my colleagues, present on this occasion, as to your conduct during the Term that has just passed, both in and out of study. I should feel great difficulty to express myself in more impressive terms than the Principal himself has done, in a private communication that has been made to me, and which he has kindly permitted me to make you acquainted with; it is as follows:—"It seems generally agreed among the Professors, that the amount of competition has been greater than was ever remembered. Numbers have worked night and day, and though in many cases we shall give double prizes, we shall still be obliged to leave a large amount of merit without public acknowledgment. As to conduct, the Term has been spent with the quiet of a private house. The men, with scarcely an exception, have conducted themselves with most gentlemanly propriety, and with unusual attention to the rules of the place. Really, when I hear the reports of olden times, I look upon the college with wonder and gratitude. In such a body there will always be some less desirable than others, but I doubt whether you could anywhere find a set of students with less to blame, and more to commend, than has existed here for the last three months." (Applause.) And permit me, Sir, to express to you as Principal, and to the Dean and Professors, our warmest thanks and grateful acknowledgments for your ever zealous and well-directed exertions, which have been the means of securing the gratifying result we have this day witnessed. (Applause.) Those students who return to the college after the vacation will not, I feel confident, act otherwise than pursue the same meritorious conduct which has caused this eulogium from the Principal, and which is so peculiarly gratifying to the Court of Directors, and must be equally pleasing to your patrons, parents, and friends. (Hear, hear.) To you, gentlemen students, who are about shortly to proceed to your several destinations, it has been usual to address, from this chair, a few observations, attention to which, on your part, it is thought, may be serviceable to you. You have heard this advice from those who have preceded me, in more elegant and appropriate language than I feel myself capable of using; still there are a few points I beg to submit to you, earnestly hoping you will give them your attentive consideration. I venture to assure you that there is no superior service in the world to that to which you have been fortunate enough to be appointed. It holds out the brightest prospects to a young man entering public life, and I hesitate not to say that it will be your own fault if those prospects are blighted. There are, however, some qualifications absolutely necessary for you to possess, and which I will briefly state to you. First, a competent knowledge of two native languages. Now, not only has the foundation of that knowledge been laid here, but I trust also a considerable degree of proficiency has been attained,—and if you sedulously employ the time that must elapse before you arrive at the several presidencies to which you may be stationed, in cultivating that study and increasing the knowledge you already possess, the advantage that will follow from this course, will be your early qualification for the public service. As regards your conduct towards the natives,—in whatever department of government you may be employed, you will find there many natives distinguished for ability, talent, and integrity. Treat them with confidence, and do not hurt their feelings by any open or avowed contempt of their religion, or habits. Act towards them at all times with consideration and indulgence, and you will most certainly reap your reward by their fidelity and attachment, and by good service in many important matters, in which you may find it necessary to have their assistance. Who amongst you I would ask, in leaving your native country, relations, and friends, do not fondly cherish the hope, that the day will arrive when you may return to it, and to them, in health and independence. (Hear, hear.) Permit me to suggest and recommend to you the means most likely to insure this. Keep yourselves free from debt. Your allowances will be liberal, and more than sufficient for your necessary expenses, even on your first entering the service. You will have no excuse, therefore, for incurring debt, or pity should you be involved in pecuniary difficulty. Debt will destroy your independence, and may prove fatal to your honour and character; avoid it, therefore, as an evil greatly to be dreaded, and sure to be attended with lamentable consequences. Next I have to recommend to you, moderation in your mode of living, and a reasonable economy in your expenditure. The first is necessary for the preservation of your health, and when united to the last will give you the best chance, after an honourable and useful career in the service, of returning to your native land healthy, wealthy, and respected by all who know you. In conclusion, never forget that you are Christians. Act up to the precepts of our holy religion. Be benevolent, charitable, forgiving, and forbearing. Neglect not your religious duties, and under all and any circumstances, have a firm reliance on the mercy and goodness of the Almighty, vouchsafed to you through the merits and suffering of our blessed Redeemer. Farewell,—and may health and happiness be your portion.— (Continued applause.)

The Directors and company then left the examination hall, and at a quarter before two o'clock reassembled in the library, where a sumptuous luncheon was served. Sir James Law Lushington occupied the chair, and was supported on his right by the Rev. the principal, and on his left by the Right Hon. Lord Campbell.

At the close of the repast,

The Chairman rose and said, he could not leave the place without proposing the health of the principal and professors, to whose exertions the satisfactory state of the college was in an eminent degree attributable. He would propose "The health of the principal and professors, and prosperity to the college." (Loud cheers.)

The Rev. the Principal said—It would, he thought, be felt as presumptuous in him, speaking whether for himself alone, or for himself conjointly with the professors of the college, were he to receive, as only what was due to their endeavours, the kind expressions which had just been employed. He would rather frankly confess that it must be to their generous estimate, rather than to their own actual deserts, that they were indebted for such manifestations of good-will. And yet, if what they wished to signify were their sense of the admirable and satisfactory condition of the college, he could not say that there would necessarily be anything at all over-charged in their expressions. (Hear, hear.) For, in the diligent prosecution of studies more varied and extensive than were pursued in other places, and in cheerful submission to a discipline far more rigid and searching, he could fearlessly assert the excellence, the eminence, of their students. Whilst the universities of the land were only now enlarging their course of education, they had here been long traversing various fields of knowledge; whilst in the important particulars of moral training, they were here able to apply a minuteness of inspection, and a continuousness of care, which could hardly be attempted at Oxford and Cambridge. (Cheers.) These truths, these facts, were the great ramparts of the college. He had, indeed, heard that the college had, or at least had had, its enemies. But he thought he knew how enmity might be disarmed. They must continue to show the great majority of the students—rich in intellectual acquirements, high in moral principle, exemplary in good order; then enmity, if it were honest, must die; if it survived, he, for one, might lament its existence, but certainly he should not dread its power. (Cheers.) The civil service of India could hardly fail to flourish, whilst recruited from such a body as that over which he had now the honour to preside. And the importance of the civil service could not be over-rated. He ascribed, indeed, its due meed to the military service. He even knew that the camp often furnished most efficient men for the avocations of peace. Witness the instance before them. The Crown and the country had placed the insignia of high martial distinction on the breasts of those who were now the chairman and deputy-chairman of the East-India Company. (Cheers.) He ascribed, therefore, its due meed to the military service; and he prayed that full success might attend their brave army in the new enterprises to which they were summoned, that glorious victory might crown their gallant endeavours. But when the soldier's work was done, the civilian must step forward, to develop a country's resources, to administer justice, to advance civilization. (Cheers.) He could only say for himself and the professors, that they would do their best towards training men worthy of so high and honourable an employment. And, not to detain them longer, he would assure them, in conclusion, that the special kindness, which had been exhibited on this occasion, towards the authorities of the college, would stimulate them to increased exertions at perfecting the institution committed to their care. (Cheers.)

The Chairman said, there was one more toast which he must submit to the company. They were this day honoured with the presence of a distinguished nobleman, whose son was in this institution. He entertained no doubt that that son, when he proceeded to India, would justify the high character which he had maintained here, and which was honourable alike to himself and his distinguished father. He begged to propose the health of Lord Campbell. (Cheers.)

Lord Campbell said he felt deeply grateful for the honour which had just been done him, and he assured the chairman and the company that he should bear in his mind to the last hour of his life, the interesting day that he had spent at Haileybury College. (Cheers.)

The Chairman then vacated the chair, and the company separated, the visitors returning to town.

The days appointed for receiving the petitions of the candidates for admission into the College next term, are Friday, the 29th of December (instant), and Wednesday, the 3rd of January, 1840. The examination of the candidates will be held at the East-India House, on the 11th of January, and two following days.

The examiners appointed are—the Rev. Thomas Dale, M.A.; the Rev. Robert Eden, M.A.; and the Rev. William Stone, M.A.

The next term will commence on Friday, the 19th of January, and the students must return to college on or before Tuesday, the 23rd of January.

The Gyandarpun, a Bengalee paper, declares that, despite all the attacks that have been made upon the British rule, it is the most just in India, and advises those who assail it, to try the effect of a sojourn in any of the native states around.

Landscape Drawing Department.—Many very beautiful paintings in water-colours on a large scale were exhibited, comprising landscape, figures, marine views, &c. The first prize in this department was given to Gentleman Cadet J. A. Ballard, of the first class; but many others, by Gentlemen Cadets T. N. Harward, J. McInnes, T. E. Gahagan, G. T. Chesney, A. H. Bogle, J. Mullins, F. H. McLeod, F. H. Turnbull, A. Davidson, G. J. Reeves, H. J. Evans, &c. (all of the first class), evince a great degree of talent and care. Other drawings of the second class, by Gentlemen Cadets L. Donaldson, E. R. Blagrove, T. E. Hughes, H. Murray, J. R. Martin, and R. E. T. Cotgrave, displayed proofs of great improvement. The second prize was awarded to Gentleman Cadet L. Donaldson. The lithographic specimens were very creditable.

Hindustani.—In order to obtain the full number of good marks at the general examinations, which were conducted wholly in writing, proper answers were to be given to the questions contained in six papers. These were issued in succession, and no reference was permitted to a grammar or dictionary.

The 1st paper contained questions on Grammar, &c. 2nd paper,—Extracts from sixty pages of the first volume of Mr. Shakespear's Selections, in the Persian character, to be translated into English; and some words to be parsed. 3rd paper,—Extracts from thirty pages in the Nāgarī character, to be translated into English, with parsing; also, questions to be answered, alternately, in the Persian and Nāgarī characters, from twenty-five pages of dialogue. 4th paper,—Extracts from about thirty pages of the more difficult portion of the Selections, to be translated into English; some parsing. 5th paper,—Extracts from twenty-five pages, part in the Persian and part in the Nāgarī character, in the second volume of Selections, to be translated into English. 6th paper,—A story in English, containing fourteen or fifteen lines, to be translated into Hindustānī, and written in both Persian and Nāgarī characters.

The foregoing represents the work to be done at the general examinations of the whole seminary. Subsequent to these, the Gentlemen Cadets of the first class, or fourth term, and a portion of the second class, or third term, underwent a similar examination, but carried on, vis à vis, by Professor Wilson, the Oriental examiner. An exercise, comprising fourteen lines in English, was translated in his presence into Hindustānī, without the help of a dictionary or grammar, and written in the Persian and part in Nāgarī characters. At the close of the day's business, a number of specimens were taken by the Oriental examiner to town, without correction, as received from the Cadets, and are now in his possession. In short, the examination extended over one hundred and fifty pages of Mr. Shakespear's volumes of Selections, in the Persian and Nāgarī characters, besides twenty-five pages of dialogue, and a translation from English into Hindustānī, written in both Nāgarī and Persian characters.

After the reports of the Public Examiner and the Lieut.-Governor had been read by Mr. Thos. R. Clarke, the Chairman addressed the Cadets as follows:—

"Gentlemen Cadets,—It is with the most sincere regret that, on this occasion, the last on which I shall ever address you from this chair, I am unable to express myself with that perfect approbation of and satisfaction at your conduct I have hitherto always been enabled to do. It is not my intention or wish to enter into any details of the circumstances which have caused this dissatisfaction;—you are all well acquainted with them, and with the consequence to several of your number, which has been the marked and severe displeasure of the Court of Directors, for disobedience of positive orders, followed up by a disgraceful and unmanly assault on an unoffending member of your body. On this painful subject I will only further say, that the Court are firmly determined to punish with the utmost severity any attempt to revive the practice of fagging at this institution, which is utterly opposed to the first principle of military usage and of gentlemanly demeanour. It is, however, gratifying to learn by the Report of the Lieut. Governor that, since the interruption which the tranquillity of the seminary experienced at the commencement of the present term, you have fully supported your usual character for honourable conduct and strict conformity to the regulations, and I trust I am justified in entertaining the hope that we shall never again have the pain of witnessing the recurrence of any similar breach of good order to that to which I have alluded.

"The favourable reports of the public examiner of the proceedings, and the result of this day's examination, must have proved most acceptable and pleasing to those of my colleagues who are present, and equally to the distinguished individuals who have favoured us with their company. You must all feel greatly indebted to the attention, care, and guidance which have been bestowed upon you by the public examiner, lieut. governor, officers, professors, and masters; and I hesitate not to express the acknowledgment of the Court of Directors to those gentlemen for their continued and well-directed exertions.

"You, Gentlemen Cadets, who will return here after the vacation, I entreat to reflect seriously on what I have already said to you, and the consequences will be to your advantage. I must ever feel the warmest interest in the welfare of a service to which I owe all of honour, rank, and independence I possess; and it is this feeling and this conviction which urge me to offer to your acceptance, my young friends, who are about proceeding to your destination, a few friendly observations in the nature of advice.

"In the performance of your military duty, endeavour, by punctuality, activity, and cheerful obedience, to satisfy your commanding officer that you are worthy of his approbation and confidence. In your conduct towards the sepoy, whose courage and fidelity have stood the test of many actions and many temptations, be kind and indulgent, as regards their religion and habits, and you may rely on their devoted attachment. But there is one thing necessary to produce this good,—a knowledge of the native language. Indeed, so forcibly is the Court of Directors impressed with the absolute necessity that their officers should possess this knowledge, that without it you can neither hope nor expect to be appointed to any staff situation, regulations having been made to that effect.

"Finally, I most earnestly advise you to be moderate and temperate in your mode of living, and economical in your expenditure. If you adopt these recommendations, you have the best possible chance, under Divine Providence, of ultimate retirement from the service with an unbroken constitution and perfect independence.

In bidding you an affectionate farewell, I most sincerely wish you, one and all, health and happiness.

MISCELLANEOUS.

EXAMINATION OF THE DEAD SEA.—The Courier de Constantinople publishes some interesting facts observed in a recent expedition by Capt. Lynch, and some of his officers, of the United States' brig Supply, with the permission of the Ottoman Government, to explore the lake Tiberias, or Sea of Galilee, and the Dead Sea. The expedition was composed of fifteen persons, in two metal boats, one of copper, the other of iron, which were conveyed by land, on carts, from St. Jean D'Acre, forty miles: On the 8th April last, the two boats were launched on the Sea. The navigation of the Jordan was very difficult and dangerous, on account of the rapid currents, twenty-seven "dreadful rapids" occurring between Lake Tiberias and the Dead Sea, the difference of the level between the two being 2,000 feet. The water of the Dead Sea is without smell, but bitter, salt, and disgusting to the taste. On the arrival of the expedition at the southern extremity of the Sea, on passing the mountain of Sodom, a large column was observed to the S.E., in the shape of a funnel, which was found to be composed of solid rock salt, and covered by carbonate of calcium. The expedition made the complete tour of the Dead Sea, and ascertained the following facts:—The bottom of the northern part of the Dead Sea is almost a flat. The meridional lines, at a short distance from the shore, vary but little in depth; the greatest depth found was 1,128 feet. Near the shore the bottom is generally a saline incrustation, but the intermediate portion is of soft mud, with rectangular crystals—most frequently cubes of pure salt. In the same proportion that the north part of the Dead Sea is deep, so is the southern part shallow, to the extent that for a quarter of its length the depth was found to be but 15 feet. Its southern bed presented no crystallizations. The shores in face of the peninsula, and its western side, present evident marks of destruction. Birds and insects are to be found on the shore, and sometimes ducks on the sea, for they saw some, but they could find no living object in this sea. "I feel certain," says Capt. Lynch, "that the result of our expedition will confirm to the very letter the history of the Holy Land, as regards the sunken cities."

THE LE BAS PRIZE.—Cambridge, Dec. 15.—A sum, amounting to about 1,920*l.*, Three per Cent. Consols, having been accepted by the University for the purpose of founding an annual prize, consisting of the interest of the above-mentioned fund, to be called the Le Bas Prize, for the best English essay on a subject of general literature, such subject to be occasionally chosen with reference to the history, institutions, and probable destinies and prospects of the Anglo-Indian empire:—The examiners have this day issued notice that the subject for the first prize is—"The Historical and Chronological Determination of the Extent, Duration, and Succession of the several Principalities established in Bactria, and on the Confines of India, by Greek Princes after Alexander's Invasion of India." Candidates for the prize must be, at the time when the subject is given out, Bachelors of Arts under the standing of M.A., or students in Civil Law or Medicine of not less than four or more than seven years' standing; not being graduates in either faculty, but having kept the exercises necessary for the degree of Bachelor of Law or Medicine. The essays must be sent in to the Vice-Chancellor before the end of the Easter Term, 1849, each bearing some motto, and accompanied by a sealed paper, bearing the same motto, and enclosing the name of the candidate, and that of his college. The successful candidate is required to publish the essay at his own expense.

H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS, &c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavour to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the utmost despatch will be used in the shipments from London.

H. and T. Peat feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are not of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior qualities. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12 lb. saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9 lbs., at present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. P. cannot be accountable for any damage the same may receive after shipment.

THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 10th of May, 1848, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premiums.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20	On or before 10th of May, 1843.	£1,000	£19 6 8	£11 2 4

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in these Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needed), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote Emigration, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CARLIN-PASSENGER OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 63 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at St. George's CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

WORKS USEFUL TO CADETS & OTHERS PROCEEDING TO INDIA,

SOLD BY

WILLIAM H. ALLEN AND CO., 7, LEADENHALL STREET,

BOOKSELLERS TO THE HON. EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

A DICTIONARY, HINDUSTANI & ENGLISH: to which is added a reversed part, ENGLISH & HINDUSTANI. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D., Professor of Oriental Languages in King's College, London; Member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the Asiatic Society of Paris; and author of several works on the Hindustani and Persian Languages. Royal 8vo. £2. 12s. 6d.

"* This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

"Dr. Forbes, by his Grammars and other works on the Hindustani and Persian Languages, has heretofore conferred an invaluable boon on all the students of Oriental literature; but this Dictionary crowns the series of his magnus opus, for a great work we have no hesitation in pronouncing it, whether we regard its vast utility to the learner, or consider the immense amount of labour and practical skill brought to bear upon it by the author."—Calcutta Review, No. 19.

GRAMMAR of the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE, in the Oriental and Roman Characters, with numerous copper-plate illustrations of the Persian and Devanagari Systems of Alphabetic Writings. To which is added, a copious Selection of Easy Extracts for reading in the Persian and Devanagari Characters, forming a complete introduction to the Bagh-o-Bahar, together with a Vocabulary and explanatory Notes. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D. 8vo. cloth lettered, 12s.

The BAGH-O-BAHAR; consisting of entertaining Tales in the Hindustani Language. A new edition, carefully collated with original MSS., having the essential vowel points and punctuation marked throughout. To which is added, a Vocabulary of the Words occurring in the work. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D. Royal 8vo. cloth, 15s.

"* The Bagh-o-Bahar is the best-book in which cadets and assistant-surgeons have to pass an examination in India. This edition has been prepared under the authority of the Hon. the East-India Company.

HINDUSTANI MANUAL; a Pocket Companion for those who visit India in any capacity; intended to facilitate the essential attainments of conversing with fluency; and composing with accuracy, in the most useful of all the languages spoken in our Eastern Empire.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

Second Edition, considerably improved. 18mo. bound, 5s. 6d.

"This work can be honestly recommended to all who are desirous of acquiring the elements of the Hindustani language, or of making themselves understood among the people of this country. We have seldom, if ever, seen such a small pocket-companion with such a variety of useful instruction. The language of the Vocabulary and of the Dialogues appears quite unexceptionable. Any one acquainted with Hindustani will at once recognize its idiomatic accuracy, and cheerfully recommend it to the notice of all those who desire to come to India not altogether unprepared to convey their own wishes to those who surround them."—Friend of India, published at Serampore.

The HINDUSTANI READER, adapted for Beginners; with a copious Vocabulary and explanatory Notes. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D. Royal 8vo. 3s. 6d.

The BRITISH WORLD in the EAST; a Guide, Historical, Moral, and Commercial, to India, China, Australia, South Africa, and the other possessions or connections of Great Britain in the Eastern and Southern Seas. By LEIPOLD RUTCHIE. 2 vols. 8vo. cloth lettered, £1. 4s.

"It is the best introduction with which we are acquainted to a more minute and extensive study of Eastern history."—Atlas.

"The title of the book will shew its comprehensive character, and those who wish to have an Encyclopedia of Information on Eastern and Southern history, government, literature, manners, productions (natural and industrial), commerce, everything, in fact, but physical science, and not without a good deal even on that,—will here find what they require. It is a condensation of the contents of multifarious volumes, and may justly be termed many things in few words. If read, it will impart to the student nearly all that is known on the subject to which it relates, and afford him, without much entertainment, if kept as a book of reference, few questions relating to Eastern affairs can arise for which it will not furnish a complete answer."—Indian Mail.

HISTORY of the PUNJAB, and of the Rise, Progress, and Present Condition of the Sect and Nation of the Sikhs; including a full Account of the Military Operations on the Banks of the Sutlej in 1846, and the Proclamations and Treaties of the Governor-General of India relating thereto. By THOMAS THORNTON, Esq. 2 vols. post 8vo. cloth, £1. 1s.

"This work gives all the information on the history and topography of the Punjab that could be desired; and in the fulness and completeness of its details, and the diligence with which information has been collected, from every available source, constitutes this the best and most authentic work extant on the important country of which it treats."—Britannia.

The EAST-INDIA GAZETTEER, containing particular Descriptions of the principal Places in Hindostan and the adjacent Countries. With Sketches of the Manners, Customs, &c., of their Inhabitants. By WALTER HAMILTON. 2nd edition. 2 vols. 8vo. cloth, £1. 12s.

"A valuable and excellent work."—Times.

STOCQUELER'S HAND-BOOK of INDIA; a Guide to the Stranger and Traveller, and a Companion to the Resident. 2nd edition. Post 8vo. 14s.

"* This publication embraces, in a condensed form, complete and accurate information respecting the topography, climate, government, commerce, laws, institutions, and products of India; the manners and customs of the inhabitants; the method of travelling throughout the empire, and the expense attendant thereon; the condition of the European (English) society; the rules and regulations of the various branches of the executive; the cost and manner of proceeding to India; the sports, ceremonies, and pageants common to the country, &c. &c.

"There can be no hesitation in saying that the plan and execution of this Hand-Book are equally excellent; that it is the most complete and accurate Vade-Mecum which has yet appeared, and cannot fail to be both interesting and useful to all those whom business or pleasure may send to India."—Friend of India, published at Serampore.

People of all classes will find something in it applicable to their particular circumstances and position; and to individuals connected with the military or civil service it will be especially valuable. The medical hints are thoroughly practical, and the notes upon climate and diet cannot be too earnestly recommended to the attention of all our countrymen in the East."—Atlas.
